"The assessment appears to be in strict accordance with the survey made and delivered to the distillers, and accepted and operated under by them during the time they were in operation in June, 1875. The survey is binding on the distiller from the date of its delivery until he ceases to operate under it; and he must account for the capacity as fixed by it, unless he can show that it is excessive by reason of clerical errors either in computation or measurement."

The Commissioner, however, has suspended temporarily the enforcement of the tax to enable the parties to apply to Congress for relief.

In a letter of date February 4, 1879, to Hon. Charles Foster, then a member of this House, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in speaking of this claim, says: "The survey was evidently rated too high."

And in the same letter he further says:

"In the survey under which they operated in June, 1875, they were required to make nine boilings in twenty-four hours, and to account for a gallon of brandy from every 5.30 gallons of sour wine allowed to be used."

"While these requirements were quite uniform in the tenth district of Ohio, they exceed the requirements in other districts. It would be more in harmony with the surveys in other districts if the number of boilings were reduced to seven and the quantity of sour wine required for a gallon of spirits increased to seven gallons. If the survey had been so made, the daily producing capacity for sour wine would be 219.97 gallons instead of 373.53 gallons."

"The distillery operated during the month fifty-one hours, but during the last six hours of the time the reports show they only operated one small still. The capacity of this still under the survey was 86.82 gallons, while under the reduction referred to above it would be only 51.13 gallons. If they had given the proper notice to reduce capacity when they ceased using all but the small still, they would have been chargeable for two days at full capacity and one day on the capacity of the small still. The capacity as thus reduced would be as follows:

|--|--------------------|
| Capacity, 219.97 gallons per day, for two days..... | Gallons. 439.94 |
| Add the capacity of the small still for one day..... | 51.13 |
| Total capacity..... | 491.07 |
| Eighty per cent. of 491.07..... | 392.85 |
| Subtract the actual product..... | 248.28 |
| Deficiency..... | 144.57 |

Taxes on 144.57, at 90 cents.....$130.11

"The difference between the amount assessed, $583.37, and the amount found due under the above changes in the survey and its capacity is $453.26."

As to the remainder of said tax, the Commissioner further says: "I see no reason for granting relief from the $121.50 which resulted from the distiller's own neglect to file a notice of reduction of capacity that would not apply with equal force to all assessments of that kind against any and all other distillers."

We are satisfied that the said survey was erroneous in its estimate of the capacity of the distillery, in the number of gallons of sour wine required to produce one gallon of proof brandy, and also in the number of boilings capable of being made in twenty-four hours, and that the said tax on the deficiency thus arising from such erroneous survey should be corrected as suggested in the foregoing extracts from the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

We therefore recommend the abatement of $461.87 of said tax, as being erroneously assessed, and to that end we report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that under the circumstances I must call for the regular order. The bill may be all right, but this is an unfavorable time to legislate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill which has been read?

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. That is equivalent to an objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to waive his call for the regular order for one moment. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] withdraws his objection to the bill in relation to the tax on perique tobacco, and I now renew the request for unanimous consent for its consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER. The call for the regular order cuts off all requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. ELLIS. I understand the gentleman from Indiana waives that call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so understand.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for on all sides.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the regular order is called for I desire to make a privileged report.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen will state it.

Mr. WHITE. During my absence this morning my colleague [Mr. WILLIS] made a personal allusion to me, in reply to which I desire to say but a word. I find from the report for the RECORD that he made this remark in relation to me:

He has retained them—

Referring to the notes of my speech—

He has retained them for about four weeks; and yesterday I find in the RECORD four columns of matter not one line of which was uttered on the floor of the House and not one word of which is authorized under the rules.

I desire to say to the House that I retained my notes in accordance with the usual custom of members of the House, and for the further reason that for more than a month past my eye-sight has been seriously impaired. In regard to the statement that there are four columns in the speech not one word of which was delivered on the floor, I desire to say that is not true.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman state how much was delivered, to gratify a reasonable literary curiosity?

Mr. WHITE. If it were true, it would be nothing unusual in this House for a man to have a speech published which is not delivered. I believe that is the universal custom.

Mr. WILLIS. Not when there is personal matter in it.

Mr. WHITE. In regard to the personal matter in that speech, I want to say that I made no personal allusions whatever in it, except so far as they were matter of political history, and any one who will examine that speech will say so. Beyond that I have nothing whatever to say.

DOCUMENTS FOR USE OF CONGRESS.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. R. No. 171) to provide for the printing of certain public documents for the use of the two Houses of Congress.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That section 3798 of the Revised Statutes shall be amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 3798. Of the documents named in this section there shall be printed and bound, in addition to the usual number for Congress, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, namely:

"First. The documents accompanying the annual reports of the Executive Departments.

"Second. The President's message, the annual reports of the Executive Departments, and the abridgment of accompanying documents.

"Third. Papers relating to foreign affairs accompanying the annual message of the President.

"Fourth. The 'Commercial Relations,' annually prepared under the direction of the State Department.

"Fifth. The annual report on the statistics of commerce and navigation, exports and imports, merchandise in transit, manufacturers, and registered and enrolled vessels, prepared by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics.

"Sixth. The public journals of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, 1,550 copies."

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will make some explanation of this resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

Mr. SPRINGER. The report will explain the matter.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred House joint resolution 171, to provide for printing certain public documents for the use of the two Houses of Congress, having had the same under consideration, have instructed me to report the same back with a recommendation that it do pass.

The object of this joint resolution is the reduction in the number and expense of printing of certain public documents which are now printed by virtue of section 3798 of the Revised Statutes. If it should pass, the reduction would be as follows:

| Documents. | Reduction in number. | Reduction in expense. |
|--|----------------------|-----------------------|
| The abridgment of messages and documents | 32,000 | $20,480 |
| Papers relating to foreign affairs | 3,000 | 3,570 |
| Commercial Relations | 2,000 | 5,338 |
| Commerce and Navigation | 5,150 | 7,349 |
| Total | 42,150 | 36,737 |

Your committee are of the opinion that the reduction in the number of such documents would in no way deprive those of the use of such documents who desire them for useful purposes. The great reduction in expense, amounting to $36,737 per annum, is worthy of consideration in view of the increasing expense of public printing.

For these reasons the committee recommend the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. Members of the House have so often criticised the Committee on Printing in reference to the ordering of public documents that I hope no one will throw any obstruction in the way of this proposition reducing expenditures in that direction. The resolution proposes a saving of more than $36,000 a year.

Mr. RANDALL. I only wish it cut a little deeper.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PEELE. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6444) to fix the compensation of certain employes in the Government Printing Office and repealing all laws in connection therewith.

Mr. KNOTT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour for the presentation of reports of committees.

Mr. TUCKER. I move that the morning hour be dispensed with.

Mr. HUBBELL. Oh, no; we want to present some adverse reports. The motion of Mr. TUCKER was not agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

The SPEAKER. The committees will be called for the presentation of reports.

Mr. HUBBELL, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

- A bill (H. R. No. 6058) for the relief of L. C. Camp;
- A bill (H. R. No. 6056) for the relief of Newman & Tatham;
- A bill (H. R. No. 6057) for the relief of P. B. Tatham; and
- A bill (H. R. No. 6059) for the relief of S. D. Plennmons.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. REED. I desire to present a report from the Committee on the Judiciary in regard to the Texas Pacific Railroad. I have not the document with me at this moment; it is being copied, and if the House has no objection I will file it as soon as it is ready.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. HUBBELL.) If there be no objection, the gentleman will be allowed to file the report when copied. The Chair hears no objection. What order does the gentleman ask?

Mr. KNOTT. On behalf of several members of the committee, I desire to submit in connection with this report some individual views to be printed along with it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the views of the minority will be presented, to be printed with the report of the committee.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the resolution accompanying the report be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] states that the report is being copied and will be presented hereafter.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the resolution, I presume, is here.

Mr. REED. The resolution also is being copied. It could not at any rate be read under the present order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then it cannot be received.

A MEMBER. Let it be printed.

Mr. REED. Certainly; it will be printed as a part of the report.

Mr. RANDALL. My neighbor suggests to me to ask that the report be presented hereafter, and that the House give consent to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. REED. That cannot be done under this rule. This is a presentation of the report in ordinary form under the rule. All I ask is that I may make manual transmission of the report hereafter.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that the gentleman be allowed to call it up for consideration to-morrow.

Mr. REED. That cannot be done. That is not proper, because the report has not been printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot entertain that request during this hour.

Mr. RANDALL. Unanimous consent can be asked.

Mr. REED. Unanimous consent has never been asked in this hour.

Mr. ELLIS. I object, until I know what it is.

Mr. RANDALL. It is the forfeiture of 14,000,000 acres of land, granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad, a quasi Pennsylvania corporation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Nearly 18,000,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What has become of the resolution reported by the gentleman from Maine?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman informed the Chair that the report and resolution were being copied, and asked unanimous consent to file the same as soon as copied.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And that the resolution go on the Calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was the understanding.

Mr. REED. That will be done under the rule. I have stated that I merely wish to make manual transmission of this report hereafter instead of now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That is right, of course. I only wished to understand the status of the resolution. I understand it will go to the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will take the same course as though it were presented now.

Mr. COX, of New York. When will it come up for consideration? We want to consider it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will come up in its order. Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It can be called up at any time by unanimous consent.

Mr. COX, of New York. We ask unanimous consent to take it up to-morrow.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] has objected.

The resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 286) to declare the forfeiture of lands granted the Texas Pacific Railroad Company under act of March 3, 1871, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto.

Resolved, &c., That all lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company under the act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, be, and they are hereby, declared forfeited, and that the whole of said lands be restored to the public domain and made subject to sale and settlement under existing laws of the United States.

THOMAS M. GRANVILLE.

Mr. HARDY. I am directed by the Committee on Accounts to report back the following resolution with a substitute:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives to the Clerk of the House the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the funeral and other expenses contracted by the sickness and death of Thomas M. Granville, late an employé in the House folding-room; and there shall also be paid out of the contingent fund of the House by the Clerk of the House to the widow of the deceased three months' pay from the date of his death, subject to the approval of the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of said deceased $300 to pay the funeral expenses contracted by the sickness and death of her husband; and there shall also be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of the deceased three months' pay from the date of his death.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution does not state the name of the deceased.

Mr. HARDY. Let the name be inserted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The substitute as modified was agreed to; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. HARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DUTIES ON MANUFACTURES OF TIN.

Mr. ERRETT, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2103) in relation to the duties on the manufactures of tin, and for other purposes, with amendments; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

LOUIS A. VAN HOFFMAN & CO.

Mr. BARBOUR. I ask by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 595) for the relief of Louis A. Van Hoffman and William A. Mertens, under the firm-name of L. Van Hoffman & Co., and William H. Newman.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to that bill.

HEIRS OF MAJOR D. C. SMITH.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5740) for the relief of the heirs of Major D. C. Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the heirs and bondsmen of Major D. C. Smith, late an assistant paymaster in the United States Army, are hereby relieved from the payment of the sum of $166.29, and the interest thereon, as appears due upon settlement of his accounts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and Mr. WASHBURN's motion was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

Mr. WASHBURN. It has been unanimously reported from the Judiciary Committee. It passed the Senate two or three times. There is a long favorable report by Senator COCKRELL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think the item of interest ought to be paid. It is trifling, but the principle is a very dangerous one.

The SPEAKER. The bill is on its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman will not object to striking off the interest. The amount is trifling, but it establishes a very dangerous precedent.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 2.

Mr. HOLMAN. All I am objecting to is the item of interest.

Mr. WASHBURN. The total amount is only $166. This is the case of a paymaster who was shot at Pittsburgh Landing. The report is complete. It has passed two or three times. I do not know exactly how much the interest is.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the principle is an important one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is passed.

Mr. WASHBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. DIBRELL. I move that by unanimous consent the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6183) for the payment of certain awards in favor of parties therein named.

The bill was read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object.

Mr. DIBRELL. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on War Claims. A similar bill passed last Congress, and this is a bill reported by Mr. RANNEY from the Committee on War Claims. The documents and records are all on file.

Mr. HOLMAN. Although a member of the committee reporting this bill, I shall have to object to it because I am not willing to recognize that commission as one that can bind the action of the Government. It has never been so recognized before.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

TRANSPORTATION OF MAILS ON STAR ROUTES.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6339) repealing section 3961 of the Revised Statutes and the proviso of section 2 of the act providing for a deficiency in the appropriation for the transportation of mails on the star routes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That whenever it shall become necessary to increase the speed upon which the mail is carried under contract on any post-route, the service shall be readvertised for the shorter schedule required: Provided, That the contractor shall have the option of continuing service on the expedited schedule without additional compensation therefor. And section 3961 of the Revised Statutes, and the proviso of section 2 of the act providing for a deficiency in the appropriation for the transportation of the mails on star routes, approved April 7, 1880, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would state for the information of the House that this is one of the bills ordered to be considered during the day fixed for the consideration of bills designated by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I supposed it had passed. It is a Department bill. I was in ignorance of its non-passage until this morning, when I received from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General a letter calling my attention to that fact.

The purpose of the bill is to repeal section 3961 of the Revised Statutes, which states—

Compensation for additional service in carrying the mail shall not be in excess of the exact proportion which the original compensation bears to the original service; and when any such additional service is ordered, the sum to be allowed therefor shall be expressed in the order and entered upon the books of the Department, and no compensation shall be paid for any additional regular service rendered before the issuing of such order.

No extra allowance shall be made for any increase of expedition in carrying the mail unless thereby the employment of additional stock and carriers is made necessary, and in such case the additional compensation shall bear no greater proportion to the additional stock and carriers necessarily employed than the compensation in the original contract bears to the stock and carriers necessarily employed in its execution.

That is the old law. That is the law under which the expedition which has been so much criticised was carried out.

Mr. HASKELL. That was amended.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir; that law was amended.

Mr. HASKELL. I shall have to object to the bill anyhow.

Mr. BINGHAM. Allow me to finish my statement.

Section 2 of the act of 1880 reads as follows:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall not hereafter have the power to expedite the service under any contract, either now existing or hereafter given, to a rate of pay exceeding 50 per cent. upon the contract as originally let.

The Department has no desire to have this discretion. Should a route be expedited the tender is first to the party having the contract to carry the expedited mail at the old rate of contract. Should he not desire to accept that proposition from the Department, then the route as expedited is to be readvertised. This takes all discretion out of the hands of the Department and allows the old contractor to carry the expedited mail at the old rate. But should he refuse, then it is provided that the route may be readvertised. It is in the interest of a better service and in the interest of a more honest service, and opens to competition the expedition of every route.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HASKELL. There is.

J. D. MORRISON.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask that by unanimous consent the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1786) for the relief of J. D. Morrison, surviving partner of C. M. & J. D. Morrison, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a report, I suppose, accompanying the bill. Let the report be read, the right to object being reserved.

The report was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HISCOCK. I object.

DEPUTY COLLECTOR AT SAN JUAN ISLAND

Mr. BRENTS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6103) authorizing the deputy collector of customs stationed at San Juan Island, in the Puget Sound district, to enter and clear vessels and collect duties.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the deputy collector of customs stationed at San Juan Island, in the Puget Sound district, in Washington Territory, is, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, empowered to enter and clear vessels and collect duties.

Mr. BRENTS. This bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Commerce to the Forty-sixth Congress, and also to this Congress; it has been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and was in fact introduced at his suggestion. It has the approval also of the collector of customs in the Puget Sound district. Its passage will save the creation of a new district. It will enable the officers to collect a great deal of revenue that would otherwise not come into the Treasury, and will prevent a great deal of smuggling over the line between the northern counties of Washington Territory and British Columbia. It does not increase expenses one dollar.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the House Calendar, and was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GEORGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERIQUE TOBACCO.

Mr. ELLIS. Objection has now been withdrawn to the bill I called up some time ago, the bill (S. No. 390) to amend section 3362 of the Revised Statutes. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has sent to the Clerk the House bill.

Mr. ELLIS. The House bill is the same as the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been already read.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I would like to hear the bill read again, reserving the right to object.

The bill was again read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill which has been read?

Mr. HEPBURN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

LABORERS ON LOWER FOX RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. GUENTHER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 3489) for the relief of certain laborers employed upon Government works.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the laborers who worked upon the Government improvements upon the Fox River, in the State of Wisconsin, under or employed by Day, Call & Co., (or sub-contractors under them,) late contractors with the Government in the improvement of the Lower Fox River, in the State of Wisconsin, the amount due each of such laborers, respectively, for work, labor, and services by them done and performed, respectively, upon and about said improvements as aforesaid, out of and from any moneys actually earned by said Day, Call & Co., (or sub-contractors under them,) under their said contract with the Government, or for work done and materials furnished by said Day, Call & Co., (or sub-contractors under them,) and which have not been paid for by the Government, and which may be withheld by the Government from the said Day, Call & Co. on their said contract as a forfeiture or otherwise: Provided, however, That if the amount thereof is not sufficient to pay in full the amount due to such laborers, respectively, then to pay said laborers pro rata. Such payments may be made after giving notice four weeks successively in some newspaper published in the county of Outagamie, Wisconsin, for such laborers to present and prove their claims: Provided further, That such payments be made in the State of Wisconsin by and through some engineer officer of the United States designated by the Secretary of War: And provided further, That no money shall be paid by virtue of the authority of this act except out of such sum or sums as in the opinion of the Secretary of War may be lawfully withheld from the assignee in bankruptcy of said Day, Call & Co., as a forfeiture under the terms and conditions of their said contract.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is intended to give to hundreds of poor laborers, men who have to earn their daily bread in the sweat of their brow, that which they are justly entitled to; nothing more. They do not ask for an appropriation out of the Treasury; they do not come to us as mendicants; they do not beg for mercy; they simply ask for justice. This Government is in possession of $7,135.01, which money has been earned by these laborers for work actually done on such Government work, and for which it has never paid. All they want is that sum.

If we consider how hard these poor men have to work for their scanty wages, that it frequently takes every cent to provide for the necessities of life, that the loss of a few dollars often subjects them to severe hardship—if you will bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that they have been kept out of their just dues for nearly seven years; that the money due them, when paid, as it should have been long ago, will send joy to hundreds of humble homes, we certainly should not now hesitate to pass this meritorious bill, of which the report of the committee says that justice and equity demand that the said sum so earned and unpaid be paid over to said laborers as provided in this bill.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Calendar, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GUENTHER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

H. C. HOOKER.

Mr. OURY. I ask consent to take from the Private Calendar for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 1883) for the relief of H. C. Hooker.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time?

Mr. CANNON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

OLEOMARGARINE, ETC.

Mr. SHERWIN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 4909) to regulate the exportation of articles made in imitation of butter and cheese.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time?

Mr. TUCKER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

WILLIAM H. DAVIS.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 3222) for the relief of William H. Davis.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time?

Mr. HISCOCK. I object.

Mr. PAGE. Do not object to that.

Mr. HISCOCK. I certainly do object.

Mr. PAGE. This bill has been reported by the Committee on Commerce, and is a just bill and ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

KIRK W. NOYES.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 5653) for the relief of Kirk W. Noyes.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I hold in my hand the report, but I can state the gist of it in a word or two. Mr. Noyes was commissioned first lieutenant in September, 1864, and assigned to duty. There was no vacancy until January 1, 1865, the party who was promoted so as to make the vacancy being sick, so that he could not be mustered in. He resigned January 1, 1865, but Noyes was then in prison, having been taken prisoner by the confederate forces, and did not return until May, 1865, when he was commissioned and mustered in. He asks pay as first lieutenant only from the 1st day of January, when the vacancy occurred. That is all.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] that a general bill passed the House some two months ago or more covering all this class of cases. Now, I submit to my friend that it would be far better to secure the passage of that general bill.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. That is true; but it may fail in the Senate, and I would prefer to have this bill passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill which has been read?

Mr. O'NEILL. If I were a selfish man, and acted as other men do in relation to matters of this sort, I might object, but I do not. [Laughter.]

Mr. CURTIN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIN. What was the date of that commission?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The commission was dated September, 1864, but the vacancy did not occur until January, 1865, and Noyes then being in prison did not return until May, 1865.

Mr. BOWMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question; or rather I will say to the gentleman that if he will promise not to object to all other private claims in the future, as I believe he has done in the past—

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I will not object to any that are as meritorious as this.

Mr. McKENZIE. I object.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Objection is too late, I think.

Mr. McKENZIE. It is not too late.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. All right.

Mr. McKENZIE. I rose in my place some minutes ago.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman then object?

Mr. McKENZIE. I did, as loudly as I could.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

APPLICATIONS FOR PENSIONS.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of House bill No. 3887, to extend the time allowed by paragraph 3 of section 4693 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to certain classes of applicants for pensions to complete their applications. The bill has been favorably reported from the Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has been read?

Mr. McMILLIN. I think a bill which changes a general law ought to have more deliberate consideration.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. McMILLIN. I do.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS.

Mr. BREWER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4674) to regulate commerce between the States pertaining to commercial travelers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That any person, acting in an individual capacity or as an officer of a State or municipal corporation, interfering in any way with any commercial traveler selling by sample goods, wares, and merchandise of any kind, traveling from another State other than the one in which said traveler lives or in which the manufacturer or merchant does business for which said traveler is acting, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be liable to indictment before the United States grand jury in the district in which the interference or assault occurs; and, if convicted, the said person or persons shall be liable to pay a fine not exceeding $100 and costs, or to three months' imprisonment in the county jail, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. MILLS, Mr. NEAL, and others objected.

JOHN G. ABERCROMBIE.

Mr. GUNTER. I ask unanimous consent to have considered at this time the bill (H. R. No. 28) for the relief of John G. Abercrombie.

The bill was read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object.

PRESIDENTIAL VETOES.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, introduced the following joint resolution (H. R. No. 287) proposing an amendment to the Constitution; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the foregoing article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, and when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution, namely:

"The President may disapprove any item or items of a bill appropriating money embracing distinct items; and the part of the bill approved shall be a law, and the item or items disapproved shall be void unless repassed according to the provisions and rules prescribed for the passage of bills over the Presidential veto."

CHARLES KORTZENBORN.

Mr. ATHERTON. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4926) for the relief of Charles Kortzenborn, and that it be now considered. It proposes simply to repay $125 for stamps purchased and not used, the repayment to be made upon condition of the stamps being returned for cancellation.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be paid to Charles Kortzenborn, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $125 for the redemption of certain internal-revenue stamps for a special tax which the said Kortzenborn purchased in the year 1875 and never used: Provided, That as a condition to such payment, and at the time the same shall be made, said stamps shall be delivered to the Treasury Department to be canceled.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there a report on this bill from the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. ATHERTON. It has been favorably reported from the Committee on Claims. It was discovered at the Treasury Department when application for relief in this case was made that the statutory limitation of two years had become operative. This is the only reason why the stamps have not already been redeemed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ATHERTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the House Calendar for present consideration House bill No. 1226, amending the law with reference to pleasure-yachts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House take a recess for one hour. By that time it is understood the sundry civil appropriation bill, with the Senate amendments, will be printed.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I ask the gentleman to withhold that motion till this bill has been considered. There will be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his motion?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir. Perhaps I am justifiable in inquiring whether it is known when the amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill will be printed and ready for the action of the House?

Mr. BROWNE. Why not adjourn?

Mr. COX, of New York. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] will explain when the amendments to the sundry civil bill can be taken up.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I trust the gentleman from Indiana will withdraw the motion for a recess, so that the bill I desire to call up may be considered. I know he is in favor of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House take a recess for one hour.

Mr. COX, of New York. And I have moved that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope that motion will be withdrawn.

Mr. COX, of New York. I withdraw it at the suggestion of my colleague.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to offer a joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana withdraw the motion for a recess?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

TEMPORARY APPROPRIATIONS FOR SUPPORT OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. HISCOCK, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Appropriations a joint resolution (H. R. No. 288) to continue the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;" which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the immediate consideration of this resolution.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government," approved June 30, 1882, be, and the same are hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect to and including the 5th day of August, 1882; and the provisions of a joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution authorizing the employment temporarily of certain employes of the War Department," approved July 12, 1882, are also hereby extended and continued in full force and effect to and including the 5th day of August, 1882.

Several MEMBERS. What is the extension proposed?

Mr. HISCOCK. This joint resolution extends the appropriations to the date fixed in the resolution for final adjournment as adopted to-day by the House.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that the sundry civil appropriation bill, with the amendments of the Senate thereto, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HOLMAN. What time will the Senate amendments to the sundry-civil bill be printed?

Mr. HISCOCK. They will be printed some time this afternoon, but what time exactly I do not know. I will now move the House adjourn. [Cries of "No!"] Very well, then; I will withdraw the motion for the present.

GEORGE ADAMSON.

Mr. PEELLE. I move by unanimous consent the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to George Adamson, a page of the House of Representatives, out of the contingent fund of the House, a sum equal to one month's pay of the said Adamson, he not being on the pages' roll on June 15, 1882.

It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, there was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] providing for the payment of one month's salary to the employes of the House. This little page was technically off the roll for the reason he had been suspended for about thirty days. He has since been restored to the roll and is now in the employ of the House and ought to be put on the same footing with the other employes.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. PEELLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PLEASURE YACHTS.

The SPEAKER. The House resumes the consideration of the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOWNSEND] to discharge the House Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1226) to amend section 4214 of the Revised Statutes, relating to yachts, and put the same on its passage. Pending objection the bill will now be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4214 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 4214. The Secretary of the Treasury may cause yachts used and employed exclusively as pleasure vessels, or designed as models of naval architecture, if built and owned in compliance with the provisions of sections 4133 to 4135, to be licensed on terms which will authorize them to proceed from port to port of the United States, and by sea to foreign ports, without entering or clearing at the custom-house. Such license shall be in such form as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. The owner of any such vessel, before taking out such license, shall give a bond in such form and for such amount as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, conditioned that the vessel shall not engage in any trade, nor in any way violate the revenue laws of the United States, and shall comply with the laws in all other respects. Such vessels, so enrolled and licensed, shall not be allowed to transport merchandise or carry passengers for pay. Such vessels shall have their name and port placed on some conspicuous portion of their hulls. Such vessels shall, in all respects, except as above, be subject to the laws of the United States, and shall be liable to seizure and forfeiture for any violation of the provisions of this title: Provided, That all charges for license and inspection fees for any pleasure vessel or yacht shall not exceed $5, and for admeasurement shall not exceed ten cents per ton."

SEC. 2. That the said original section 4214 be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the midst of the confusion in the House it is almost impossible to understand what is read. If there be a report accompanying this bill I hope it will be read.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. There is a report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1226) to amend section 4214 of the Revised Statutes, relating to yachts, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report:

That in the last session of the Forty-sixth Congress a letter was addressed to Hon. John Sherman, then Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing copy of House bill No. 4803, and asking his opinion as to the advisability of its passage. In reply he suggested certain amendments, and the bill was reported to the House incorporating those amendments. This bill (H. R. No. 1226) is an exact transcript of H. R. No. 4803, as then amended, and as reported favorably March 31, 1880. We submit herewith the Secretary's answer, and make it a part of this report.

The object of this bill is to reduce the charges for license and inspection fees for yachts used exclusively for purposes of pleasure. As this class of boats is very numerous, and some quite small, your committee see no reason why the charges fixed in this bill should not be ample and all that they should pay, believing that the increased number of yachts under its operation will yield to the Government just as much revenue as the present law and relieve them from what now appears to be excessive charges.

Your committee therefore recommend its passage.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 22, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th instant, transmitting for my consideration H. R. No. 4803, "A bill to amend section 4214 of the Revised Statutes, relating to yachts."

The present bill differs from the existing statute proposed for repeal chiefly in extending the privileges of license to yachts of less than twenty tons burden. The statute restricts such privileges to such vessels as might be entitled to be enrolled under existing laws, which permit enrollment in the technical sense of the statutes only to vessels of twenty tons burden and upward. There appears to be no sufficient reason for such a restriction, and in this respect I approve the bill.

The word "unlawful" should be stricken out in line 19, as no licensed yacht should be permitted to engage in any trade whatever.

I find the following proposed amendment in writing attached to the first section: "Provided, That all charges for license and inspection fees to each pleasure vessel or yacht shall not exceed $5."

For the proposed amendment I would substitute the following: "Provided, That all charges for license and inspection fees for any pleasure vessel or yacht shall not exceed $5, and for admeasurement shall not exceed ten cents per ton."

I would suggest this substitute for the reason that under existing statutes charges for admeasurement are more likely to be excessive than for license and inspection.

I return the bill herewith.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

Hon. AMOS TOWNSEND,

Chairman Sub-committee on Commerce,
House of Representatives.

The motion of Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN G. ABERCROMBIE.

Mr. GUNTER. I move that by unanimous consent the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 28) for the relief of John G. Abercrombie, and that the same be put on its passage as proposed to be amended by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read as it is proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John G. Abercrombie, of Benton County, Arkansas, the sum of $110, amount collected of him by the Government of the United States as a failing bidder on mail route numbered 28584, in the State of Missouri.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 28) for the relief of John G. Abercrombie, would respectfully report:

Under the advertisement of November 1, 1878, John G. Abercrombie, of Benton County, Arkansas, was an accepted bidder for route No. 28584, between Pineville, Missouri, and Sulphur Springs, Arkansas, at $51.75 per annum, and he was so notified. The contract and bond for him to execute were sent to the then postmaster at Sulphur Springs, who failed to inform Mr. Abercrombie of their receipt until ten days after the time had expired within which he was required to execute and return them. They were, however, upon the 10th day of June, 1879, being the day upon which he received them, promptly signed by Mr. Abercrombie and his sureties, and forwarded to the contract office, but too late, for he had already been declared a failing bidder, and the contract awarded to the next highest bidder, under whom Abercrombie afterward became a sub-contractor and satisfactorily performed the service.

Subsequently, to wit, on the 31st day of March, 1880, Abercrombie paid to the postmaster at Fayetteville, Arkansas, the sum of $110 as liquidated damages for failing to execute the said contract and bond within the time required by law.

Your committee believe that the said Abercrombie made the bid in good faith, and was guilty of no neglect, but was the victim of negligence on the part of the postmaster at Sulphur Springs, who was the agent of the Post-Office Department, and therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "one," in the eighth line, and inserting the word "eight," to correct an error in numbering the route, and that as so amended it do pass.

There was no objection, and the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from further consideration of the bill, and the bill as proposed to be amended by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GUNTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INSPECTORS OF HULLS AND BOILERS IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 843) amending section 4414 of the Revised Statutes, fixing the compensation of inspectors of hulls and boilers in the districts of Michigan and Superior, within the State of Michigan.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

FRANK C. ARMSTRONG.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, for present consideration, the bill (S. No. 2171) to remove the political disabilities of Frank C. Armstrong, of Maryland.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., (two-thirds of each House concurring.) That all the political disabilities imposed upon Frank C. Armstrong, of Maryland, by the fourteenth article of the Constitution of the United States, by reason of his participation in the rebellion, are hereby removed.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

KIRK W. NOYES.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCKENZIE] withdraws his objection to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5653) for the relief of Kirk W. Noyes.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection? The bill has already been read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that it be again read.

The bill was again read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Kirk W. Noyes, of Paw Paw, Van Buren County, Michigan, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the pay and allowances due said Kirk W. Noyes for services rendered the United States as first lieutenant of Company D, First Michigan Sharpshooters, from January 1, 1865, to May 1, 1865, deducting therefrom such compensation as he may have received during that period as first sergeant of said company.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to ask if that is not the bill that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCKENZIE] objected to?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I have stated that the gentleman from Kentucky has withdrawn his objection and has authorized me so to state.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRANNIN, SUMMERS & CO.

Mr. WILLIS. I call up for present consideration a bill which has been reported unanimously by five consecutive Ways and Means Committees. It is the bill (H. R. No. 522) for the relief of Brannin, Summers & Co.

The bill was read.

Mr. HUBBELL. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. HASKELL. The report is long and intricate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. FARWELL, of Iowa. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

AMERICAN SHIP-BUILDING AND SHIP-OWNING INTERESTS.

Mr. CANDLER. I desire to report back from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment the joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) providing for a joint select committee to inquire into the condition and wants of American ship-building and ship-owning interests.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That a joint select committee of three Senators and six Representatives be appointed to inquire into the condition and wants of American ship-building and ship-owning interests, and to investigate the causes of the decline of the American foreign carrying trade, and to suggest any remedies which may be applied by legislation. Said committee shall have authority to sit during the recess, and shall submit their report at the opening of the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress.

The following amendment was reported by the committee:

Add at the end of the joint resolution the following:

"The actual expenses of such committee, including compensation of a clerk, shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives."

Mr. MILLS. We have standing committees of this House amply competent to attend to business of that kind. I object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. CANDLER. I ask to be permitted to make an explanation. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

Mr. MILLS. I withhold the objection until the gentleman makes his explanation; but I give notice that I will object after the gentleman has been heard.

Mr. CANDLER. If the gentleman from Texas or other gentlemen representing the great producing sections of the country or any portion of the United States having an interest in the great export trade of the United States appreciated the complications and uncertainty of the present time, they would not object to a consideration of this resolution. We see to-day the European powers on the verge of war, and 85 or 90 per cent. of the American carrying trade now conducted in foreign ships.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Why, then, do you not report a bill?

Mr. CANDLER. The committee reports a joint resolution. The Committee on Commerce feels that this is a subject of so much importance and requiring so careful an examination that it can only be investigated by a joint select committee, as is here proposed, before another session. It has been impossible for want of time to give hearings and report upon the bills during this session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the amendment and report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 82, noes 25.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HOUK: The petition of Frank Kline, of Rebecca Marshall, widow of William Marshall, of Elkanah Harvey, and of George W. Price, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of John H. Johnson, of H. H. Porter, of C. P. Saffell, and Robert K. Byrd, for compensation for property taken and destroyed by the United States Army during the late rebellion—severally to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. G. W. JONES: The petition of Joseph E. Wilson, of Brazoria, Texas, for relief—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. VALENTINE: The petition of G. H. Haarmar, of Omaha, Nebraska, protesting against the passage of the bill relating to the manufacture of vinegar—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, August 4, 1882.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. HALE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

OMAHA INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. DAWES. I present the report of a committee of conference, which I have no doubt will be adopted without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report? The Chair hearing no objection, it is before the Senate.

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 1255) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment, and the House agree to the same.

H. L. DAWES,
GEO. H. PENDLETON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
D. C. HASKELL,
J. K. JONES,
O. L. SPAULDING,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SLATER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 126) to reimburse the Creek orphan fund.

Mr. ANTHONY. I rise to morning business.

Mr. WINDOM. Let us go through with the morning business first.

Mr. SLATER. I have no disposition to interfere with morning business, but I do not want to run counter to a political current, as was the case yesterday.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to say now that I hope the Senate during this morning will allow me to call up the uncontested pension cases and pass them, and go as much further as they like with regard to pension cases. I do not see that I shall have a more favorable opportunity during the session than to have them considered during the morning hour to-day. Of course the conference report has preference. I give this by way of notice that I hope during the morning hour there will be that opportunity.

JOURNALS OF THE TWO HOUSES.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 131) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to distribute copies of the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives to public and law libraries, instruct me to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It directs the Secretary of the Interior, from the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives now in his charge, to distribute copies to such public and law libraries, not already supplied with the same, as shall be designated, in equal number, by each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIEUTENANT FREDERICK SCHWATKA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 4594) authorizing full pay to Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, United States Army, while on leave to serve in command of the Franklin search expedition in the Arctic; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GROVER. I should like to have that bill put on its passage now.

Mr. LOGAN. I object. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. If the Senator will examine it he will find one or two things in the bill that he would not vote for; I am satisfied of that.

Mr. GROVER. I am in favor of the bill in the form in which I reported the Senate bill from the Committee on Military Affairs at the present session. Let it be referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BILL POSTPONED INDEFINITELY.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask that the bill (S. No. 2014) authorizing compensation to members of Company B, Fourteenth Infantry, United States Army, for certain private property destroyed by fire be indefinitely postponed. The subject was acted on by the passage of a House bill yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States transmitting, in response to the Senate resolution of the 15th of July, a report of the Secretary of State and accompanying papers relating to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, to ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH PERSIA.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6743) to establish diplomatic relations with Persia, to report it with an amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the committee was to add:

And the sum necessary therefor is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read as amended.

The Acting Secretary read the bill as amended, as follows:

That section 1675 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the words "Liberia, $4,000," the words "chargé d'affaires and consul-general at Teheran, Persia, $5,000." And the sum necessary therefor is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MAJOR D. C. SMITH.

Mr. McMILLAN. There is a bill on the table which came over from the House last evening. I ask that it be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R.

No. 5740) for the relief of the heirs of Major D. C. Smith; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. McMILLAN. This is a bill which has been before the Senate three or four sessions, and reported favorably from the Military Committee and passed. A similar bill is on the Calendar now with a favorable report from that committee. I ask that House bill be taken up and passed.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It relieves the heirs and bondsmen of Major D. C. Smith, late an assistant paymaster in the United States Army, from the payment of $166.29, and the interest thereon, as appears due upon settlement of his accounts.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the bill (S. No. 1638) for the relief of the heirs of Major D. C. Smith be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE OVER THE SAINT CROIX RIVER, MAINE.

Mr. McMILLAN. A report was made by the Committee on Commerce yesterday on the bill (S. No. 1787) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Saint Croix River between the city of Calais, Maine, and Saint Stephen's, New Brunswick, and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] was absent. I gave notice that I should ask the Senate this morning to consider that bill if he were present.

Mr. HALE. It will only take a moment. There will be no objection to it. It is a very important bill, and it should go through now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business?

Mr. HALE. Why cannot this come in? It was reported yesterday in my absence, and would have gone through then without any objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is in order.

Mr. McMILLAN. I will waive it until morning business is through.

Mr. PLATT. I must insist upon taking up the pension cases, except so far as morning business interferes.

Mr. McMILLAN. This will not take any time. It has been submitted to the War Department and the State Department both.

Mr. PLATT. If it will take no time I will consent to the consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1787) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Saint Croix River between the city of Calais, Maine, and Saint Stephen's, New Brunswick.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was to insert, as section 2:

SEC. 2. That the plan and location of any bridge the construction of which is hereby authorized shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and the bridge, if built at any distance greater than one hundred feet below the present toll-bridge between Calais, Maine, and Saint Stephen's, New Brunswick, or the head of navigation, shall be so located as not to obstruct, impair, or injuriously modify the free navigation of the river, and shall be built with the piers parallel to the current, leaving the water-way unobstructed by riprap or piling, or other obstructions, and shall have at the crossing of the main channel of the river a draw of not less than sixty feet of clear opening, which shall be located at a point best calculated to accommodate commerce, which draw shall at all times be opened promptly for passing vessels upon reasonable signal, except when railway trains are passing over the same; and at all times during the season of navigation proper signal-lights shall be used and maintained at the expense of the aforesaid company to guide vessels approaching said draw: Provided, That the construction of said bridge shall not be commenced until the plan and location thereof have been approved by the Secretary of War and the said company has been notified of the same in writing: And provided further, That the consent of the proper authorities of the Dominion of Canada shall have been obtained before said bridge shall be built or commenced.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, as section 3:

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved. And the right to require any changes in said structure or its entire removal at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NIORARA MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2997) granting right of way to the Fremont, Elk Horn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company across the Niobrara military reservation, in the State of Nebraska, and to restore certain portions of said military reservation to the public domain, and for other purposes, to report it favorably. I will state that on the 19th of July, 1882, this bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs favorably with amendments, and was recommitted in order that the amendments might be printed. I now report it back with the amendments which were heretofore ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I should like to have the present consideration of that bill. It is an important bill to certain interests in our country.

Mr. BLAIR. I object to anything that will interfere with the consideration of pension cases on the Calendar.

Mr. SAUNDERS. This will take no time.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I trust the Senator from New Hampshire will not object.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I ask for the consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the bill read at the Secretary's desk before objection may be interposed. We got into confusion yesterday by this course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

Mr. BLAIR. Is it a long bill?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Oh, no.

Mr. BLAIR. I reserve the right to object if it leads to any discussion.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It will lead to no discussion.

The bill was read, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 5, after the word "way," to insert "one hundred feet in width;" and in line 8, after the word "Nebraska," to strike out "said right of way to be one hundred feet in width" and insert:

And such quantity of land, not exceeding one hundred and fifty feet in width by four hundred feet in length, in addition to such right of way, as may be necessary for depot or station-house and switches for said road, to be so selected as.

So as to make the section read:

That the Fremont, Elk Horn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Nebraska, are hereby granted the right of way, one hundred feet in width, for their said railroad across and through the Niobrara military reservation, located in said State of Nebraska; and such quantity of land, not exceeding one hundred and fifty feet in width by four hundred feet in length, in addition to such right of way, as may be necessary for depot or station-house and switches for said road, to be so selected as not to interfere with any buildings or improvements thereon, and the location thereof to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell to said Fremont, Elk Horn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company forty acres of land, at a price not less than $2.50 per acre, for depot and other railroad purposes, to be selected by said company from the wood and timber reserve of said reservation, said land to be devoid of timber: Provided, That the selection of said land for depot purposes shall first be approved by the Secretary of War.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, directed to restore to the Secretary of the Interior the custody, control, and disposition of the following-described parcels and tracts of land embraced within the limits of the Fort Niobrara military reservation, in the State of Nebraska, as declared in executive order of December 10, 1879, and enlarged by executive order of June 6, 1881, to wit: all of sections numbered 29, 30, 31, and 32, and the west half of section numbered 33, all in township numbered 34 north, of range numbered 27 west, and all that part of section numbered 8, in township numbered 33 north, range numbered 27 west, within the said limits of said reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, as an additional section, the following:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall dispose of said tracts and parcels of land under the public land laws in the same manner as if said tracts and parcels had never been embraced within the limits of said military reservation; and such persons as have settled or made improvements thereon prior to December 10, 1881, shall have priority of claim thereto under the public land laws: Provided, That they file their respective claims according to law at the proper land office within three months after the said lands become subject to disposition under the public land laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting right of way to the Fremont, Elk Horn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company across the Niobrara military reservation, in the State of Nebraska, and to restore certain portions of said military reservation to the public domain, and for other purposes."

CAPTAIN NICHOLAS J. BIGLEY.

Mr. VOORHEES. Senate bill No. 1280 I ask the Senate to take up and pass. It will excite no discussion. It is a bill which was reported from the Committee on Claims by the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. FAIR,] who is not now present, but it is a unanimous report of that committee.

Mr. PLATT. I must object.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let me pass this, and I will help the Senator from Connecticut from this on. I have been trying for five days to get a hearing. Usually I have better luck than that, but I have given way to everybody thus far.

Mr. PLATT. If I felt I was to have an opportunity this morning, without interposing these objections, to pass the uncontested pension cases on the docket, of which there are fifteen or sixteen, and such other cases as it seems important should be considered, I should make no objection, but I fear if I do not object the morning hour is all to be lost.

Mr. VOORHEES. This will not take five minutes, and then I will assist the Senator from Connecticut to have the pension bills considered.

Mr. BLAIR. We have just lost the last ten minutes in listening to the reading of a bill, and there is very little time left before twelve o'clock.

Mr. PLATT. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BLAIR. I will not object, then, if the chairman does not.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1280) for the relief of Captain Nicholas J. Bigley.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, in line 3, after the word "of," to insert "twenty-one thousand two hundred and eleven;" in line 4, after the word "dollars," to insert "and forty cents;" and in line 6, after the word "for," to strike out "the value of the steamer Hercules and tow of coal" and insert "70,638 bushels of coal, at thirty cents per bushel;" so as to make the bill read:

That the sum of $21,211.40 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of the funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to pay Captain Nicholas J. Bigley for 70,638 bushels of coal, at thirty cents per bushel, destroyed at Memphis, Tennessee, in the month of February, 1863.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have an explanation of the bill or to have the report read.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let the report be read. It is very brief, and gives a better explanation than I can.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. FAIR on the 7th of June:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1280) for the relief of Captain Nicholas J. Bigley, has had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

It appears from the evidence in this case that, in the winter of 1862 and 1863, about 45,000 troops were stationed at Memphis, Tennessee, under the command of General Hurlburt, and that there was a great scarcity of and demand for coal, with which to move the immense quantities of supply stores that were required to supply the Army of the Tennessee, and in order to supply this demand Captain A. R. Eddy, post quartermaster at Memphis, sent the following telegram to one E. S. Blasdel:

DEPOT QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE,
Memphis, January 24, 1863.

E. S. BLASDEL, Esq.:

Furnish to this depot from 75,000 to 100,000 bushels of Youghiogheny coal, also 2,000 tons of hay, for which a good market price will be paid.

Coal at 30 cents per bushel.

Hay at $27.50 per ton.

A. R. EDDY,
Per DAN. W. SENDER,
Chief Clerk.

Upon the receipt of this telegram Mr. Blasdel immediately transferred the order to the claimant, N. J. Bigley, who was then furnishing large quantities of Youghiogheny coal to the Government at other points, who accepted the order and at once undertook to fill it. He had seven barges gauged by the proper officers, and forwarded his certificates to the post quartermaster at Memphis, and notified him that he was en route with the coal, the seven barges being towed by the towboat Hercules to Memphis, reaching that point on the morning of February 17, 1863.

On reaching Memphis claimant notified General McPherson, then in command, that he had delivered the coal as per contract, but owing to the crowded condition of the wharves he was directed to land his towboat and barges on the opposite (Arkansas) shore, which order he obeyed. Claimant states that he was advised that a guard was detailed to protect the boat and coal, but they never reported for duty. Soon after the boat landed it was attacked by the guerrillas and burned, and four of the barges and their contents were sunk. The other three were paid for by the depot quartermaster at the contract price and according to the certificates of the gauger, which had been previously forwarded to him.

Claimant presented his bill to the depot quartermaster for the other four barges and contents and for the value of his towboat, which had been destroyed by the neglect of the agents of the Government, but payment was refused because of a want of jurisdiction of the depot quartermaster over such claims. The claim was afterward presented to the Quartermaster-General of the United States Army for allowance and payment, and was by him rejected for the same reason, but was by him recommended to the favorable consideration and action of Congress.

Claimant now comes to Congress and asks compensation for the coal contained in the four barges that were sunk, at the contract price, and for the amounts as shown by the gauger's certificates, and for the loss of the towboat Hercules, at a price fully shown by the testimony to have been a fair and reasonable valuation. The items may be more definitely expressed as follows:

| 70,638 bushels of coal, at 30 cents..... | $21,211 40 |
| To the value of towboat Hercules..... | 25,000 00 |
| | 46,211 40 |

The evidence shows conclusively that the claimant was acting under the direct and positive orders of the agent of the Government, and that the loss of the property above mentioned was in no way chargeable to his neglect or carelessness; that the claimant had always been loyal to the Government and had given liberally of his own private means to aid the Government in its days of sore trial and dire necessity. This claim has been considered by the Quartermaster-General, the Judge-Advocate-General, the Third Auditor, and the Second Comptroller, respectively, and by them rejected for the reason that the property "was destroyed while it was in the possession of the claimant." Your committee cannot see that this should be a bar to the claimant's right to recovery, as he was acting under the special and positive orders of the Government through its recognized agents. This opinion seems to have been shown by Quartermaster-General Meigs, who, in the conclusion of his decision rejecting the claim, under date of May 11, 1869, uses these words:

"Congress alone, it seems to me, can give relief. The loss was a heavy one, and the circumstances are such as, I think, should commend the case to the favorable consideration of Congress."

In reviewing the report of the Quartermaster-General on this case, the Inspector-General, Hardie, uses these words:

"The views of the Quartermaster-General are concurred in by the undersigned. The loss was heavy and the circumstances such as entitle the claimant to such favorable consideration as can legally be granted."

Judge-Advocate-General W. M. Dunn concludes his final review of the entire case, under date November 22, 1870, with these words:

"I concur in the conclusions of the reports rejecting this claim, and also in the foregoing recommendations thereof to the favorable consideration of Congress."

There is every reason to believe that while these departmental officials could not legally allow the said claim, yet they fully recognized and candidly acknowledged its justice.

Your committee are of opinion that the claimant is entitled to the relief he seeks to the extent of the value of the coal.

Your committee are of opinion that claimant should not receive payment from the Government for the towboat Hercules, by which said coal was transported, for the reason that it was a loss incident to natural risks which he assumed in delivering the coal, and for the further reason that the boat formed no part of the goods contracted for by the Government to be delivered; but your committee are clearly of opinion that claimant is entitled to recover the value of the coal destroyed, at the contract price of thirty cents per bushel, amounting to $21,211.40; and accordingly report back said bill with this amendment, and recommend its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Committee on Claims.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BECK. I call for the regular order. The Calendar is the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour is not yet over. Mr. BECK. Then I object to anything but morning business, so that we can reach the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Kentucky to let us pass the uncontested pension cases on the Calendar.

Mr. BECK. We have allowed such bills to pass time and again, and they can be called up at any time. There are a number of cases on the regular Calendar that I desire to have called.

Mr. PLATT. The difficulty about the pension bills is that while they may be called up at any time, if I let this opportunity go past I am afraid the business will so crowd that they will not be passed. They are most of them House bills.

Mr. BECK. We have given away time and again for pension cases, and we shall always do that; but not a case has been called on the regular Calendar since the 19th day of April, and surely we should give an hour to that.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that it will not take more than twenty minutes to pass all the pension bills and get them out of the way.

Mr. BECK. There is no objection to considering them, and they can come up at any time. The regular Calendar seems to be the only obstacle in the way.

Mr. PLUMB. These are House cases, and it is necessary to have them passed here to perfect the legislation.

Mr. BECK. I will consent that the pension cases shall have precedence, and then we can go on with other uncontested cases. Let the pension cases be called first, the uncontested cases favorably reported.

Mr. BAYARD. Is it understood that those bills are all House bills?

Mr. BECK. We had better go through with the House bills.

Mr. PLATT. It is impossible for me to hear what Senators on the other side of the Chamber say. What I desire is first to pass the pension cases which are reported favorably and to which there is no objection.

Mr. BAYARD. House bills?

Mr. PLATT. There may possibly be one or two Senate bills among them. They are, most of them, House bills. There are fifteen or sixteen of them. We can pass them in fifteen or sixteen minutes, I presume.

Mr. BECK. We all agree to that.

Mr. PLATT. I should like after that to dispose of some pension cases that are contested, in which there are majority and minority reports; but the Senate can decide as to that matter. I do think that the Senate ought now to give the pension cases which are unobjectioned to the right of way. They will take but a few minutes.

Mr. BLAIR. In reference to the contested cases I wish to say that there has not been a contested pension case considered during the session to my recollection. As to bills reported from other committees, a great many contested bills have been disposed of, and we ought to pay some attention to the contested pension bills.

Mr. PLATT. Let us discuss that after we get through with the uncontested cases.

Mr. LAPHAM. Pursuant to the notice I gave yesterday, I move to take up Senate bill No. 2164. It is a very important bill.

Mr. GROVER. I rise to morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize Senators with morning business to present.

LIEUTENANT FREDERICK SCHWATKA.

Mr. GROVER. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4594) authorizing full pay to Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, United States Army, while on leave to serve in command of the Franklin search expedition in the Arctic, to report it with amendments, and I ask that it be put on its passage now.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments of the Committee on Military Affairs were, before the word "thereof," to strike out the words "and commutation of quarters;" to strike out "via" and insert "to" before "New York City;" and, after "New York City," to strike out "to North Hudson's Bay;" so as to make the bill read:

That First Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, Third United States Cavalry, who was on leave of absence, by proper authority, from March 5, 1878, to October 1, 1880, in order to take command of the Franklin search expedition in the Arctic, shall be viewed as on duty during that period, and shall be entitled to full pay thereof, and to mileage from Spotted Tail agency, Dakota Territory, (where stationed March 5, 1878,) to New York City, and return to Vancouver Barracks, Washington Territory, (where now stationed.)

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GROVER. Now I move that the bill (S. No. 400) authorizing full pay to Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, United States Army, while on leave to serve in command of the Franklin expedition in the Arctic be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 28) for the relief of John G. Abercrombie; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6103) authorizing the deputy collector of customs stationed at San Juan Island, in the Puget Sound district, to enter and clear vessels and collect duties.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PLATT. Now, Mr. President—

Mr. LAPHAM. What has become of my motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would inform the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] made the first motion to proceed to the consideration of pension cases.

Mr. LAPHAM. The bill I have named will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Perhaps the Senator from New York can get the Senator from Connecticut to give way; otherwise his motion will not be in order.

Mr. LAPHAM. This will take but a moment.

Mr. PLATT. I should like very much to give way, but if I give way once there are thirty Senators who are as anxious to pass bills as the Senator from New York, and I presume they have perhaps equal merit. I cannot yield.

Mr. LAPHAM. Let me say to my friend from Connecticut that unless this bill goes to the House to-day there is danger it will not become a law. It is a very important measure. The object is to reduce the telegraphic rates to foreign countries from 50 cents to 10 cents a word.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator will pass his bill; there is no trouble about that. I must insist on pension cases at this time.

Mr. BECK. I call for the regular order. I will give way to pension bills, but not to anything else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Do I understand that the Senator from Connecticut is out of order, or gives way?

Mr. PLATT. I do not give way.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I desire to make a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive it.

THOMAS SAMPSON.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1363) for the relief of Thomas Sampson, to report it favorably and ask for its immediate consideration. It will not lead to any discussion. It is simply a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to give a medal to a person engaged in saving life.

Mr. PLATT. I must object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I understood I could put it in now, or I would not have made the report, because I desire the consideration of it when reported. It is simply a bill granting a medal to a sailor who has been engaged in saving life. I withdraw the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can withdraw it and present it again to-morrow.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOGAN. I have been three days trying to get a chance in the morning hour to have a little amendment agreed to which was reported by the Judiciary Committee, but I do not insist on it. I do not suppose I shall get a chance. I have tried to get the floor to do it.

Mr. LAPHAM. I hope the Senate will take up the bill in regard to the telegraphic cable.

Mr. LOGAN. I must object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no further morning business the morning hour is closed and the consideration of business under the Anthony rule is in order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut to take up first the pension cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. Unobjected pension cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unobjected pension cases. The Chair hears no objection, and those cases will be considered.

CREEK ORPHAN FUND.

Mr. SLATER. I must insist on my motion now to consider the conference report on the Creek orphan fund bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 126) to reimburse the Creek orphan fund.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Oregon, who is upon the Committee on Pensions, to wait until after we get through with the pension cases before he asks for the consideration of his report. I recognize the fact that if he insists on it it is in order at all times, but he can insist upon it after the consideration of the pension cases. I ask him if he will not withhold it until we get these cases out of the way?

Mr. SLATER. I cannot yield. Yesterday I waited not only through the morning hour but until between two and three o'clock, and then was antagonized by a political current, and I apprehend that it will be the same way to-day. I therefore must insist upon a vote on my motion at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Anthony rule runs until two o'clock.

Mr. PLATT. The first case on the pension list is—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senator from Oregon has interposed with his conference report.

Mr. McMILLAN. That conference report is not a privileged question now, as I understand. The report has been made and submitted, and the question is now whether it shall be taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the very question. The Chair has to put the question to the Senate, and the Senate must decide it.

Mr. McMILLAN. But it is not a privileged question, and the Senator from Connecticut had the floor on the pension cases, as I understand.

Mr. PLATT. I will help the Senator from Oregon to get up his report after the pension cases are disposed of, if he will wait.

Mr. SLATER. The Senator is not in a position to say that. On yesterday he was kind enough to vote down the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report was presented and it was not considered before because somebody insisted on its being printed. Now is the first time that it is brought before the Senate. The Chair thinks it is a privileged question; but it is for the Senate to say.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg pardon of the Chair. The attempt was made yesterday to consider this same report, and the Senate voted it down. This is not the first time it has been brought up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate can vote it down to-day.

Mr. McMILLAN. But as a matter of order the Senator from Connecticut had the floor by unanimous consent and was proceeding with the disposition of the pension cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is true, but he has not the floor continuously. The Senator from Oregon rose after the Senator from Connecticut had sat down and the Senate had agreed to take up the pension cases, and moved a privileged question about a conference report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know how long a conference report remains a privileged question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was a privileged question when the report was presented and ordered to be printed. The Senator from Oregon asks to take it up.

Mr. COCKRELL. But the same motion was made yesterday and voted down. How can that be made every day?

Mr. SLATER. Certainly, it can be made every day for a month.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not understand that it is a privileged question. I suppose the report submitted by the Senator from Oregon is no more a privileged question than any other matter. He can submit his motion, I suppose, as any other motion can be submitted; but, as I understand, the order of the Senate was to proceed with the pension cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule says that a conference report is privileged. Now this is called up after having been printed, and the Senate may proceed to consider it one day and not another, but it is always in order to ask the Senate to consider it. That is the motion, and it must be decided without debate.

Mr. BLAIR. The presentation of a conference report is always in order, but its consideration is not always in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The consideration of a conference report, in the opinion of the Chair, is always in order. We should never get through the business of the Senate otherwise.

Mr. HARRIS. It is always in order to move to consider it, but a majority of the Senate will determine whether they will or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. First, I ask that we may have order in the Chamber. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please take their seats and suspend conversation. This motion to proceed to the consideration of the conference report is not subject to debate. It must be decided without debate by the rule.

Mr. PLATT. I am aware of that. I only desire to make one more appeal to the Senator from Oregon. He says that yesterday he ran against a political current. I was not aware of any political current which antagonized his conference report, but he certainly is now running against a current which is not political, that is the pension current. I appeal to him once more to wait until we have disposed of these pension cases; otherwise I fear he will be voted down again.

Mr. SLATER. But when we pass them we shall have a political current just as we had yesterday. ["Vote!" "Vote!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. BROWN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. MORGAN, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I withdraw my vote; I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHILCOTT.]

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 30; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

JOHN C. HARGRAVE.

Mr. PLATT. The first pension case on the Calendar is one which was passed over for some reason, I do not know what. It is the bill (S. No. 276) granting a pension to John C. Hargrave, reported favorably, and for some unaccountable reason it has been passed over.

Mr. COCKRELL. My recollection is that that case was reported favorably, and after it was reported favorably it was reopened in the Pension Office and is pending there.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator knows about it, he can object.

Mr. COCKRELL. I introduced the bill for one of my constituents, and I prefer that it be not acted on.

Mr. PLATT. I merely noticed that it had been passed over.

Mr. COCKRELL. I knew that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will remain on the Calendar.

JOSEPH F. WILSON.

Mr. PLATT. The next case is House bill No. 6249.

The bill (H. R. No. 6249) granting an increase of pension to Joseph F. Wilson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Joseph F. Wilson, late a corporal of Company E, Eighth Regiment of Illinois Infantry Volunteers, at $40 per month, in lieu of that which he now receives.

Mr. LOGAN. I move an amendment to make the amount $50 a month instead of $40, and if the Senate will give me a minute I think I can satisfy them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has five minutes under the rule.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want five minutes. I ask the Senate to hear my statement in reference to this man. This man Wilson was wounded in the jaw at the battle of Fort Donelson. I was present in the hospital when his wound was dressed. I was wounded there myself, and was present having my own wound dressed, and saw him. He was shot in the chin and it shattered the jaw-bone, and his whole under jaw-bone, every particle of it, was taken out, and to-day he lives by having a false jaw, and is in the most deplorable condition almost that any person could be. He can eat nothing but soup and things of that kind. I ask that the pension be increased to $50 a month. I move to strike out "$40" and insert "$50."

Mr. BLAIR. There is no objection on the part of the committee. The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BLAIR. The committee agreed to the bill as it came from the House. We are very glad that the addition is made.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE FOSTER.

The bill (S. No. 2080) granting a pension to George Foster was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for a pension to George Foster, late a private in Company C, Tenth United States Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH LEEBRICK.

The bill (H. R. No. 219) for the relief of Elizabeth Leebrick was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Elizabeth Leebrick upon the pension-roll for her service as nurse in the Army of the late war, at the rate of $16 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALICE J. BENNETT.

The bill (H. R. No. 2524) for the relief of Alice J. Bennett was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Alice J. Bennett, widow of Charles N. Bennett, late a private in Company H of the Eighty-fourth Regiment of New York Volunteers, at the rate of $8 per month, and $2 per month in addition thereto for each child of Charles N. and Alice J. Bennett until they arrive at the age of sixteen years, respectively.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEPHEN D. SMITH.

The bill (H. R. No. 6399) granting an increase of pension to Stephen D. Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension heretofore allowed to Stephen D. Smith, of Canaan, New Hampshire, late a private in Company C, Seventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, to $37.50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY BULLARD.

Mr. MCDILL. Order of Business No. 887 is in the nature of a pension bill, and by an understanding with the chairman of the committee it was to be considered at this time. It is the bill (H. R. No. 2317) for the relief of Mary Bullard.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides for the payment to Mary Bullard, of Iowa, of $100, being the value of a horse ridden to death by her in obtaining aid to rescue captured Union soldiers.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN F. ELLIS.

The bill (H. R. No. 4888) increasing the pension of John F. Ellis, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 5, after "to," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty-six;" and after "month," in line 6, to insert "from and after the passage of this act;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of John F. Ellis, late of Company H, Eightieth Ohio Volunteers, to $36 per month from and after the passage of this act, (certificate No. 108466.)

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES BENNETT.

The bill (H. R. No. 6317) granting an increase of pension to James Bennett, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James Bennett, late a sergeant of Company L, Second Regiment New York Cavalry, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARGE OF DESERTION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I would suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that there is a House bill which is of the same nature as the pension bills which is next to the bill just reached on the Calendar, to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion. It was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, taken up and discussed, and will lead now to no further debate, and I think it ought to be passed. There are many constituents of every Senator on this floor interested in it.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Missouri tell me what amendment he proposes in the last clause?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not propose any, but I will accept the amendment the Senator from Connecticut proposes there.

Mr. PLATT. All right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to it, as it does not affect the merits of the bill. The bill I wish taken up is House bill No. 5224.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5224) to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion.

Mr. PLATT. The question was on an amendment which I proposed. I will change my amendment, and, in place of the words "received a local bounty and," in line 15 of section 4, I move to insert "intentionally;" so as to read, "or who intentionally deserted."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to that amendment? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the amendment read. As I understand the bill—

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill now reads: "Or who received a local bounty and deserted." The words "received a local bounty and" are stricken out, and "intentionally" inserted; so as to read "or who intentionally deserted."

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all right. I have no objection to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to hear the clause about the twelve months' service read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary suggests that the whole bill had better be read.

Mr. CONGER. No; only the amendment about twelve months' service.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 15 of section 4 the word "three" has been stricken out and "twelve" inserted, and the words "received a local bounty and" have been stricken out and "intentionally" inserted; so that the clause reads:

And provided further, That no soldier, nor the heirs or legal representatives of any soldier, who served in the Army a period of less than twelve months, or who intentionally deserted, shall be entitled to the benefit of the provisions of this act.

Mr. CONGER. What I want to inquire is whether, if a person has served three years and re-enlisted, it would embrace his whole term?

Mr. COCKRELL. The whole service will be counted.

Mr. CONGER. That is all I wanted to know. Then I am satisfied.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ADELINE A. TURNER.

Mr. PLATT. Now let us go on with the pension cases.

The bill (H. R. No. 6521) granting a pension to Mrs. Adeline A. Turner, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Adeline A. Turner, as dependent mother of Captain Joseph S. Hills, late captain of Company A, Sixteenth Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH J. CAMERON.

The bill (H. R. No. 3414) granting a pension to Sarah J. Cameron was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, to strike out "Henry" and insert "Harvey;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah J. Cameron, widow of Harvey A. Cameron, late a private in Company C, Twenty-fifth Missouri State Troops.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. TAYLOR.

The bill (H. R. No. 3733) granting a pension to Mary E. Taylor was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Mary E. Taylor, widow of James Taylor, late an ordnance-sergeant in the United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZA F. PORTER.

The bill (H. R. No. 6624) granting an increase of pension to Eliza F. Porter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the rate of pension of Eliza F. Porter, widow of Lieutenant James E. Porter, late of the Seventh United States Cavalry, to $30 a month, in lieu of the pension she now receives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA A. JONES.

The bill (H. R. No. 3601) for the relief of Martha A. Jones was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Martha A. Jones, widow of the late Oliver P. Jones, who was killed on the "Morgan raid," during the late war, at the rate of $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALVIN WALKER.

The bill (H. R. No. 3717) granting a pension to Alvin Walker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alvin Walker.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA JANE DOUGLASS.

The bill (H. R. No. 5985) granting a pension to Martha Jane Douglass was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Martha Jane Douglass, widow of John T. Douglass, late a private in Company B, Third Tennessee Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN V. BOVELL.

Mr. VAN WYCK. From the Committee on Pensions I desire to present a report on the bill (S. No. 1304) granting a pension to Sarah J. Bovell, which should have been upon the list now being considered except that by neglect of my own it was not submitted at the proper time. It is unanimously reported from the committee with an amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. PLATT. I will say in regard to that bill that the Senator was directed to report it some time ago, but has overlooked it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska reports a bill which will be considered now if there be no objection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John V. Bovell, late captain of Company C, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to John V. Bovell."

ANNIE W. OSBORNE.

Mr. BECK. I propose now to proceed with the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. There are one or two more pension bills.

Mr. BECK. Very well.

The bill (H. R. No. 2906) granting a pension to Annie W. Osborne was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Annie W. Osborne, widow of John W. Osborne, late a hospital steward in the United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH F. RICE.

The bill (H. R. No. 5018) granting a pension to Elizabeth F. Rice was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll at $8 a month the name of Elizabeth F. Rice, of Osceola, Iowa, formerly of Mercersburgh, Franklin County, Pennsylvania, widow of Perry A. Rice, who died in Libby prison, Richmond, Virginia, February 28, 1863, having been captured by General J. E. B. Stuart, in a raid through Pennsylvania, on the 10th of October, 1862.

The bill was ordered to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLATT. The next bill on the Calendar is House bill No. 3920, relating to some changes in the pension law with reference to their administration, for the benefit of the Pension Office, and I should like to have the Senate pass it at this time if they are so disposed; but if not, I presume I can call it up at another time. I do not think it will occasion any debate.

Mr. MORRILL. I rise to morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time for receiving morning business has passed; but the Chair will receive it.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to introduce a joint resolution to be referred to the Committee on the Census, and then I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 5538, commonly known as the tax bill.

Leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 105) relative to the registry of deaths, births, and marriages; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee to make provision for taking the Tenth Census and ascertaining the results thereof.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. Now I move to postpone the present and all prior orders and take up House bill No. 5538.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Was there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut to take up a pension-law bill?

Mr. PLATT. I trust the Senator from Vermont will allow this bill to be read. I think it will occasion no debate. If it does, I shall call it up at some other time.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the Senator had better call it up at some other time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves to postpone the further consideration of the Calendar until to-morrow with a view of taking up a bill.

Mr. PLATT. I suppose that is in the nature of an objection to my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. BECK. What is the regular order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call of the Calendar. The Senator from Vermont moves to postpone the further consideration of the Calendar with a view to taking up a bill.

Mr. BECK. If it is to take up the tax bill I will be with him. If it is to take up some outside bill I will not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Vermont indicate the bill?

Mr. MORRILL. I have already indicated it. It is House bill No. 5538, commonly known as the tax bill.

Mr. PLATT. Now I am bound to say in justice to those Senators who have desired at this time that I should agree to go on with the contested pension cases, in which there are two reports, majority and minority, that I should like to have the Senate spend a little time in the consideration of those cases. I do not want to antagonize the tax bill, but I wish that the Senator from Vermont would allow the Senate to go on with the consideration of some contested pension cases, which, it seems to me, ought to be disposed of, and which I know Senators are very much interested in having considered before moving to take up his tax bill.

Mr. FERRY. I have no disposition to antagonize the tax bill; but I desire to call the attention of Senators to House bill No. 5812, to establish post-routes. The bill has been printed and lies upon the desks of Senator, and I hope they will give such attention to it that when I call it up their knowledge of the correctness of it, or the suggestions which they may make to render it perfect, will hasten the passage of the bill, so that when it is called up it may not take much time, and perhaps we may not be compelled to read the bill in full. I simply want to give this notice because our time is hastening and I wish to economize it as much as possible.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senate will not agree to the motion of the Senator from Vermont. I have before me a pension bill passed by the House of Representatives for the relief of the widow of a soldier who served through the Mexican war, as I am informed, and who re-enlisted in the Army and died of disease contracted in the service. I am told the family are extremely poor and destitute and very meritorious. I have no acquaintance with the parties whatever, but I think it is in the interest of right and of duty that such a case should be considered. It has been reported adversely by the Committee on Pensions, but I have no doubt that the Senate upon a consideration of the case will pass the House bill. At all events it is entitled to hearing before the Senate. I have been trying to get the case before the Senate for two weeks.

Mr. MORRILL. I should be very glad to give way, but I cannot give way for anything on account of the prime importance of the bill that I shall bring up if the motion which I have made prevails.

Mr. PLATT. The case to which the Senator from Florida alludes will occasion some discussion.

Mr. SLATER. I desire to say that if the cases on the Calendar are laid aside, I shall feel it my duty to again move to take up the conference report I moved this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to postpone the Calendar. The Chair hears no objection to its postponement.

Mr. MORRILL. Now I move to take up the bill I have indicated.

Mr. SLATER. Pending the motion of the Senator from Vermont, I have a right to make my motion to proceed to the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill No. 126.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must put the motion of the Senator from Vermont. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the tax bill.

Mr. SLATER. Do I understand that the Chair rules my motion out of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion first made was to proceed to the consideration of the tax bill, and the Chair must put the question on that motion.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senate votes down the motion of the Senator from Vermont, then the motion of the Senator from Oregon will be in order, but not until then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the ruling of the Chair. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 40, noes 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation is before the Senate.

CREEK ORPHAN FUND.

Mr. SLATER. Now I make my motion to proceed to the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill No. 126.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves to proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the Creek orphan bill. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of that report.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that I am with the Senator from Oregon for the consideration of the conference report; but as I observe that the chairman of the Committee on Finance, having charge of the tax bill, antagonizes the conference report, I shall vote with him, and therefore be compelled to vote against the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SLATER. I desire to leave the city as soon as I can after this matter is disposed of. It is about the only thing I have on hand.

Mr. MORRILL. Is debate in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir.

Mr. SLATER. I desire to leave the city, if possible, to-morrow morning. I would like to leave even this evening if I could. That is the only matter I have on hand that keeps me here, and I should be glad to get it off my hands.

Mr. HOAR. We all want to leave the city to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 23, noes 21.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon how long the report will take?

Mr. SLATER. It ought not to take five minutes.

Mr. MORRILL. It will take all day.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAWYER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. CAMDEN.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired for the rest of the session with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MITCHELL.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. JACKSON] is necessarily absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.]

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to announce my pair with my colleague, [Mr. MCPHERSON.]

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 23; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 126) "to reimburse the Creek orphan fund," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the said bill and agree to the same with the following amendments, namely: Strike out, in line 1 of said amendment, the words "fifty-one thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "forty-seven thousand five hundred." Strike out, in line 11 of said amendment the words "Creek orphans" and insert in lieu thereof "Creeks who were orphans on the 24th day of March, 1832." Insert after the word "act," in line 27 of said amendment, the following: "Unless in the judgment of the President it shall be for the best interests of the said orphans or their heirs that the same, in whole or in part, be deposited in the Treasury to their credit, as now provided by law for Indian trust-funds, and the interest thereon only to be paid to the actual beneficiaries under this act." And add at the end of said House amendment the following: "But nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prevent the United States from asserting its right to be reimbursed by the Creek Nation in any future settlements therewith with the further sum of $106,799.68 expended by the United States out of the Creek orphan fund for the support of loyal Creek refugees;" and the House agree to the same.

JAS. H. SLATER,

H. L. DAWES,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

N. C. DEERING,

D. C. HASKELL,

OLIN WELLBORN,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COKE. As one of the committee of conference appointed on behalf of the Senate, I did not concur in the report just read, and it is necessary that I make a statement in order that the points of difference between myself and the majority of the committee may be presented.

The bill is a bill to reimburse the Creek orphan fund to the following amounts:

1. By value of certain depreciated bonds purchased in contravention of law, with money belonging to said fund, as follows: Tennessee bonds, $20,000; Virginia, $3,500; $9,000, and $41,800—$74,300.
2. By the sum of $68,956.29, taken without authority of law from said fund and applied to the general purposes of the Creek Nation.
3. By the sum of $106,799.68, taken without authority of law from said fund and applied to the support of loyal refugees of the Creek Nation.

These sums aggregate $251,055.97. The purpose of this bill is to restore that amount to the Creek orphan fund. Of this amount $106,799.68 was applied by the Government during the war to the support of the loyal Creek refugees. The Senate bill provided that while the Government of the United States would restore the full sum of $251,055.97, yet $106,799.68 of that aggregate having been applied by the Government to the support of loyal Creek refugees during the war, it should be charged against the Creek Nation and recouped from funds now or hereafter in the possession of the Government belonging to the Creek Nation. The House did not concur in the provision providing that the Government should be reimbursed by the Creek Nation. The majority of the conference committee yielded to the House amendment, and have made this report. I do not concur in the report upon that point. The point was very much discussed in the Senate for some five or six days, and the provision was put in the Senate bill upon the maturest consideration; and after the whole subject was thoroughly understood by the Senate and as representing the majority vote of the Senate, I did not feel at liberty to yield the point which had been so maturely considered and determined in the Senate. Besides, Mr. President, I voted with the majority of the Senate, and my convictions are that the provision of the Senate bill which has been yielded by the conference committee on this subject was a correct one.

During the war the Creek Nation divided nearly equally, one-half going with the confederate States and the other half with the Union. The Union people of the Creek Nation are the loyal refugees referred to. They were accompanied into the Union lines by their chiefs. They were the sole representatives of that nation within the Union lines, and the Government found it necessary to take care of them. At that time and under these circumstances the Government used the Creek orphan fund, which it now restores in this bill, for that purpose; but having taken care of these sole representatives of the Creek Nation during the war to be found within the Union lines, the United States claims the right now, as it claimed then, to use funds belonging to the Creek Nation for that purpose. Having reimbursed the Creek orphan fund in this bill the full amount taken from that fund for that purpose, the Senate bill claimed that the Government should be reimbursed this money paid for the support of the loyal Creeks during the war by the Creek Nation. I think it is right. We must judge of this transaction by the circumstances surrounding it at the time the Government took this action. At that time one-half of the Creek Nation was in arms against the Government; the other half was loyal. This loyal half of the Creek Nation, for whose support the Government expended $106,000, was in legal effect at that time and under the circumstances the Creek Nation. The Government had the right, as it had the power, to deal with them as the Creek Nation, and to advance money needed by them and hold the Creek Nation responsible. As a legal proposition this cannot be questioned. It was so regarded at the time when the money was advanced. If it was right then it is right now; and while it is proper that the Government should restore to the Creek orphan fund the money that it used for that purpose, it is equally proper that the Government should be reimbursed by the Creek Nation this same amount of money. I hope the report of the majority will not be concurred in.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I voted against taking up this conference report, though I had signed it, because of lack of time, and therefore I will endeavor to be as brief as possible now that it is up, and will simply content myself with stating the differences between the two Houses and the principle upon which the conference committee came to the conclusion they have arrived at in their report.

Both Houses have agreed, perhaps without a dissenting voice, that the Creek orphan fund should be reimbursed for moneys improperly used by the United States. Even the Senator from Texas, [Mr. COKE,] who was unable to agree with this report, has stated that it is proper that the Creek orphan fund should be reimbursed the amount thus expended for other purposes, and that, I understand, every one agrees to. That was the purpose of the bill. The purpose of the bill was to reimburse and make whole a trust fund. But a majority of the Senate were of opinion that of the moneys that were thus wrongfully taken from the Creek orphan fund the $106,000, or about that, which had been expended by the United States for what were called loyal refugees of the Creek Nation during the war should be reimbursed by the Creek Nation to the United States; not that the Creek Nation should reimburse this fund, but should reimburse the United States for this sum; and therefore the Senate, by a small majority, added to this bill, the purpose of which was to reimburse a trust fund, a provision that such amount of the reimbursement as had been paid for loyal refugees should be charged over to the Creek Nation.

It unfortunately so happened, probably by an oversight, that a majority of the conferees on the part of the Senate did not represent this amendment, two out of the three having voted against it. This being the most important amendment, perhaps strictly according to parliamentary law there should have been a majority on the committee composed of Senators favoring the amendment. However, the conferees on the part of the House and of the Senate came to this conclusion—

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if it is not a remarkable instance of two conferees of the three being opposed to the amendment of the Senate which the Senate appointed them to sustain?

Mr. DAWES. I do not know how the conferees came to be appointed. I knew nothing of it myself. The conferees on the part of the House and of the Senate came to this conclusion: that as both bodies were agreed that the Creek orphan fund should be reimbursed, and as one of the bodies by a small majority had put upon the bill an amendment that a certain portion of the money reimbursed should be charged to the Creek Nation, it would be a fair arrangement to reimburse the fund, as everybody agrees should be done, and then to say that nothing in this bill should be construed as interfering at all with the right of the Secretary of the Interior to charge it to the Creek Nation, if on examination of their accounts in his judgment it should be proper so to do.

I know the anxiety of those who feel that it ought to be done to secure it by a positive law; but they forget that the Creek Nation are not heard in this proceeding, that this is to be an enactment in which the Creek Nation are not heard, charging over to them a sum which we admit by the votes of both Houses we had no business to take from the trust fund. We charge it over to them without their having an opportunity to be heard.

There are open accounts to-day between the Creek Nation and the United States, accounts about which they are negotiating, and we have their fund in our hands. If they ought to reimburse the United States for this amount it is in our power to charge it to them, and if by an enactment in which they have no part we charge upon them $106,000 which we used to take care of loyal refugees, we estop them from being heard and we may do them a positive wrong. This is the basis upon which the conference report is made. It does not preclude what the provision of the Senate bill requires. It expressly sets forth that it shall not, but that if in the adjustment of the open accounts between that nation and the United States it shall hereafter be found by the accounting officers that this sum ought to be charged to them it may be charged to them; but the conferees thought that to enact it by a positive law upon a bill the purpose of which was to reimburse a trust fund was not wise, and that the Senate would so consider if they came to look at the equity and justice of the case. These are the reasons for the conference report.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I felt some hesitation about calling the attention of the Senate to the fact that the conference committee was made up in violation of the parliamentary usage, because I have no doubt it was done by inadvertence, but as a matter of course it is rather a novel thing to do. The only difference between the House and the Senate was whether this money, a portion of it—

Mr. SLATER. I would like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that there was another amendment as offensive to some of the Senate as this was, the author of which was the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] and which has also been a subject of conference.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only material controversy between the two Houses was whether this money was to be charged to the Creek Nation or whether it was to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States without being so charged. That was the contest in which I participated; and the Senate by a majority, I do not remember how large, decided that it insisted upon that charge; and two of the conferees that we sent to represent us in the contest with the House had voted against the view of the Senate. I have no doubt such a thing might happen by inadvertence, but at the same time it is a reason why the Senate should reconsider the matter and at least be fairly represented before the conference.

I object to this conference report in toto. In the first place, the manner in which they get out of this controversy, it seems to me, is simply ridiculous, to use no stronger term. The report abandons the amendment which required this fund to be charged to the Creek Indians, and this is the novel outcome of it:

But nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prevent the United States from asserting its right to be reimbursed by the Creek Nation in any future settlements therewith, the further sum of $106,799.68 expended by the United States out of the Creek orphan fund for the support of loyal Creek refugees.

As a matter of course the conferees could not surrender the claim of the United States; nor is this such a proposition, as the Senator from Massachusetts says; it is not an authority to the Secretary of the Interior to present the claim to the Creek Nation and to insist on their paying it. It simply says that nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the United States from asserting its right hereafter against the Creek Nation. As a matter of course that could not be done in any event; so that this is merely of no consequence.

Not only that, this bill as it now stands retains the payment of interest on sums that have already been paid. It provides for the payment of $247,000 with 5 per cent. interest on $176,000 from April 6, 1872. Why that particular date is fixed I do not know. The money was paid long before that; the money was paid during the war at a time when the Creek Nation had forfeited all its rights against the United States by common consent, and had no rights whatever. These treaties were abrogated, null, and void. The loyal portion of this tribe had gone into Kansas; and then by act of Congress we paid them a portion of the money and directed it to be charged to the Creek Nation, and the treaty that was made at the end of the war recognized the validity of those payments. The sections were read before; I have not got them now; but that was the effect of these treaties recognizing the validity of the payments. Now, we propose to pay them not only principal but interest.

Mr. SLATER. We pay interest from the time of the adjudication when it was ascertained in the Department that this amount was due the fund from that date. That is, the date specified in the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Suppose we do. We pay interest to no one else, not even to wounded soldiers.

Mr. DAWES. We had a fund in our hands which we bound ourselves to pay interest on, and we paid it out to somebody else. Now, we reimburse the principal, and the Senator from Ohio thinks it is strange that that carries interest.

Mr. SHERMAN. We paid that money to the Creek Indians, to the persons with whom we treated, to the persons named in the treaty, during the war when their rights—

Mr. SLATER. The Government had no more right to pay it to them than to pay it to me.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is the very point in dispute; and the fact that these two Senators, whose opinions are so diverse and opposite to the opinions of the Senate, should have represented the Senate in this controversy is an extraordinary thing. I am bound to say that, though I know the Senators are perfectly honest about this. The Creek Indians forfeited their rights; they had no claim against the United States in 1862. We paid this money over for the support of the loyal Indians; some of them probably were the very orphans embraced in this bill. We paid them the money in the midst of the war; and at the end of the war, when we revived the treaties to some extent, these payments were in substance recognized, as I showed in the debate before; and now, upon a statement made by the Secretary of the Interior, not an adjudication in a formal way, it is proposed to pay them not only the principal sum but the interest. It seems to me there is no hurry about this matter.

There is another clause in the bill, as now arranged, that I think indicates pretty much the reason why it is so strongly pressed upon us. There is a provision that it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior—

To see that said moneys are deposited in the Treasury, as now provided by law, for Indian trust funds, and the interest thereon only shall be paid to the actual beneficiaries under said law, the orphans and their heirs, to the exclusion of all claims by attorneys for fees.

That is all fair enough; it is to go to the Indians; but there is this remarkable exception:

Except such reasonable attorneys' fees as shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior after the passage of this act.

So that practically we are paying to claim agents, who are represented here as attorneys, not only the principal of a sum that we have already paid but interest on that sum. I think that is an extraordinary claim. If we are going to revive claims of this character there is no end of them. Here the amount involved is $400,000, the item of $176,000 with interest at 5 per cent. from a certain date alone making about $300,000.

It seems to me that this report ought to be recommended to another conference, merely because the Senate as yet has not been represented before the House conferees by gentlemen in favor of the Senate proposition, and, for another reason, because the conference report does not fairly represent the deliberate judgment of the Senate after long debate.

Mr. McMILLAN. I would add as a further reason that the Senate conferee who did represent the views of the majority of the Senate disagreed to this report, refused to concur in it.

Mr. COCKRELL. What motion does the Senator from Ohio make?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am opposed to the report. I would move that we further insist on our amendments and appoint another committee of conference; but the usual way is first to disagree to the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is on the adoption of the report.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the report is not adopted, then as a matter of course the next motion will be that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and appoint another committee of conference.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the report will not be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the report.

Mr. SLATER. Mr. President, I regret that the opposition to this conference report has taken the turn that it has, and I regret further that Senators should fail to look at the fact that the disagreement of the House with the Senate bill was upon more than one amendment, and it would be unreasonable that the conference committee should be made with a view only to having a majority of that committee composed of the friends of one amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. What were the other amendments?

Mr. SLATER. The other amendment was quite as important as that and was in relation to whether the fund should now be paid out and closed up, the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] The original bill was amended so that instead of being paid out it should be turned into the Treasury and bear interest. The House disagreed to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. But I do not think that figures in the controversy at all.

Mr. SLATER. It certainly did figure very largely, so largely that I asked the Senate to non-concur with my colleague on the committee in that amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no recollection about that.

Mr. SLATER. I have a very distinct recollection about it, and the Senator is certainly very forgetful of the debates in this case when he gets up on the floor and makes such statements. It would seem unfair that we must give up all the amendments of the Senate except one in which the Senator from Ohio is interested. Then his side is to be represented and the other side not represented.

The Senator started out in his statement by saying that the suggestion at the close of the bill whereby notice, for that is all that can be said of it, is served on the Creek Nation that hereafter nothing shall be inferred from this bill to prevent the United States from making claim for reclamation of the $106,000 in future settlements, was ridiculous. If there is anything ridiculous about that, the Senator from Ohio is the author of it, for the amendment was framed with a view to a statement made by him in the discussion that I shall call the attention of the Senate to. In the debate on the bill the Senator said:

Sir, but for that stipulation the Indian treaties would not have been revived in 1866. The revival of those treaties was severely contested in the Senate of the United States because they were not more definite in regard to the sums the payment of which was revived. In consequence of that revival a claim of $1,900,000 is now pending in the Interior Department for money alleged to be due to the Creek Indians growing out of that treaty.

That is true; there is such a claim, and undoubtedly a large part of it is due to these Indians, but it is to be adjusted hereafter. The Senator continued:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. McMILLAN] will offer an amendment that will present the question whether the $176,000 ought not to be made an offset against any allowance that may hereafter be made to the Creek Indians or any stipulation growing out of the treaty of 1866. That amendment certainly ought to be adopted when it is offered.

When the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota came it did not meet this point precisely; but the amendment suggested by the conference report does meet the proposition of the Senator from Ohio precisely, and serves notice on the Creek Nation that hereafter when this other matter is to be adjusted they may anticipate that this claim for $106,000 will be presented for reclamation, and there, sir, may properly be presented.

Any inference from the bill now passed is negated in favor of the supposition to have the matter closed up. The Senate bill proposes simply a conversion of an individual fund of individual members of the Creek tribe, not the tribe itself, to some certain individuals under the name and denomination of the Creek orphans. It is not proper and is not necessary to bring in the adjustment of the tribe when the tribe are not here, and as there are other matters pending between the tribe and the United States it is entirely proper that this matter should be remitted to that tribe. I do not think it is necessary to dwell further upon it, and I am willing to vote.

Mr. DAWES. One moment before the vote is taken. I desire to put it on record that the proposition of the Senator from Ohio is, that, having previous to 1872 perverted to other uses a trust fund we were bound to pay 5 per cent. on, he complains that now, having perverted it ourselves, we are required not only to refund the principal, but to pay that interest; so that the proposition is to get clear of the interest by stealing the fund. That is the proposition.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator says I go upon that supposition, I deny it.

Mr. DAWES. I know the Senator denies that, but that is the fair construction. I do not mean to say that the Senator would put his own motion into that language. I should not have got up if he had put it into plain English himself. Here is a trust fund that both Houses declare was a trust fund upon which we were bound to pay 5 per cent. interest. Both Houses have declared that previous to 1872 the United States took so much of it and paid it elsewhere, and both Houses say that that should be restored. The bill says that along with it should come the 5 per cent. we were bound to pay on it, and the Senator says that we never did such a thing as that. I desire to say no more. I record my name on this side, that when I am caught perverting a trust put in my hands I will not whine about paying the interest on that trust.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I want to say a few words before the report is voted on. There seems again to be a misapprehension here as to whether the Creek Nation is due anything to the United States Government. This was a trust fund that the United States was bound to protect; the President of the United States was the trustee; and the fund was misapplied, and the trustee, the United States, represented by the President, was liable to make good the fund.

That question, as I understand it, the Senate has adjudicated. We determined by a majority when we passed the bill that the fund ought to be paid back to the Creek orphans, but we coupled with it a provision that $106,000 of it when paid to the Creek orphans should be charged back to the Creek Nation; and that is the main point in controversy. Charged back, why? Because it is alleged that the Creek Nation was in rebellion, and that this amount of $106,000 was taken from the fund belonging to the Creek orphans and used to pay loyal refugees of the Creek Nation who were in Kansas.

The then governor of Kansas, Governor Crawford, was in the city here a short time ago, if he is not here now, and a very intelligent gentleman who conversed with him told me that the governor said that while we were feeding these loyal Creeks who were refugees in Kansas, there were other Indians of other tribes, and other tramps, who went to live with them and who were fed with them; that a large part of this fund was expended not on loyal Creeks but on a motley mob who were gathered there, they being among the number; and that it was proven to him, then governor, that a large part of all the beef that was fed to them were the cattle of the Creek Nation that were driven there to be fed to them. They were supported, in other words, upon their own meat; their own cattle were used to feed them. Other Indians of other tribes were fed there at the same time; and then the whole amount of $106,000, much of which dishonest agents may have put in their pockets, was charged up against the Creek orphan fund. The Senate said, the Creek orphans must be paid, but we will charge that amount to the Creek Nation.

If you turn to the treaty of 1866 it appears that there was then a settlement made by the Creek Nation with the United States for its participation in the rebellion. There was, as the letter from the Indian Commissioner now lying on the table shows, $200,000 of the annuities due to the Creek Nation taken by the United States and applied to the purposes of the United States on account of the conduct of the Creek Nation in rebellion, and $100,000 more that he refers to taken on account of this feeding of the loyal refugees. That was taken in full settlement of the account between the United States and the Creek Nation growing out of the rebellion.

To sum it up, the cattle of the Creek Nation were taken and used in great degree to feed the refugees in Kansas. Only part of those refugees were loyal Creeks; many of them belonged to other tribes, and some white men were there who were not of the tribes and yet were supported with them. Then $100,000 is charged up on account of that fact to the Creek orphan fund. We say that cannot be done.

The Senate has decided that question in the passage of the bill, but we say by the Senate's amendment in reference to that matter that the $106,000 that was used in the way I have spoken of shall be charged back to the Creek Nation. That is not right. Charged back why? Charged back on account of the rebellion of the Creek Nation and its disloyalty during the war. Yet in a treaty after the war was over it paid $100,000 out of its fund and $200,000 out of its annuities in settlement of that matter, and it is agreed in that treaty that it is to stand settled and they are to make no further claims on account of these annuities, and the Government takes it in settlement. Yet we propose now to charge back this $106,000 as an additional sum to the Creek Nation. There is no principle of justice, equity, common sense, or reason upon which it can be done.

I think the committee of conference has gone a long way when it has even left that question open by this report for any future adjudication or adjustment. It has been already adjusted. We have decided that we owe the fund to the Creek orphans. The Creek Nation has settled for its participation in rebellion, and there is nothing due to the United States from the Creek Nation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in; there being on a division—ayes 29, noes 10.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; that it further insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to said bill numbered 35 and 36; that it asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GEORGE M. ROBESON of New Jersey, Mr. J. H. KETCHAM of New York, and Mr. J. D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee, the conferees on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 97) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of Acting Assistant Paymaster Edward K. Winship, United States Navy.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. No. 2299) relinquishing the title which still remains in the United States to all lots or portions of ground which lie within the limits of the present city of Burlington, State of Iowa, to the said city of Burlington; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. MORRILL. I insist on the regular order.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. HARRIS to strike out section 4, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That all taxes and customs duties imposed by laws now in force for the collection of duties on imports from foreign countries shall be subject to a discount of 10 per cent. after the 1st day of January, 1883, and to a discount of an additional 10 per cent. after the 1st day of January, 1884.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS.]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, yesterday, when I had the honor to address the Senate, I was misled somewhat as to the dates of certain amendments that were offered, not having the records before me at the time. I said the first amendment looking to the reduction of tariff taxation was offered by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB,] and I said it was on the 7th day of July, the day after the bill was reported. That statement was correct, but not absolutely so; it was the first amendment offered after the bill was reported; but when my attention was called to the fact that I had offered an amendment looking to a reduction of tariff taxation on Bessemer steel before that time it occurred to me that it was so, and I so admitted. It turns out that I did offer such an amendment on the 28th of June, and yet my first statement was correct, because the first amendment offered looking to a reduction of tariff taxation was offered by the Senator from Kansas when the bill was first referred. I have the RECORD now of June 29, 1882, containing the proceedings of June 28. It reads thus on page 33:

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce the internal-revenue taxation was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

On the same day, page 37, the following occurred:

Mr. PLUMB. I offer an amendment to the internal-revenue bill, and move its reference to the Committee on Finance and that it be printed.

Mr. BECK. Let the amendment be read. I desire to know what it is.

The Acting Secretary read the proposed amendment, as follows:

"That the imposition of an increase of 25 per cent. upon the import duty on the products of cane imposed by section 3 of the act of March 3, 1875, being chapter 127 of the statutes of 1875, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the duty on the products of cane imported into the United States after the passage of this act be restored to the rate prevailing before the passage of said last-mentioned act."

Mr. PLUMB. That is intended, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky, to repeal the 25 per cent. import duty imposed on sugar by the law of 1875 and restore it to the duty that prevailed before the passage of that act.

The amendment was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BECK. I should like to offer an amendment to the same bill. I did not know amendments to it were being offered now. Let it be referred to the Committee on Finance after being read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky to the revenue bill will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

"That from and after the passage of this act the tariff duty of $28 per ton on Bessemer-steel rails shall be reduced to $14 per ton."

The amendment was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

So I was strictly accurate as to the fact, but not quite accurate as to the date of the first introduction. When the bill was reported from the committee the Senator from Kansas, on the 7th of July, before any other amendment was offered looking to tariff taxation, there being nothing on that subject in the bill, offered in the Senate his amendment relative to the sugar tariff, and I, either that day or the next—I have not looked that up—laid before the Senate the amendment I had offered for the reduction of the duty on Bessemer-steel rails. I did not expect the debate to come up yesterday, or the Senator from Ohio to put the questions that he did, and not having the date before me I was a little confused.

Mr. SHERMAN. I beg pardon of the Senator; it was the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] I said nothing about the date of the amendment, for I did not remember about the date. The Senator from Vermont made the statement.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Vermont happened to find the amendment that I had offered to the bill, but he did not see the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas, which was on the same page of the RECORD and only a few lines above mine. Of course it escaped his observation, although it was three times as long and much more prominent than the one I offered when he challenged the accuracy of my statement.

I was criticised quite sharply on yesterday, too, by divers gentlemen, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] among others. He seemed to congratulate the country on the fact that he could make much political capital by opposing anything that I advocated, and when any blunder was about to be made by his party he insisted that I always relieved them by doing some very foolish thing, or offering some very unreasonable proposition. Perhaps he may make votes in Massachusetts, but I doubt whether he will in other sections of the country. I desire now, since I am on the floor, to say a few words relative to his position. The Senator from Massachusetts yesterday used these words:

Mr. President, there never came out of a lunatic asylum a proposition so monstrous, so indefensible, so destructive as that which is proposed by this party, equal in numbers to one-half the American Senate, as the condition upon which they will permit the burden of thirty or forty millions of taxation to be lifted from the shoulders of the American people.

Why, look at the absurdity of their position in another point of view. There are thirty-five amendments pending, proposed on that side of the Chamber, of tariff legislation in this bill, as I understand, going over, in addition to this 10 per cent. reduction, every item of dutiable article. Such a bill they propose to send down to the House of Representatives on the 1st of August, or thereabout, after the two or three weeks of discussion which it will require shall be over in the Senate.

That is all I care to read from his speech. As I said yesterday, we are obliged to wait until revenue bills come to us from the House of Representatives. The Senate has no constitutional power to originate tax bills; it has no power to consider anything in regard to taxation till some measure comes from the House, and if we part with this bill now without making the proper reductions of tariff duties, reducing such as ought to be reduced, the Senate is not only powerless for the remainder of this session but powerless for the remainder of this Congress, unless we take the desperate chance of the House the next short session sending us another bill. Therefore, I insist if the Senate proposes to do anything to give relief to the people, or to consider any legislation in regard to tariff taxation, it is compelled to act now or abandon its power to act at all. It is for that reason, having the bill before us and knowing as well as I know anything that no other tax bill will ever come to us, I am seeking to make proper amendments to the bill now under consideration.

Complaint was made yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts and others relative to the character of amendments that we are proposing. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] insists that the reduction of 10 per cent. now and the proposed reduction of 10 per cent. in a year from now is a monstrous proposition, and that we are by making it seeking to deprive the country of the benefit of the reduction of twenty or thirty million dollars that the little House bill proposed. I have looked with some care, and I find that the proportion of bankers and of bank capital in the New England States as compared with the great States of the Southwest is nearly as five to one, and the relief is nearly as five to one to those individual men, and I have no doubt that to the patent-medicine men it is five or ten to one. The only relief that is given is to those individuals, and is in the interest of a section, and not of the whole country.

I have looked again at the bill which was brought before the Senate by the committee or the caucus, I care not which—and I do not speak of the caucus with the contempt which Republican Senators used to speak of the Democratic caucus when we had power in this Chamber. I read their speeches on that subject over some days ago, and threw them aside again as useless and worthless, the speeches made by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] the then Senator from New York, Mr. Conkling, and other distinguished Senators on the other side, in which they spoke of the caucus as being an unknown thing in the Republican party. It was called by the then Senator from New York, an ecumenical council, and it was said we were not free to vote as we pleased because caucus dictation had ordered us to vote in a particular way. We never went half the length that the Republican caucus did the other day, which ordered the Committee on Finance to bring in the amendments it did; but I will say for that caucus that it did a very decent and a very sensible thing.

Among other things it took up the Plumb amendment, as I said yesterday, adding, to please the Senator from Ohio, the polariscope to it, which however did not meet with much favor in the Senate. It took up the McKinley bill from the House of Representatives, which was reported there on the 16th day of January. That bill sought to impose additional duties on cotton-ties, raising the tax on them from 35 to say 70 per cent., and added additional duties upon steel blooms and other articles, raising them from 30 per cent. to about 75 per cent. When the caucus got hold of the McKinley bill and made it a part of their amendments to the bill before us, Senators will observe that both the caucus and the Senate Finance Committee adopted all that part of the McKinley bill which increases the duty upon cotton-ties from 35 to 70 per cent. ad valorem and added to the taxes of the Southern people about $680,000, under the pretense of giving relief, but left off all that portion of the McKinley bill which raised the tariff taxation on steel blooms and steel rods from 30 per cent. to 70 or 75 per cent. That was done for what I suppose were very satisfactory reasons to that party, and I propose to show how unworthy they are of support in this body.

The New York Herald of this morning contains an article which I believe has a great deal of truth in it. The Senator from Massachusetts perhaps can tell how much if anything there is in it that is not true. It was written by a very intelligent man, one well advised as to the facts. I will read it:

SPURIOUS TAX REDUCTION—HOW SENATOR HOAR LOOKS OUT FOR FAVORED CONSTITUENTS.

The Senate took up to-day once more the bill which pretends to reduce taxes, but which, in fact, has been so manipulated that it makes very trifling reductions in some taxes while it shrewdly and needlessly raises the duties on other articles. The dispute to-day in the Senate was mainly concerning which party was to blame for the failure of this sham bill.

Senator HOAR, who is very fond of a jibe, insinuated that Senator BAYARD had opposed the bill because he had some neighbors engaged in the manufacture of matches who did not want the match stamp abolished. Mr. HOAR added that so far as the Republican party was concerned, if the bill should fail he would have no regrets, but he would be sorry for his constituents and the suffering people.

Now, the advantage to the public of abolishing the match stamp is an open question. That is to say, there is room for an honest division of opinion on the question whether matches will be cheaper by taking off the stamp tax and surrendering $3,000,000 of revenue. It is believed by many persons who have looked into it that the revenue thus surrendered would go into the pockets of the match manufacturers. But as Senator HOAR attacks Senator BAYARD's motives in hesitating to abolish this stamp tax, he cannot complain if his own relations to and interests in another part of the bill are explained to the public.

Mr. HOAR's principal constituent is the Washburn and Moen Manufacturing Company, whose great wire works are at Worcester, where Mr. HOAR lives, and for whose interests, as is well known to members of both Houses, he has always sedulously cared. Although this company makes every kind of wire-work its chief product for the last two years has been barbed fence-wire and wire bands for baling cotton and hay. The raw material used by the company in the manufacture of these articles is steel-wire rods, which, as the law now stands, are subject to a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem.

The McKinley bill, which is the basis of the Senate's amendment to the House revenue bill, proposed to raise the duty on steel-wire rods to 2½ cents a pound, which would be about 120 per cent., instead of 30 as now. It is also proposed to raise the duty on cotton and hay bands. When this McKinley proposition appeared in the Senate in the form of an amendment to the revenue bill, it is a suggestive fact that the duty on bands was raised while the duty on wire rods was left unchanged at 30 per cent. Thus it will be seen that Mr. HOAR's favorite constituents got the benefit of an increased duty on their product, while their raw material is still procurable by them at a rate which is utterly unprotective. The interests of the Washburn and Moen Company, Mr. HOAR's constituents, were thus guarded at both ends.

The enormous value of this little attention to their interests will be seen when it is known that the Washburn & Moen Company will produce this year at least 40,000 tons of barbed fence-wire, and that the whole consumption is estimated at at least 60,000 tons, on all which, as owners of the patent, they get a royalty of $12.50 per ton, in addition to the enormous profits incident to getting their raw material at 30 per cent. duty and selling it in the form of wire protected by a 75 per cent. duty. This is the price which the farmers of the country are paying to Mr. HOAR's constituents, and this explains why even the proposition to reduce the tariff all around only 10 per cent. was so stoutly resisted by Mr. HOAR, because it would only reduce the raw material which this company buys 3 per cent., while it would take 7½ per cent. off the finished product which they sell to the farmers.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator explain as he goes along how a reduction of 10 per cent. would only reduce the raw material 3 per cent.?

Mr. BECK. It will reduce the duty on iron rods, which is now 30 per cent., only 3, whereas it reduces the duty on barbed wire, which is 75 per cent., 7½ or 9 per cent. The statement is absolutely true, and this statement, let me tell the Senator, when he comes to analyze it, had better be very carefully looked into before it is contradicted. The Herald article continues:

This is another case, like that of the Bessemer-steel works, where the profits to the capitalists are made by a cunning arrangement of the tariff so great that they exceed the whole amount earned by the workmen engaged in it.

Other remarks are made, but I do not care to read further. I do not know that the Senator from Massachusetts, in his great desire to relieve from taxation, had anything to do with so arranging the McKinley bill as to produce this result, but the fact remains that the McKinley bill, which sought to impose a tax upon all these different classes and increase them up to 70, 75, or 100 per cent., when it came to the Senate and got into caucus was put in a shape that did so arrange it as to tax the Southern man who has to use the cotton-tie on his cotton-bale from $700,000 to $800,000 more than he has to pay now, and left the steel rods, the material out of which the barbed fence-wire is made, which all of the men in the West have to use, down to 30 per cent., leaving the Washburn and Moen Company, with their wire at the lowest rate, and keeping up that tariff of 75 per cent. upon the finished barbed wire the farmer has to buy.

Mr. VEST. Besides paying a royalty.

Mr. BECK. And then they pay twelve and a half dollars a ton royalty because of the patent held by these gentlemen. The difficulty we have all along the line is the same as with the Bessemer-steel men, who are protected by an English patent, and now I understand they have some adjuncts and English patents to continue their monopoly by patent besides a tariff protection of over 100 per cent., which is simply robbery, and comes out of the pockets of every man who takes his wheat or corn or products to market, or who travels over the railroads of the country—making, as I have proved before on this floor, the men of this country who have anything to ship or have occasion to travel to pay to the railroad men, in order to give to the men of the United States the same profit that the men in Mexico and the men in Canada had, at least 33 per cent. more than others ask, in order to enable the American railroad owner to realize the same profit which the Canadian and the Mexican owners of railroads do, because of the tariff on Bessemer steel; yet when we seek relief and expose this little personal bill we are charged—

Mr. HOAR. I wonder if the Senator from Kentucky would permit me to reply to one point right here in a word.

Mr. BECK. I would rather finish what I am going to say, but I rarely decline to be interrupted. I would rather yield for a question, however.

Mr. HOAR. I merely wanted to interpose a denial to what the Senator has said. I wish to say to the Senator from Kentucky that in regard to the Washburn and Moen Wire Manufacturing Company it is true that its owners are my near neighbors, my constituents, in the city where I dwell. Its great force of skilled laborers make up a very important part of the population of my State. I suppose more than twelve thousand persons, I mean the laborers and their families, derive their support from this industry, and are very largely paid, having the pay of skilled laborers. I wish to say further that I should deem it, and do deem it, as a part of my duty here to look out carefully and properly as I may in all lawful and righteous ways for that as for every other industry in Massachusetts, no more and no less.

Mr. BECK. The Senator has done that well. I agree to that.

Mr. HOAR. In making the allusion which I made to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] yesterday, as I said afterward, I had not a thought of imputing to that honorable Senator any other motive than the natural motive which leads a man to look out for the constituency which send him here. I had not a thought of alluding to him when I rose. I made a general statement that I believed the provisions of this tax-reduction bill had the support of every Democrat, every Senator, substantially in the body. When I had made that general statement it crossed my mind that the Senator from Delaware disapproved of the reduction of the tax on matches, and I qualified it by saying except the Senator from Delaware, who thinks that his neighbor match-maker, &c., whatever I said; I do not remember the language. That was the way it came about.

In regard to the article which the Senator from Kentucky has read, I have not heard from any person connected with the Washburn and Moen Manufacturing Company this winter upon any tariff question whatever. I do not believe that any proposed reduction in the tariff which has been alluded to here in debate affects them in the least. The provision in the bill relates to "manufactures, articles, vessels, and wares made from hoop, band, or scroll iron, or of which hoop, band, or scroll iron shall be the component material of chief value, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the same duty or rate of duty as that imposed on the hoop, band, or scroll iron from which they are made."

I am not very well informed of the details of any manufacturing industry, not so well as I wish I was; but I do not suppose that they manufacture anything from hoop, band, or scroll iron. If they do it is unknown to me. I do not believe that the reduction of the tariff 10 per cent. all around would have the slightest effect on that institution. As the Senator has well said, they are protected by patents, very largely the result of the inventions of persons in their employ, some of them the inventions of Mr. Washburn, the original founder, although those have almost all expired I suppose by this time, and by the skill and capacity of the class of laborers that they have established; and they can defy foreign competition, as I said before. While I suppose the entire abolition of duties would injure them very much, it never occurred to me to think of them, and does not now, in connection with any tariff proposition that I made this session. The whole thing is a pure piece of idle and ridiculous malice so far as it imputes any such motive to me, if I heard the article read correctly, as is imputed in the newspaper that the Senator read.

Mr. BECK. Nobody charged that the Senator was written to by these gentlemen during the session or at any other time. Everybody assumes that he knows enough about the effect of the tariff.

Mr. HOAR. My denial goes a great deal further than that. I say not only that I have not been written to but I say that the matter never crossed my mind, and it does not now. I have not the slightest belief that that institution is in any way interested in any pending tariff proposition whatever, unless it should be to some general proposition to repeal altogether all duties 10 per cent.

Mr. BECK. I have no suggestion to make except that I believe every fact stated in that article relative to the effect of the duties upon that establishment in Worcester is substantially correct, leaving out the Senator altogether, who cuts a very small figure, as I do, in this great question.

He seemed to think that it was an extremely important thing to show that two years ago I had made a great mistake on this floor in some speech, and he had been able to make political capital out of it. I might have told him of a very able speech he at one time made during the Belknap trial, out of which perhaps some capital was made on the other side. But all that is very trashy in discussing a question of this sort; the remarkable fact remains that under a bill to reduce taxation and to give relief only two industries, and those seriously affecting the men of the Southern States, sugar and cotton-ties, could be found in all the list of tariff duties (except a little false pretense of reducing the duty from $23 to $20 a ton on Bessemer steel, which was forced on them) on which tariff taxation could be reduced. When they had voluntarily thrown into the Senate a proposition for the reduction of tariff taxation it is very remarkable when the McKinley bill was before them and it had been long pending in the House, and its provisions were well understood, that they should strike everything else out of it except what injured the South. I have that bill before me, and I will read it:

Be it enacted, &c., That hereafter on all iron or steel, and on all manufactures, wares, vessels, and articles of iron or steel, (excepting steel rails,) or of which such metals, or either of them, shall be the component part or material of chief value, whether wholly or partially manufactured, there shall be levied, collected, and paid no less rate of duty than the duty or rate of duty imposed upon said goods, or any part or material of said goods, in any of the forms which it or they last existed prior to their passing into the form or article on which the duty is to be levied.

It is, I repeat, very remarkable that they should strike from that bill all that it applied to except cotton-ties, and under the pretense of giving relief from taxation should double the cost of cotton-ties by raising the tax from 35 to 70 or 75 per cent., and strike out all else, so as to relieve the Washburn and Moen Company, who are protected first by a patent that gives them a royalty of twelve dollars and a half a ton and by a 75 per cent. protective tariff on their product. It is a strange coincidence. Somebody knew about it in that caucus. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] may not be well advised, but there were well-advised men in the Republican party that night when they concocted this scheme, arranged these items so skillfully, and brought the measure before the Senate. That was not an accident; it did not happen that way. It was done for a purpose, and it was done to take all the money they could wrongfully or forcibly out of the pockets of these men in the South who are baling their cotton and have to bale it, and out of every man who puts a hoop-band on a beer-barrel or a pork-barrel or anything else, and instead of paying as now 35 per cent., making them pay 75 per cent. duty to a few men living in Massachusetts, protected by patents, claiming pay for royalty, and then making the Government of the United States coerce out of its citizens 75 per cent. more than the article is worth to enrich them at the common expense of all the farmers of the country, and when 71 per cent. of all that cotton has to be sent to foreign markets to compete with the products of pauper labor—that I believe is the patriotic way of expressing it—

Mr. DAWES. I should like for the Senator to be a little specific. Who are those gentlemen in Massachusetts who are benefited by hoop-iron?

Mr. BECK. Was not the Senator here a moment ago when I read the article from the Herald? I will send it to him.

Mr. DAWES. I do not care about the Herald.

Mr. BECK. I hope the Senator will read the article about the Washburn and Moen Company of Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. What have they to do with hoop-iron in fencing?

Mr. BECK. They have to do very largely with wire fence.

Mr. DAWES. Oh, with wire fence; but the Senator spoke of hoop-iron. Because they make wire fence, the Senator thinks they are interested in hoop-iron.

Mr. BECK. My impression is, though I do not know, because this article may not say so, that they are large manufacturers of hoop-iron. Still I am not sure.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator ought to know. The Senator seems not to know; and I would suggest to him that it would improve his speech considerably if he would be better informed about the subject of which he is speaking.

Mr. BECK. It seems the Senator from Massachusetts wants to come to the aid of his colleague. Either one of those distinguished gentlemen can do enough scolding without backing each other.

Mr. DAWES. All I ask of the Senator is to state the facts.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon; I have here the information that I believe to be true.

Mr. DAWES. What is it about? Is it about anybody in Massachusetts having anything to do with hoop-iron?

Mr. BECK. It is this; I read again:

Mr. HOAR's principal constituent is the Washburn and Moen Manufacturing Company, whose great wire works are at Worcester, where Mr. HOAR lives, and for whose interests, as is well known to members of both Houses, he has always sedulously cared. Although this company makes every kind of wire-work, its chief product for the last two years has been barbed fence-wire and wire bands for baling cotton and hay.

Is that true or not true?

Mr. DAWES. It is not true.

Mr. BECK. I undertake to say now, in the face of that denial, that it is true; and I expect to be able to furnish the proof.

Mr. DAWES. I do not suppose the Senator means to state what is not so, and I do not intend to. I state it according to my information.

Mr. BECK. The Senator's information is not half as good as the information of the man who wrote this article. Let me ask the Senator this question—

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me to say that his information is precisely like that which he read from a newspaper the other day.

Mr. BECK. No, it is not, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator does not assume to communicate anything but what he reads from the New York Herald.

Mr. BECK. I asserted in the beginning that the gentleman who wrote this article was a well-informed man, of the accuracy of whose statements I had no doubt. I know who wrote this article. I did not know who wrote the other article. No man who knows the writer of this article will pretend to assume that he says anything that he does not believe to be true; and therefore I believe it.

Mr. DAWES. I will not take any issue with the Senator on that point, any more than I would that he would state himself what he did not think was so. I do not think the Senator would do it; nor do I think the Senator would indorse anybody who would.

Mr. BECK. Then why am I contradicted as to a statement of fact when the Senator does not know but what it is true? I ask him this other question: do those gentlemen obtain a royalty for the patent of twelve dollars and a half per ton in addition to the 75 per cent.

protective tariff on each ton of barbed wire they make? Do they or do they not?

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President—

Mr. BECK. Does the Senator know whether they do or not?

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator let me have the floor long enough to answer him?

Mr. BECK. I want an answer to that question.

Mr. DAWES. My colleague has stated the exact fact about the wire fence.

Mr. BECK. No, he has not. He did not know.

Mr. DAWES. So far as I know they are the exact facts. I will simply add that by means of their ingenuity and their enterprise they have furnished every farmer of the West and of the South with a material to make a fence of for one-third what they could otherwise have made their fence for; and the complaint is that by their enterprise and their ingenuity they have prospered in conferring a greater blessing upon the farmer on the prairie and in the South than any other men in the country. That is the complaint.

Mr. BECK. The Senator has failed to answer whether it is true that they received a royalty of twelve dollars and a half a ton on their barbed wire for fences. He knows they have a protective duty of 75 per cent. upon other rods. If they are furnishing these wires cheaper than the farmers of the West could get them anywhere else, why should all the people of this country pay 75 cents to keep anybody else from competing with them?

Mr. DAWES. The duty upon wire has nothing to do with the cost of a wire fence. They own the patent because they made the patent, and it is just as much theirs as the gentleman's horse is his. There is no more right to say that they shall not set a price upon their own work than that the Senator from Kentucky shall not set a price upon his own horse. One is earned as much by his industry as the other is. So far as they are concerned, you may take all the duty off you please of the wire; nobody else can make that barbed wire then, because nobody else had ingenuity enough to invent that method. Does the Senator want to get it away from them without paying them for it?

Mr. BECK. I hope somebody will move an amendment, on the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, to strike off the 75 per cent. duty on barbed wire for fencing in the West, and make it free, and allow those gentlemen to rely on their patent, and see what it is worth to them.

Mr. DAWES. There is not any such thing in the tariff as barbed wire.

Mr. BECK. Such an amendment I will endeavor to offer at the proper time.

Mr. DAWES. Nobody makes it abroad.

Mr. BECK. I should like to hear the Senator advocate it when the proper time comes.

Mr. HOAR. These people supply the South American market at the same price they do the American. Foreigners cannot compete with them.

Mr. BECK. That is a good argument to show that the 75 per cent. tariff upon barbed wire ought to be taken off, and that it ought to be a free article.

Mr. DAWES. There is not any 75 per cent. on barbed wire. The Senator cannot find it except in the New York Herald.

Mr. BECK. What is there?

Mr. DAWES. There is not a penny, so far as I have ever heard of it.

Mr. BECK. On steel wire, such as is used for fence, there is a duty of 24 cents a pound.

Mr. DAWES. That is not what a barbed fence is made of.

Mr. BECK. I believe the Senator from Massachusetts, who used to be chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and was at one time well advised, in his zeal to aid his colleague has forgotten what little he ever did know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The hour has arrived at which the cattle bill was set aside to be taken up. I do not want to interfere with my colleague, who is on the floor, and with the understanding that bill shall be taken up when he is through I will not press it now. Still, I want that understanding.

Mr. HOAR. That bill does not displace the previous order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair.) Does the Chair understand that the hour of two o'clock was fixed by a vote of the Senate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was fixed by a vote of the Senate yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the bill was postponed until two o'clock to-day.

Mr. HOAR. Which is a very different thing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want to interfere with my colleague, who is on the floor.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator propose to let anybody reply to his colleague?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will agree to an understanding that some Senator may reply to him, and then I shall be allowed to call up the bill.

Mr. BECK. I hope my colleague will not seek to protect me by a flank movement, as the Senator from Massachusetts does his colleague.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggest that the understanding be that after my colleague concludes and somebody replies to him then the cattle bill shall be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be, the Chair supposes, in the discretion of the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I will now read the tariff on steel wire from Heyl's Digest:

Steel not less than one-fourth inch in diameter, valued at 7 cents per pound or less, (1038,) 24 cents per pound.

The same valued above 7 cents and not above 11 cents per pound, (1038,) 3 cents per pound.

The same valued above 11 cents per pound, (1038,) 34 cents per pound; and Steel less than one-fourth inch in diameter and not less than No. 16 wire gauge, (1039,) 24 cents per pound; and less or finer than No. 16 wire gauge, (1039,) 3 cents per pound.

This is the wire they make barbed wire from, as I understand. That is what Heyl's Digest gives as the tariff duty.

But I have shown, I think, that this question has been brought before the Senate by gentlemen on the other side on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas, and next by the caucus order. These amendments as to wire and ties are of a very remarkable character. As a good deal has been said against our action in seeking to take off 10 per cent. now and 10 per cent. in a year from the 1st of January, I desire to read a few extracts from the speech of Mr. Banks, of Massachusetts, on the 7th of May, 1878, in the House of Representatives, then speaking for the manufacturers of New England as to what could have been properly done in regard to a horizontal reduction of this character.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] yesterday read the yeas and nays of the House of Representatives, showing that the reduction of 10 per cent. upon all those classes of articles in 1872 not only met with the assent of both the present Senators from Massachusetts, then members of the House but that it passed with only three dissenting voices in the Senate of the United States, and when a conference committee was called on the disagreement the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] represented the Republican party in the Senate, and the present chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, and the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] then chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, represented the Republican party in the House, and it was then agreed to as a proper thing to do, and as the least that could be done. In 1878, when the Democratic party came into power in the House, and when it was believed that some earnest effort would be made to reduce taxation, Mr. Banks, of Massachusetts, a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, used this language:

Therefore, sir, when I was placed by the honorable Speaker of the House upon the Committee on Ways and Means, and was notified by the chairman that we were to consider a bill for the reduction of the duties upon imports, I said to the people whom I represent: "It is better for you to consider the condition of the country, ascertain what is necessary for the full security and protection of the interests in which you are engaged, and make a statement, if you please, to the committee of the House, setting forth what you think will be expedient, necessary, and just for the Government and yourselves." Now, sir, these gentlemen did not act upon this question as extremists, but as judicious friends of American industry and the Government which they serve and honor. These papers which I hold in my hand bear the official signatures of the authorized representatives of one hundred and twelve manufacturing corporations and firms of New England, in which they themselves suggest and consent to reduction of duties upon an extended and complete list of articles of foreign manufacture which come actively and directly in competition with the industries in which they are engaged, rising from 10 to 20, 30, 40, and 50 per cent. upon the present schedule of duties upon such importations. More than a hundred and twelve corporations and firms of cotton and woolen manufacturers alone, of their own choice, and after repeated conferences, in which all the interests of the textile fabrics of this country were considered, high and low, made this proposition. They are not to be regarded or condemned, therefore, as extremists, fanatics, or corruptionists upon the subject of American manufacturing industry. They embrace and represent the entire manufacturing interest of New England, where the manufacture of American cotton fabrics originated.

But if it is thought to be necessary to reduce duties or taxes, they are willing to take their share of whatever disadvantages may follow, and they voluntarily recommended the retention of the frame-work of the present tariff, and consented to and advised a reduction of duties affecting the industry in which they are engaged from 10 to 50 per cent., leaving only one branch of their industries unchanged, and that one the most delicate, complicated, expensive, and novel of all their products.

Now, sir, how can the honorable gentleman from New York, [Mr. Wood,] the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, state, as he stated in his speech the other day, that nobody opposes this bill except friends of the extreme doctrine of protection? As it was with the cotton manufacturers, so it is with the woolen manufacturers. They consented to and in a certain sense recommended, as of their own accord, a reduction of duties of from 23 to 25 per cent. And as regards that still more delicate and less firmly established branch of industry, the manufacture of silk, for which the people of this country have long struggled, an industry which has given wealth to the most prosperous and richest states of the globe, this, too, came forward after anxious deliberation and made what the chairman called a most liberal proposition in the way of reduction of duties with which they had been and are now protected by the Government.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him why these interests asked a diminution of the tariff?

Mr. BANKS. Because their attention had been called to the subject. It was their duty to make known to the Government what they desired. They found when they brought their representative men together from all parts of the country that the duties could be reduced and they could still pursue their vocations with more or less success, and like honest and honorable citizens they made that declaration to the Government. And so did the wool-growers from California to New England. They assembled in the State of New York for the same purpose, and after long and anxious conference one with another and with the woolen manufacturers they agreed, as did the silk manufacturers, to what extent they would recommend a reduction of the duty.

The following is a schedule of the reductions proposed by New England manufacturers. The plan proposed by New England manufacturers in the schedule to which I have referred, and which I have not time to read at length, as I should like to do, suggests reduction of duties on the various fabrics of their manufacture substantially as follows:

1. On all manufactures of cotton except jeans, denims, &c., not bleached, colored, or printed, &c., and not exceeding one hundred threads to the square inch, present rate 5 cents, 54 cents, 54 cents specific, and 10 per cent. ad valorem, a reduction of 50, 45, 45, and 27.27 per cent., and 10 per cent. ad valorem.
2. On finer and lighter goods of like description and present duties nearly the same a reduction of 40, 36.35, 18.18, and 20 per cent. ad valorem.
3. On goods of like description of higher qualities, present duty nearly the same, 20, 18.18, and 20 per cent. ad valorem.
4. On jeans, denims, drillings, gingham, &c., bleached, stained, or printed, a reduction of 50, 46.15, 30.75, and 10 per cent. ad valorem.
5. On similar goods of lighter and finer descriptions a reduction of 28.57, 20, 15, and 5 per cent. ad valorem.
6. On cotton thread, yarn, warps, &c., 20 per cent. ad valorem.
7. On spool thread of cotton a reduction of 30 and 35 per cent. ad valorem.
8. On cotton cords, gimps, galloons, and cotton laces, present rate 35 per cent., a reduction of 5 per cent. ad valorem.
9. On cotton shirts, drawers, hosiery, &c., present rate 35 per cent., a reduction of 5 per cent. ad valorem.
10. On cotton velvet, present rate 35 per cent., a reduction of 5 per cent. ad valorem.
11. On cotton braids, insertings, lace, trimmings, bobbinet, and all manufactures of cotton, at present rate, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The last is the only exception made in relation to the proposed reduction of duties; they are, braids, laces, trimmings, or bobbinets, comparatively new, delicate, difficult, and expensive fabrics; and other manufactures of cotton not otherwise provided for in the schedules of the manufacturers they propose shall remain at present rate, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

That shows that they proposed from 20 to 50 per cent. reduction of their own motion, and yet we are told now, though that was proposed by General Banks in 1878, four years ago, when we as a people are more prosperous now than we were then, when bank notes, gold and silver, and silver certificates each and all are at par, when we propose to take off 10 per cent. on the 1st day of January and leave another year to run before we even ask to take off the second 10 per cent., so as to give the tariff commission a chance to report and a right to recommend any changes, a right at the next session to show why the second 10 per cent. would be too much on some things, as it may be, for surely nobody denies that the first is too much, when we go or seek to go back to the law of 1872, which was passed with universal favor, and which was rendered necessary by men of all parties because the income tax and internal-revenue taxes, the tax on manufacture and everything else, had been removed—now we are told, in the language of the Senator from Massachusetts yesterday:

There never came out of a lunatic asylum a proposition so monstrous, so indefensible, so destructive as that which is proposed by this party, equal in numbers to one-half the American Senate.

This sort of stuff is said in regard to the proposition we are now discussing, and doubtless will be as to the other which we have given notice shall follow, of reducing all taxation down to an average of 50 per cent. ad valorem. I should like to see a vote recorded upon that, and to hear some reason why men should receive higher protection of more than 50 per cent. than the goods are worth. We are called revolutionists and lunatics, and it is said the proposition is so absurd that we are to be held up to the scorn of the American people for proposing it.

I am willing when the yeas and nays are called to record my vote, as I hope to have an opportunity to do, in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, notwithstanding the denunciation of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to detain the Senate only a moment. In the first place I wish to have read the amendment prepared by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to this bill, as he offered it on the 8th of July.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. BECK to the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, namely:

Add as a new section the following:

"SEC. —. That all taxes and customs dues imposed by the United States under the laws now in force for the collection of duties on imports from foreign countries shall be subject to a discount of 10 per cent. after the 1st day of January, 1883, and to a discount of an additional 10 per cent. after the 1st day of July, 1883."

Mr. HOAR. Now read the pending amendment.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 4. That all taxes and customs duties imposed by laws now in force for the collection of duties on imports from foreign countries shall be subject to a discount of 10 per cent. after the 1st day of January, 1883, and to a discount of an additional 10 per cent. after the 1st day of January, 1884.

Mr. HOAR. By whom is that moved?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] moved to strike out section 4 and insert what has just been read.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Delaware yesterday proposed to support this proposition, which I characterized as so monstrous and destructive of the industries of the American people, by citing the example of the act of 1872. I rose to reply to the Senator from Kentucky, but—

He who fights and runs away
May live to fight another day.

They cite the example of a proposition voted for by a large portion of the Republican party in the other House and in this in the year 1872. What was that proposition? It was a proposition which did not take the entire list of dutiable articles, but it selected out from them a certain number—it is true a large number, but a number—of the most important articles, and on the 8th day of June it enacted once for all that on the 1st day of the following August, some seven weeks thereafter, there should be a single and simple reduction of 10 per cent. on the duties upon these enumerated articles. Do not these Senators see the difference between that proposition and this? This postpones the taking effect of the first reduction till the 1st day of January, in the year 1853, five months, nearly six months from the time when that amendment was originally proposed.

Then it couples it with another further reduction at the end of twelve months thereafter, and, not enumerating certain imported articles, it takes every article upon the tariff list—brandy, diamonds, foreign wines, high-priced and costly silks—all those articles of luxury which are used only by the wealthy and favored classes, and even although they are articles which are not the product of manufacture anywhere, or, if they should be manufactured anywhere, are not the products of manufacture in America for which any protection is to be designed.

But, in the next place, the fatal objection to this policy is in its graduation of the reduction and making the reduction in two distant periods. Suppose you were to repeal altogether the tariff on some article manufactured here and manufactured abroad also, this article of barbed wire. You instantly repeal the tariff on the product which the manufacturer has to buy as his material and at the same time the protection of the product which the manufacturer sells as his finished article. He instantly once for all adjusts his business to the new condition of things. The duty affecting what he buys, if you take it off altogether, the article which he buys is no more affected by the duty than the article which he sells.

That is one thing. That is the ordinary case of the repeal or reduction of duty, and that is what the manufacturers throughout the country, the New England manufacturers more especially, indicated that they were willing to have done; but here every man who desires to manufacture any article whatever, every proprietor of a workshop or a manufacturing establishment throughout the length and breadth of this land, has got between now and the 1st of next January to purchase material protected by heavy duties. I suppose that on an average in most of these manufacturing establishments the process of manufacture extends through months. He has to give his notes, incur his obligations on that basis; but on the 1st of January down comes the duty.

In the first place, before that time his orders are to be reduced to the lowest possible amount, because every buyer knows that if he waits till after the 1st of January he can purchase the article cheaper by the amount of the duty if the duty increases the price to the full extent. So every manufacturer of steel rails, every manufacturer of cottons or woollens in any form of clothing, knows that every buyer will reduce his buying to the lowest possible limit until after the 1st of January, the manufacturer on the other hand having to purchase all the material for his manufacture at a high rate of duty. That to happen once is enough to strike dismay into every manufacturing establishment which is in the least affected by this proceeding; but it has been done once. These men, crippled, embarrassed, some of them bankrupt, how are they to hope to revive their industry after the 1st of January? No; there stares in the face of every one of them seeking to recover from this first blow a repetition of the same blow which is to take effect within the brief space of twelve months thereafter.

Is the Senator from Kentucky so driven for a device and a pretext for this monstrous proposition that he fails to see that he has to resort to the example of a simple reduction of duties on certain important enumerated articles which was to take place within the space of six or seven weeks from the passage of the act? That is all, Mr. President, that I wish to say upon this point.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] yesterday, and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to-day, alluded to a 10 per cent. reduction which was made of the tariff in 1872. That was simply one feature of a tariff bill which passed in 1872; and those gentlemen made no allusion to any other features of it. I desire to call the Senate's attention to the fact that that tariff bill carried on to the free list more than two hundred different articles that had been dutiable before, some of them of the most important character, entering into the consumption of the country, and relieved from duty, more largely than any other tariff bill that I have knowledge of, except the tariff bill of 1857, raw materials entering into the manufactures of the country in many particulars, and also all articles that entered into the construction of ships. It was provided by a system of drawbacks that articles imported to go into the construction of ships should be admitted free of duty.

The tariff bill of 1872 was more advanced in relieving the burdens of taxation that came from tariff duties than any other for a long time. The 10 per cent. reduction, which applied horizontally also to a large portion of the customs duties in that tariff bill, grew out of the difficulty that we find ourselves in at this time, an attempt in Congress to revise and remodel the system of tariff. The Senator from Delaware more strongly than anybody else has brought to the attention of Congress the inherent difficulty in an intelligent and just and proper revision of a tariff in the way proposed by the Senator from Kentucky and by others, and the Senator from Delaware co-operated with others who had had experience like him in this work in an honest effort to raise a commission of intelligent experts who would do better work upon the reduction of a tariff than it was possible to do in a Committee of the Whole in the House, or even in this body of more deliberation and less numbers.

The reduction of 10 per cent. upon a large portion of the duty-paying goods in 1872 was the result of a demonstration in the House of Representatives of the impossibility of taking up the tariff in detail, item after item, and bringing out a result that was fair, intelligent, and just, as well to the Government as to all the industries affected by customs duties, and it was a substitute adopted in the House by the House as a whole to a bill that had been the result of weeks and months of labor in the Committee on Ways and Means; and when it came out before the House it was of such an incongruous character, here and there with duties so far above the proper line, and here and there duties so far below, as to convince the House of Representatives upon a vote that it were better to take the substitute of a horizontal reduction of 10 per cent. announced at the time by the mover of it, and understood by the House that adopted it to be but a temporary measure, to be followed afterward by a more deliberate and carefully prepared revision of the whole tariff.

It was found impossible in a Committee of the Whole, after the experience of one of the ablest parliamentary leaders that has been in our time in that House, to succeed in that attempt, after two months' labor in the Committee on Ways and Means and then six weeks in the Committee of the Whole House—an attempt which fell at last of its own weight. After that experience and after the Committee on Ways and Means out of which came that tariff bill had undertaken the same work and were just embarking upon a like sea of labor, without tide and without compass almost, the House of Representatives took upon itself to say that one man at his desk could prepare and offer what it were better to take as a substitute for the whole thing, temporary in its nature, and its character so avowed, and it was adopted. That is the history of the tariff of 1872.

The revulsions of 1873 and the consequent depression of business in this country, and the tide of importations coming in bankrupting the country, when we were buying two dollars' worth where we were producing and selling only one, placed us in a position that rendered it necessary for us in 1875 to cast upon temporary relief again, and the impossibility without some such aid as was contemplated by the Senator from Delaware in his tariff-commission bill of a revision in 1875 was just as great as in 1872. It was a practical difficulty; nothing else. The practical difficulty was upon the House of Representatives of that day just as it was in 1872, and the device, temporary in its character, to restore the duties that were cut off in 1872, was resorted to. If it was resorted to with any idea of its being a permanent system it was a great mistake on the part of any one who voted for it with that notion. I think I myself moved it in the House of Representatives; I am not sure. At any rate, I had something to do with it.

I know, so far as I have any knowledge of the purpose and object of it, that it was temporary in its character, and all those who had anything to do with tariff revision, or attempted tariff revision in those years, felt as we feel now, that it is high time the tariff should be revised; but feeling—as the Senator from Delaware did, leading me, and I most happily following him in his tariff-commission bill—that no permanent revision of the tariff could come that did not come from a broad and intelligent view not only of the present wants of the Government but of its future demands, and of the industries of the nation, the influences upon which it is impossible to ignore in the construction of any tariff, we were unable to do more than we did. These considerations everybody felt the force of in 1875 as well as in 1872, and in 1867 when the tariff of 1867 was adopted.

But we have been unable until recently to bring Congress up to the conviction that it was next to impossible to construct such a tariff under the rules and influences and impulses of a Committee of the Whole, but that it must come from quiet study and deliberation of wise and comprehensive statesmanship and expert knowledge. It is to that that I have longed to see the tariff committed; it is to that I hope it has been committed in the tariff commission now considering it. And, sir, from the tariff measures of 1872 and 1875 can be deduced no other lesson but the lesson that compels us to take the tariff commission as the only method promising to give us a proper adjustment of tariff duties to the wants of the Government and to the business prosperity of the country.

The Senator from Kentucky a moment ago produced from the speech of a late colleague of mine in the House what he said was a fair representation of the entire manufacturing interest of New England, in which they submitted to the Committee on Ways and Means of that day a plan which is now indorsed by the Senator from Kentucky. What they said was, that so far as they were concerned a reduction of the tariff, if the wants of the Government would justify it, they would cheerfully submit to; and he says they represented the entire manufacturing interests of New England. I will enter into no controversy with him upon that question. If that be so, I trust the Senator from Kentucky will give over arraigning New England for demanding more protection. I trust the Senator will remember what the Senator from Illinois told him a few days ago, that there is a stronger demand for protection in the West and in the Southwest and in the United States than there is in New England. New England is reaping the results of a protective tariff in this, that she has earned an honest living by means of having furnished to her the market of New England. She has been enabled to plant herself in her manufacturing interests more firmly than the newer States of the country, and it is true, as the Senator from Illinois said, that there is less demand for protection in New England than in other parts of the country. Other parts of the country are profiting by New England's example, and are coming to understand that whatever is manufactured for America should be manufactured in America, and whatever labor is to be performed for Americans should be performed in America, so far as in the nature of the case it is possible for it to be done.

That is the theory under which New England has prospered. To that great truth the West and the Middle States and the South are waking up, and when New England tells the Committee on Ways and Means that she does not demand an increase of protection it is quite time that the Senator from Kentucky should turn his guns upon other sections of the country.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President—

Mr. BECK. The Senator will allow me to say a word.

Mr. BAYARD. Very well.

Mr. BECK. When I closed the remarks which I made, the Reporter came to me as soon as I had sat down, asking me for the extracts I had read. I read from a bound volume which I did not wish destroyed, and having a copy in the committee-room I stepped out for a moment, and only for a moment, to get it, and I believe I was back before sixty seconds, handing it to him. But the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] replying to me, was polite enough to announce to the Senate, that it might go on the permanent record that I had run off rather than hear his reply, using the language, as I am told—

For he who fights and runs away
May live to fight another day.

I was gone less than sixty seconds, just to get for and hand to the Reporter a paper which he wished to use. It was so kind in the Senator to do it that I thought I would explain.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the amendment before the Senate proposes a reduction of 10 per cent. of the existing tariff taxes on the 1st of January next and a year after that time a further reduction of 10 per cent. I confess my amazement at the extravagance of language used in regard to this proposition upon a bill professing to reduce taxation and made in the hearing of the Senator from Ohio who has so impressively stated the necessity for a reduction of the burdens of taxation. I say I confess my amazement at the language which was used by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] who spoke yesterday. He declared:

Mr. President, there never came out of a lunatic asylum a proposition so monstrous, so indefensible, so destructive as that which is proposed by this party, equal in numbers to one-half the American Senate, as the condition upon which they will permit the burden of thirty or forty millions of taxation to be lifted from the shoulders of the American people.

I pass by the other fling as to the "stump speeches" made on this side of the Chamber on this subject. Whatever those speeches may be, I do not think they will be ranked among thinking men to-day or among those who shall hereafter read the history of this debate as "stump speeches;" but I believe they will be described as honest and earnest and respectful methods of treating an important public question.

During the year ending the 30th of June, 1882, there was received into the Treasury from customs duties very nearly $220,000,000. If the horizontal reduction now proposed of one-tenth should be applied to that sum there would be a lifting of public burdens of taxation to the amount of $22,000,000, much more than double all that has been suggested by the bill which came to us from the House, and much more than the amendments added by the Senate, despite the almost united opposition of the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber.

Now, it is proposed that 10 per cent. of this taxation shall be taken off at the end of the present year, and as much more a year later, and that is denounced in the extravagant language I have quoted. Why, Mr. President, not only have I shown that the very gentlemen who use this language, but those distinguished and experienced legislators in whose presence I now speak, who were in 1872 and are to-day my respected colleagues upon the Committee on Finance, voted for this very reduction at a time when the scale of tariff duties was much lower than it is to-day. If any application of this strong language, of these violent words were just to-day, a fortiori they were much more applicable when those gentlemen set their hands to reports and recorded their votes in favor of a similar reduction of the tariff in 1872.

The Senator from Massachusetts is a good special pleader, and he pleaded a very special and I may call it a most attenuated plea when he said there is so great and disastrous a difference between reducing a tariff the reduction to take effect two months after the law, and a reduction to take effect five months after the passage of the act; that the reduction to take effect five months after the passage of the act is a monstrous and dangerous proposition, an act of lunacy, but that the proposition to make that reduction go into effect two months after is wholesome, wise, and judicious, because had he thought otherwise of course he would not have voted for it, in 1872, nor would his present associates. But, Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. The Senator—

Mr. BAYARD. Let me get through.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator states his facts wrong. It is not two months, but four. It is six weeks as against five months, and two reductions and not one.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to be precise.

Mr. HOAR. I supposed you did.

Mr. BAYARD. The law of 1872 was approved on the 6th of June. The Senator voted for it on the 20th of May. It provided for a horizontal reduction of the revenue of 10 per cent. on the 1st day of August thereafter. I said two months. I mean now to be precise, it was two months lacking six days. To-day we discuss this bill on the 4th of August, and we propose to make it effective on the 1st day of January next, less than five months. So it seems that a prospective reduction having two months to run is a safe, beneficent, wise measure, but if we extend it to five months it becomes absolutely fatal to business prosperity. Surely gentlemen cannot afford to stand upon such flimsy pretenses. I leave them to their self-condemnation, and nothing could be more severe.

But what is the history of the reduction of the tariff? It has been done over and over again. Mr. Clay was the great father of the American system, the protective system par excellence; and in 1833, when he proposed his compromise tariff bill, how was the reduction of that protective tariff to be accomplished? I read the provisions of the act of March 2, 1833:

From and after the 31st of December, 1833, in all cases where duties are imposed on foreign imports by the act of 14th July, 1832, or by any other act which shall exceed 20 per cent. on the value thereof, one-tenth part of such excess shall be deducted; and from and after the 31st day of December, 1835, 1837, 1839, respectively, a further deduction of one-tenth of such excess shall be made; and from and after the 31st of December, 1841, a further reduction of one-half of the remainder of such excess; and from and after the 31st of December, 1842, the residue of such excess shall be deducted.

Now, what becomes of all this pretended fear and mock apprehension of a prospective change in the present tariff in the face of such a bill as this proposed by Henry Clay and supported by Daniel Webster, and the object and effect of which was not only to allay an intense political excitement but to benefit the trade and business of the country? In the face of this wise system of graduated prospective reduction, to speak of it as being what it was described yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts—I scarcely remember all his epithets, but they were wild and extravagant in the extreme—if it is so disastrous to postpone the reduction for five months, what is to be said about a reduction postponed for nine years? Here is a gradual reduction proposed by Mr. Clay and enacted into law of 10 per cent. biennially from 1833. The first reduction was from the 2d of March, 1833, until the 31st of December following, that is to say four months longer than the time prospectively given for the reduction in the amendment now before the Senate, and then a further reduction of 10 per cent. postponed for two years, and again for four years, and again for six years, eight years, and finally nine years before the tariff would be brought to an average in no case exceeding 20 per cent. ad valorem upon imported merchandise. The present tariff is much beyond 45 per cent. on the average list, and in many cases absolutely prohibitory.

Now, Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to let the tariff amendments of Clay and Webster go before the country alongside of our proposed reduction and the speeches of the Senator from Massachusetts to accompany them and those of the Senator from Vermont likewise, because he spoke very much in the same vein. When I hear gentlemen get up here and in the face of history use such extravagant epithets in regard to this proposition, I stand amazed and it cannot fail to diminish the weight of their utterances before the country.

Mr. President, a prospective change has one important result; it gives to men engaged in business a reasonable opportunity to adjust their affairs to the proposed changes. Since we have been considering the subject of taking off stamp taxes we have had from the parties concerned a prayer that there might be postponement, and at one time a bill was reported here from the Finance Committee that postponed the operation of the reduction of taxes until May, 1883, and that was upon the application of the parties engaged in these various trades.

I am aware that every change made in the tax law will work inconvenience somewhere, and that there will be of course in view of a reduction of the taxes a disposition to reduce the stock of merchandise which has been taxed to as low an amount as possible in order that the new purchasers may come in under the lower rate of duty. There is no doubt of that, but per contra you have the man who has bought and paid for large amounts of taxed merchandise at the higher rate, who naturally desires that they shall enter in consumption and that he shall get back from his purchaser the amount of tax which he had previously paid the Government.

Let us consider for a moment what the effect of this proposed reduction would be upon the single industry which has been brought into this debate, how I scarcely know, but I believe it was read from a paper here to-day—the industry of making barbed wire for fences. This is an invention of very modern date. It is a beneficial invention and one of the most important to agriculture of which I have knowledge. I am not sure that it will not rank with some of the best of the labor-saving machines of agriculture. There are large districts in this country, almost limitless districts, where wood for fencing cannot be had. There are none where wood may be ever so plentiful to which the barbed wire is not preferable, because it is cheaper, more easily erected, and infinitely more enduring.

Here is an object not only of the most widespread and important consumption demanding the largest supply, but one which actually makes it possible for agriculture to be carried on in many districts where without it it cannot be for want of the inclosure of the fields where grain is to be tilled. In a case like this, what is obviously the duty of the legislator? To give to the husbandman, to give to the agriculturist, who is after all the very foundation of the prosperity of all other classes, as much facility and as little obstruction in obtaining these necessities for agriculture as legislation will permit. A law that is framed to prevent his having the advantage of this benefit is greatly to be regretted; and unless a vested interest is to be invaded it ought to be modified as much as possible in the interest of agriculture.

Now, I am aware as well as the Senator from Massachusetts of the constitutional right of property in patented inventions. I am not here to lessen their rights in any respect; but the case is different as to foreign patents not the result of the inventive genius of our own countrymen, such as the patent for making Bessemer steel, for which his title has been given the inventor, and which all men feel is well earned and honorable to him. That patent, the fruit of English invention and intelligence, has been purchased by a few Americans and brought to this country and has excluded thousands from carrying into general use and profit the result of Sir Henry Bessemer's valuable invention. I do not know anything of the history of the patent connected with the barbed wire fence. I assume it to be an American patent, although I do not know the fact, but still there is that protection which the law gives the patentees and which no one can rightfully invade. The royalty, as I understand, is $12.50 for every ton of barbed wire fence made and used in the United States.

But what is the condition of the tariff on that subject? Upon the steel wire of which the fence is made there is a duty—

Mr. DAWES. The fence is not made of steel wire.

Mr. BAYARD. It must be.

Mr. DAWES. It is not.

Mr. BAYARD. The barbed wire is made from steel wire and the duty upon that under our tariff is 3 cents a pound and in addition thereto 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator speaks as if he knew.

Mr. BAYARD. I am not a manufacturer of it, but I am greatly mistaken if I do not state the precise facts; and now I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, because my object is to get at the facts, what is the duty upon the wire of which the barbed-wire fence used in fencing is made? What is the duty upon it?

Mr. DAWES. I am mistaken if it is made of steel at all. I do not profess to have any personal knowledge. I am mistaken very much if it is made of steel. It is iron wire, as I understand, galvanized iron wire.

Mr. BAYARD. Oh, no; it must be made of steel.

Mr. GEORGE. I can state to the Senator from Massachusetts—

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] knows everything on these subjects, and I will appeal to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator from Vermont is an expert on the tariff subject, and I think he knows that this is steel wire, and that it pays 3 cents per pound duty on the wire imported and an additional duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem. I have made a calculation of that duty.

Mr. DAWES. I am quite confident the Senator is mistaken, but I will not say positively, because I have no positive information.

Mr. BAYARD. I never aver a thing as within my own knowledge when it is not.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me a word?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I have purchased a good deal of that wire, and it is always sold to me as steel wire.

Mr. BAYARD. I never heard it doubted until the Senator from Massachusetts said it was not.

Mr. DAWES. I do not speak from positive knowledge, but that is my belief about it.

Mr. BAYARD. I must say that I am a little shocked when I find that a gentleman whose constituents are so largely engaged in this very manufacture, with the large experience of my friend from Massachusetts, so long the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, actually does not know what is the rate of duty upon this very article that we are discussing, or even the material of which it is composed; and I want to say that I take to myself great blame. It is only one feature of what I have constantly felt; I make the admission with all frankness, of the difficulty of dealing here in legislation with regard to things in which my detailed knowledge is so imperfect. I never heard or doubted until the Senator from Massachusetts stated it, that the wire of which these fences were made was a steel wire, and was manufactured in this country out of wire rods imported at a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator from Delaware will permit me, I will say that I have bought a great deal of that wire, and a great portion of it is galvanized iron; the greatest part of it.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to contribute my impression to this matter, and say to the Senator from Delaware very frankly that I may have made a mistake, and it is possible he may be right. I do not know, but what I understand about it is this: I understand that this is a product of a kind of iron which is imported in blooms, and it is subjected to the Bessemer process, and the result is that the ingot produced, or whatever you call it, has some of the qualities of steel and some of the qualities of iron. It is malleable and is capable of taking on very small temper. It has been assessed in the custom-house for the last few years as steel, the Department going on the ground that although it did not possess all the properties of steel and was capable of a very low temper, yet that it was commercially known as steel. They therefore exacted a duty upon it as steel, until about twelve months ago a suit was brought in the circuit court of the United States by Mr. Charles Levi Woodbury, and they were about six weeks in trying the case, and the jury decided that it was iron. I remember a blacksmith's testimony during the trial. The importers recovered in the suit against the Treasury Department. This is my understanding of the history of the thing, and at the same time I admit that I may be somewhat mistaken.

Mr. BAYARD. Fortunately for us all, and I think still more so for the country, the tax upon this article is not now before the Senate except by way of illustration. If it were, it would be seen that we were dealing with an important subject in a very ignorant way.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator asks for information, and I have turned to Heyland and find that the kind of wire he speaks of is made not only of iron but of steel and of galvanized iron.

Mr. BAYARD. I have the tariff here, and was about to read the rates, and I have made the calculation:

Steel wire less than one-fourth of an inch in diameter and not less than No. 16 wire-gauge, 2½ cents per pound, and in addition thereto 20 per cent. ad valorem; less or finer than No. 16 wire-gauge, 3 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 20 per cent. ad valorem.

I was told this morning by a gentleman who bought a number of tons of the wire rods which are imported at a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem, and out of which this barbed wire is made, that they can be bought in New York laid down there at about $56 a ton. Now what is the duty that may be called the true criterion? That is to say, it is not a raw material; it is advanced to one stage of manufacture, what are called in our tariff wire rods, or if it be the steel bloom referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts it is subject to a duty of 45 per cent. ad valorem. If the duty is 3 cents a pound we have at once $67.20 a ton duty. If there be 20 per cent. ad valorem added we have about $20 more of duty, making the duty per ton about $87.20, which is more than 100 per cent. ad valorem upon the wire used for fencing. This wire sells in New York, as I am told, to-day without barbs at 4½ cents per pound or $100.50 per ton; with the barbs on it sells for 8 cents, which is $179 a ton.

Now, what is the reduction proposed upon that 3 cents duty? Ten per cent.; and what is one-tenth of three cents? Less than one-third of 1 cent per pound upon a manufacture that has now a protective duty of over 100 per cent. ad valorem, and we are told that that is one of the illustrations of ruin and disaster that is to take place on the 1st day of next January, and possibly a second reduction similar in amount on the 1st day of January following. If both reductions should take place upon this steel wire there is little more than the half of 1 cent per pound at the end of eighteen months that will be deducted under this horizontal proposition.

The present duty is of course absolutely prohibitory, and as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has shown the McKinley amendment was not allowed to interfere with so valuable a monopoly, which is sustained in the present tariff at the cost of every farmer in the United States.

Mr. President, I did not intend to take any further part in the discussion, but I was, I confess, amazed to hear such violent epithets hurled at so manifestly moderate a proposition. I said in the speech I made here a week or two ago on the general subject of the tariff that I was exceedingly desirous that those classes of our citizens who were engaged in manufactures should themselves take in hand the duty of reform, simplification, and reduction of tariff duties, and that desire I most sincerely repeat. I do not wish this question dealt with ignorantly or intemperately. I do not wish it dealt with hastily. I do not wish those whose capital, skill, and experience have been directed to manufactures to stand away and let those less well acquainted and less enlightened deal with this subject in their absence or in disregard of their interests.

The reduction of taxation is accepted as being necessary; all agree to that. Then the question is how should it take place. My own belief is that the tariff is to-day in a very large degree a tariff of prohibition and obstruction much more than of real protection either to capital or labor. I believe it to be to-day the chief reason why our merchant marine is in the dilapidated condition that we find it. Ships are nothing but instrumentalities of commerce. Commerce must be based upon as unrestricted trade as the interests of the country can allow. Our system of tariff duties as it stands is so out of date, so incongruous, so excessive, so obstructive, as I pointed out before, that I believe it has crippled our ocean commerce, and I believe that it has a very dangerous and a very intimate relation with the alarming condition of things which we witness in the labor movement all over the country. Shut off from all markets but our home market, what are we to do when the supply of our manufactures is in excess of the demand? To cease labor, to stop production, and that means to create idleness among our laboring classes with all its attendant demoralization and distress.

When I see what I fear by the vote I shall see, those gentlemen who represent those sections of the Union in which the largest amount of capital is invested in manufactures standing in obstruction of a measure so moderate as this, I confess that I feel surprised, that I feel disappointed, and for the sake of the welfare of this country I feel disheartened. But still I have no other means of influencing their votes or their action, and desire to have none other than a fair, frank, and mutually respectful discussion of the topic. If in the face of the facts that we witness, if in the face of the tariff legislation of this country which I have laid before you, you shall refuse to accede to so moderate a measure of reduction of taxation as this, then I only fear that hereafter there will come a sterner grapple which you will find yourselves less able to control than if you walked in the path of a moderate and just reformation and reduction of the tariff, which I believe to be demanded by every just consideration of the interest of every class of our countrymen.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 929) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Saint Joseph, in the State of Missouri;

A bill (H. R. No. 1364) to authorize the auditing of certain unpaid accounts in the Indian Bureau by the accounting officers of the Treasury;

A bill (H. R. No. 5740) for the relief of the heirs of Major D. C. Smith;

A bill (H. R. No. 6111) donating condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6520) in relation to land patents in the Virginia military district of Ohio;

A bill (H. R. No. 5841) to provide for deductions from the gross tonnage of vessels of the United States;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 288) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution to provide temporarily for expenditures of the Government; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 131) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to distribute copies of the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives to public and law libraries.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 3d instant approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

An act (S. No. 1845) to authorize the Postmaster-General to extend the mail service in certain cases, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 979) regulating fees and the practice in extradition cases;

An act (S. No. 602) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, deceased;

An act (S. No. 1435) for the relief of Albert Elsberg, administrator of Gustave Elsberg, deceased;

An act (S. No. 740) to establish ports of delivery at Kansas City and Saint Joseph, in the State of Missouri;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 90) making an appropriation to defray the expense of printing the memorial cards to accompany the additional number heretofore ordered of the memorial address on the late President Garfield; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 73) providing for the publication at the Government Printing Office of certain information in aid of the Society of the Red Cross.

The message also announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 997) for the relief of Ella Carroll, formerly Ella Long;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 6) authorizing Lieutenant-Commander Charles Dwight Sigsbee, United States Navy, to accept a decoration from the Emperor of Germany, and also authorizing Joseph R. Hawley to accept decorations from the Governments of the Netherlands, of Spain, and Japan; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 102) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the Society of the Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers the stand of colors presented to it by citizens of Norristown, Pennsylvania.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I present the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SEWELL in the chair.) The report will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 17, 30, and 41.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 27, 31, 57, 67, 68, 70, 71, 73, and 76, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "Nor deprive of such appointment any graduate who may complete the six years' course during the year 1882;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following: "Hereafter there shall be no promotion or increase of pay in the retired list of the Navy but the rank and pay of officers on the retired list shall be the same that they are when such officers shall be retired;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "Hereafter only one-half of the vacancies in the various grades in the line of the Navy shall be filled by promotion until such grades shall be reduced to the following numbers, namely: rear-admirals, 6; commodores, 10; captains, 45; commanders, 85; lieutenant-commanders, 74; lieutenants, 250; masters, 75; ensigns, 75; and thereafter promotions to all vacancies shall be made, but not to increase either of said grades above the numbers aforesaid;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with amendment as follows: After the word "of," where it occurs in said amendment, insert the words "and heard upon;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the words proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and strike out all of lines 5 to 12, inclusive, on page 6 of the bill; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of "seventy" insert "twenty;" and on page 12 of the bill, in line 20, after the word "ferriages," insert the words "rent of officers' quarters at League Island;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$40,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 16 of the bill, in line 19, after the word "twenty," insert "five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out of the words proposed to be inserted by said amendment the word "board" and insert in lieu thereof the word "bureau," and add at the end of said amendment the word "to;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "All such stores and supplies as shall be found by boards of appraisers to be unserviceable for use in the Navy shall be condemned and sold in the manner hereinafter provided for the sale of old materials, and the proceeds thereof, after deducting the cost of such appraisal, condemnation, and sale, shall be paid into the Treasury. And no old material of the Navy shall hereafter be sold or exchanged by the Secretary of the Navy, or by any officer of the Navy, which can be profitably used by reworking or otherwise in the construction or repair of vessels, their machinery, armor, armament, or equipment; but the same shall be stored and preserved for future use. And when any such old material cannot be profitably used as aforesaid, the same shall be appraised and sold at public auction, after public notice and advertisement shall have been given according to law, under such rules and regulations and in such manner as the said Secretary may direct. The net proceeds arising from the sales of such old material shall be paid into the Treasury. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy annually to report in detail to Congress in his annual report the proceeds of all sales of materials, stores, and supplies made under the provisions of this act, and the expenses attending such sales;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 34 of the bill, in line 12, after the word "duty," insert the words "after October 1, 1882;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 74 and 75, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the words proposed to be inserted by amendment numbered 75, and strike out, on page 34 of the bill, in lines 16 to 19, inclusive, the following words: "And all other officers when not at sea shall be placed on leave of absence or waiting orders or on furlough, as the Secretary of the Navy may direct;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Upon amendments numbered 35 and 36 the committee are unable to agree.

EUGENE HALE,

JOHN A. LOGAN,

H. G. DAVIS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

GEO. M. ROBESON,

J. H. KETCHAM,

JNO. D. C. ATKINS,

Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of this conference report?

The question being put, it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the general features of this agreement I will explain briefly. When the bill left the Senate there were several essential points of difference on this long-contested bill. The first was the provision in relation to the monitors. The Senate took very decisive action there against any attempt that would involve the Government in the completion of the monitors beyond launching them. When that question went to the House, the House saved us a great deal of trouble by agreeing at once to the Senate proposition with an amendment of not much account, which the Senate at once accepted, and that cause of difference disappeared. So on that great subject, which assumed much importance in the debate, the House has assented to the Senate view, has receded and taken it out of the controversy.

The next thing that we were confronted with was the antagonism of the House and the Senate upon the reductions in the line of the Navy. The Senate had very squarely expressed itself as opposed to the striking out, the annihilation of the grade and rank of commodore. The lower part of the line was left in controversy between the two Houses on the question of lieutenants, where the Senate had agreed to the House reduction, only modifying the number. That has been arranged by a compromise which restores the commodores, ten in number, and distributes all of the reduction agreed upon through the different grades, so that promotion will not be stopped. The reduction is small, being as follows:

Rear-admirals from 10 to 6, a reduction of 4; commodores from 25 to 10, a reduction of 15; captains from 50 to 45, a reduction of 5; commanders from 90 to 87, a reduction of 3; lieutenant-commanders from 80 to 72, a reduction of 8; lieutenants from 280 to 250, a reduction of 30, instead of 80 as the House proposed; masters from 175 to 150, a reduction of 25; ensigns from 100 to 75, a reduction of 25; leaving the reduction small on the upper grades and retaining commodores to the number of 10. That is the agreement of the conference.

The next antagonism that was found was in the clauses relating to the sale of ships and the sale of stores and supplies. Upon that the House receded in relation to ships.

Mr. BAYARD. What is the number of that?

Mr. HALE. There are several amendments on that point; the Senator will find them all in section 2.

Mr. BAYARD. I did not wish to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. HALE. I am very glad to be interrupted, because I wish that there shall be a complete understanding. If any Senator has a question, instead of being disturbed by it I shall be glad to have him ask it.

Upon those two questions the House recede with reference to the sale of ships, and that is left precisely as the Senate fixed it, that any old and useless ships are to be appraised, reported upon, and the report submitted to Congress before any action. Upon the sale of old supplies and stores and materials the Senate recede, but under safeguards as to public advertisement and providing that everything shall be done in open public sale. Only those materials that are perishable can be sold.

The next question was as to the retired list and the duty to which officers shall be assigned when not at sea. Upon that the House has assented to a proposition proposed by the Senate conferees making all provisions as to retired pay apply only as to the future, not cutting down the retired pay, but providing that hereafter officers upon the retired list shall have the rank and pay to which they are entitled at the date when they shall be retired.

Mr. ROLLINS. Right here I want to ask the Senator this question: Does he not know that that is the law now?

Mr. HALE. I do not think this changes the law.

Mr. ROLLINS. Not at all. If this bill is intended to make any amendment in that direction, or any reform whatever in that direction, this is a complete retreat. The only thing in this amendment that changes existing law is that hereafter there shall be no promotion on the retired list, whereas as the law now stands promotion may take place on the retired list, but not to carry pay with the promotion as a necessary consequence; and in this compromise which has been effected by the committee of conference that is the only thing that there is. They completely ignore all attempts to reform the retired list in all directions; and to that extent I want to express my disapproval of the action of the committee of conference; and right here it is as proper as anywhere to call attention to this matter. All these important questions are referred to six gentlemen, three Senators and three Representatives—

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator desire to occupy further time?

Mr. ROLLINS. No, sir.

Mr. HALE. Let me say here that the conferees did not desire to interfere with the present pay that any retired officer enjoys, but they did want to put a stop to what has been an abuse in the past where first a naval officer will get promoted without pay and then will come in and claim because he has got promoted that he ought to get pay and will get special legislation. The Senator from New Hampshire may depend on it that this evil is largely removed by the provision in the clause reported by the conference that there shall be no promotion after an officer is retired. You will not have him then claiming because of the promotion that he ought to have special legislation to give him pay consonant with his increased rank, and in that regard it is a reform, but it does not strike at the pay which any officer is enjoying now. That has been a feature all through, that we have not attempted in the Senate, and the committee has not attempted, to interfere with what any officer is enjoying now. That I believe and we believe would be a hardship. The officer has become accustomed to the salary that the law fixes and gives him; and to ruthlessly reduce that would be a great hardship, and we have not gone to that extent.

Mr. ROLLINS. I want to inquire, then, what was the object of the Appropriations Committee in calling public attention to this abuse on the retired list? Why did they parade before the country the fact that the first officer on this list which they presented here had his pay increased while on the retired list from $1,738 a year to $4,500 a year? Why did they call public attention to that and denounce the Committee on Naval Affairs for not correcting these evils; and then when we came into the Senate of the United States and proposed an amendment looking to a correction of this evil why did the Committee on Appropriations make the point of order on it, and then when we have made some little progress looking in the direction of reform by adopting the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB,] and that amendment is submitted to a committee of conference, that committee takes out of it everything that is of any consequence looking in the direction of reform?

Mr. HALE. I utterly and totally decline to be drawn into any controversy or any war of words about these two committees. The committee of conference has fairly tried to represent not their own sentiments but the sentiments of the Senate which voted upon certain issues and which we tried to bear out in the committee, and I can only say, as I have just said, that upon this question of the retired pay we believe that this clause will work to prevent abuse in the future.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator must know that all these abuses have crept in by special acts, and there is nothing in this compromise which is effective to prevent the passage of special acts of Congress to promote men upon the retired list.

Mr. HALE. Upon the question of the duty to which officers should be assigned who were not at sea the conference agreed upon this: in the original amendment as reported it was provided that the Secretary of the Navy should assign in certain cases officers upon furlough duty. The agreement which has been reached is that that part of that clause which provided that officers not at sea might be assigned to shore duty when the Secretary could certify what their duty was is left, and all the rest is stricken out, and it is left precisely as the law is to-day, and the discretion must remain with the Department undoubtedly, rarely to be exercised in putting officers upon furlough pay, which is one-half not of the sea duty but of leave pay. That is the way that is left.

We believe these to be very fair and equitable adjustments, and we arrived at them in a spirit of fairness and compromise, the committee, as I have said, trying to represent not always their own feelings but where they have been voted upon the sentiments of the Senate, as, for instance, in the restoration of the rank of commodore.

Upon two other questions the committee was unable to agree, namely, in reference to the navy-yards and in reference to the provision which is found in amendment numbered 35. The committee could not agree on amendments numbered 35 and 36. The conferees of the House of Representatives in reference to the authority to shut up the yards temporarily and dispose of the perishable property, not in any spirit of arrogance I am bound to say, and not in menace, declared that that was a subject upon which they could not yield, they believing that the lessening of the navy-yards was a foundation reform in the bill, that we have too many now, and that some of them ought to be temporarily shut up with no power to transfer the large property, but only perishable property. They insisted upon that, and although the conferees on the part of the Senate as is shown by the debate agreed with them, still being constrained by the vote of the Senate until the further action of the Senate the Senate conferees did not feel themselves justified in giving away the action of the Senate and declined to submit to the claim of the House conferees, and upon that we report a disagreement, and also upon the amendment numbered 36, providing that the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to report as to certain additional lands and water-front contiguous to the navy-yard at Norfolk.

I ask first that the report be adopted disposing of all this bill except the questions of the navy-yards and the additional facilities for the Norfolk yard, and that the Senate insist upon its amendments numbered 35 and 36 and appoint a further conference, unless the Senate upon motion of some gentleman shall recede from them and adopt the House action.

I am bound to say in frankness, not to be reproached hereafter, that to my mind there is very little prospect that the House conferees will yield upon these points. They were very firm; but all we can do is to have another conference, and it may be that we can agree upon some compromise in reference to the navy-yards that will be satisfactory to both the House and the Senate.

Mr. President, I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine how that leaves the navy-yards now?

Mr. HALE. The navy-yards, of course, are not affected until the passage of something in this bill that touches them.

Mr. SEWELL. There is a disagreement on the part of the conference committee.

Mr. HALE. Of course it leaves the navy-yards as they are.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to ask the Senator about the amendment he last spoke of, No. 35, on page 16. It relates to the navy-yards and the suspension of work and the removal of material. The conferees of the respective Houses have disagreed.

Mr. HALE. They could not agree, and have reported the disagreement.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator be kind enough to state the counter-proposition made by the House?

Mr. HALE. The House conferees made no proposition; but we found them very firm. They stated that they believed the shutting up of some of these navy-yards was a cardinal reform proposition of more importance than anything else on this bill; that we had spent too much money on these navy-yards; and they claimed that if they repudiated any political power or right to give up a portion of these navy-yards, certainly the party in the minority ought to accept it, and they were ready and willing to do that, and would not make any counter-proposition.

Mr. BAYARD. Does their idea include the absolute dismantling and removal of the plant from the navy-yards?

Mr. HALE. Not at all; nothing but the temporary shutting up of the perishable property and stores. This is a bill that only runs for a year.

Mr. BAYARD. The language of the bill which we struck out included not only perishable stores, but included "property," which is a very general term.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will remember that we inserted the word "perishable" on my motion.

Mr. BAYARD. As it appears here the whole thing is stricken out.

Mr. HALE. "Perishable stores and property" it was made to read, and then it was all struck out; but if we ever come to an agreement it will be with the limitation applying only to perishable property and stores, for the Senate adopted that amendment on my motion.

Mr. BAYARD. I hesitate very much in setting up my judgment upon subjects on which I have not by any means the knowledge I would desire against that of my associates who have more carefully studied the question, and I believe it will be admitted that I seldom do so. I generally yield my opinion to others. But it seems to me this bill has rather proceeded upon a general theory that we are not to have a navy hereafter. Everybody admits that we have none now excepting the personnel. That we have of a very honorable and able character. But the question is as to the future construction of a navy. Whether the Government shall have navy-yards of its own, where vessels shall be constructed, or whether it shall adopt the system of building them by private contract, is a very broad question, and one that I apprehend is not to be answered in a breath, and ought not to be decided at once.

I referred the other day to the historical fact that we have had four consecutive Secretaries of the Navy inside of eighteen months, and that not one of those gentlemen had by his prior pursuits the slightest special knowledge of the post to which he was called. There was no reflection either upon their characters or capabilities, but there was the statement derived from their general public repute of what their pursuits had been before they were called to this very important position requiring such special technical and scientific knowledge. Now, it is not unjust to any one of those four men to say that his opinion in regard to naval matters was not of great value. They had not time to form it; they had not experience to give it; and there was no committee of either House specially charged with the consideration of matters pertaining to the Navy that had made any report to either House. There was a candid and I think a very instructive and honorable speech made by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the other House; but from the Naval Committee here we heard nothing except a general protest against the structure of this bill. The Senate decided, however, that they would not either commit the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs or send it back to the Committee on Appropriations, and they proceeded to pass upon it. The only question is whether this amendment which it seems the House committee are especially positive about shall be receded from by the Senate. The House proposed to insert:

Provided, That if the Secretary of the Navy shall find that work at all the navy-yards now maintained cannot be carried on with advantage to the service and economy to the governments for the amounts in this act appropriated for the maintenance of and civil establishment at the navy-yards, he shall not make any deficiency for these purposes, but he shall suspend work at those yards where he finds it can best be dispensed with, and shall close such yards and transfer all perishable stores and property therefrom to other yards for use therein, and report the facts and the reasons governing his action to the next session of Congress; and at the yards so closed only such officers and employes shall be retained as are necessary to preserve and take care of the property of the Government, and all other persons shall be transferred or discharged: Provided further, That the navy-yard at Washington, District of Columbia, may, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be maintained as a manufacturing yard for the Bureaus of Equipment and Recruiting and Ordnance, and that work may be continued in the rope-walk in the Boston navy-yard: And provided further, That nothing herein shall be held to interfere with the permanent improvement of any navy-yard as now authorized by law, or the expenditure for such purpose of any money appropriated by Congress therefor.

I objected to that clause, and the Senate sustained the objection by a very positive vote. A part of the language, I thought, was entirely unnecessary; that was as to the question of work at the various navy-yards; that, I apprehend, the Secretary of the Navy must direct from the very character of his office. He may order a ship to one point or another point, and no law is necessary to give him such authority. It is inherent in his office; he is the head of the Department, and of course he must have the control of such things. What I did object to was to any measure that looked to this sudden and hasty abandonment of any navy-yard.

If we are to have ships they have yet to be built. Whether they are to be built by the Government at its own yards or built by private contract is a question of the future. As far as this bill is concerned, it contemplates the building by contract, simply because the Government has no yards equipped properly for the building of a ship, certainly not an iron ship, which is the only one that hereafter, I think, will be constructed.

Part of my objection to this clause would be removed if the language were used which the Senator from Maine says was inserted in the former bill, but which finds no place in this print, to the effect that no permanent demolition of these yards should take place, that no portion of the plant should be removed, so that it simply would be for the next year a cessation of work, taking care that the capacity for future work should not deteriorate or be lessened. If that can be secured, the greater portion of my objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. HALE. As I have said, I have no doubt that upon that point the House conferees will yield, and on that basis I believe we can come to an agreement.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator this: Does not the text which the Senate struck out provide for a permanent closing of yards by the Secretary, he to make report of his action under this clause at the next session?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BAYARD. And in the mean time the plant or permanent property may be removed.

Mr. HALE. There is no question about that as the bill stood. We have done the best we could. I consulted with several gentlemen who were opposed to the committee in the debate, and the result was acceptable to them. I think time will show that we have got at a good result. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand that putting men on furlough has been stricken out.

Mr. HALE. That is stricken out.

Mr. CALL. Before the report is adopted I wish to express my decided opposition as one of this body to any retirement from the position taken by the Senate in the amendment of this bill. The establishment of a policy by the Government on so important a subject as the means of reconstructing the navy and the destruction of the navy-yards essential for the repair and construction of vessels by legislation adopted in haste and upon an appropriation bill is, in my opinion, extremely unwise; and the amendments made by the Senate in that direction, especially in regard to the navy-yards, I think ought to be adhered to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. HALE. Now I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments Nos. 35 and 36, and agree to the further conference asked by the House.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me ask the Senator what is the amendment No. 35?

Mr. HALE. That is the amendment in reference to the navy-yards.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment on that subject.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope the Senator from Maine will not agree to that.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from Kansas will not make that motion, because there are certain things we can put into the bill that will make it certain that it covers nothing but perishable stores, and only applies to those things that will make it satisfactory to everybody.

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator made some statement which I did not hear fully. The House bill as it came here abolished the grade of commodore.

Mr. HALE. The House bill struck it out absolutely on a graduated scale.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It destroyed the grade as the commodores died; as the offices became vacant they were not to be filled, and in that way the grade was to be extinguished; but there was a proviso in the House bill that this should not take effect until the 1st day of next July. I understand that the conference committee propose to reduce the number of commodores to ten instead of twenty-five.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the proviso of the House bill struck out?

Mr. HALE. That was not in the bill when it went to conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; we restored the House proviso.

Mr. HALE. No; it was all struck out; that was not before the conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. With that proviso in, I should be perfectly willing to vote for the bill.

Mr. HALE. We cannot get that in now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate insist on its thirty-fifth and thirty-sixth amendments and agree to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HALE, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia were appointed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that will not be done. I shall ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I hope it will be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KELLOGG, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] on all questions.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PLUMB, (after having voted in the negative.) I overlooked the fact that I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JACKSON.] I withdraw my vote.

Mr. LAPHAM. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. SAULSBURY, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.] I do not know how he would vote on this question. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. WINDOM, (after having voted in the negative.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS,] and forgot it at the time. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 24; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

HEAVY-ORDNANCE INVESTIGATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. LOGAN, Mr. CAMERON of Pennsylvania, Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. HAMPTON, and Mr. JONES of Florida, the select committee authorized by the resolution of the Senate of the 2d instant to take into consideration the subject of heavy ordnance and projectiles for the armament of the Navy and the sea-coast defenses.

COMMITTEE REPORT.

Mr. KELLOGG, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1943) making an appropriation for rebuilding the light-house at Southwest Pass, Vermillion Bay, Louisiana, reported it with amendments.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, and agreed to others with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 219) for the relief of Elizabeth Leebrick;
 A bill (H. R. No. 2317) for the relief of Mary Bullard;
 A bill (H. R. No. 2524) for the relief of Alice J. Bennett;
 A bill (H. R. No. 2966) granting a pension to Annie W. Osborne;
 A bill (H. R. No. 3717) granting a pension to Alvin Walker;
 A bill (H. R. No. 3601) for the relief of Martha A. Jones;
 A bill (H. R. No. 3733) granting a pension to Mary E. Taylor;
 A bill (H. R. No. 5018) granting a pension to Elizabeth F. Rice;
 A bill (H. R. No. 5985) granting a pension to Martha Jane Douglass;
 A bill (H. R. No. 6399) granting an increase of pension to Stephen D. Smith;
 A bill (H. R. No. 6317) granting an increase of pension to James Bennett;
 A bill (H. R. No. 6521) granting a pension to Mrs. Adeline A. Turner; and
 A bill (H. R. No. 6624) granting an increase of pension to Eliza F. Porter.

TARIFF-COMMISSION TESTIMONY.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 350 additional copies of the testimony taken before the tariff commission be printed for the use of the commission.

SAINT LOUIS COLLECTION DISTRICT.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6845) to amend the first subdivision of section 2568 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, title 34, "collection of duties on imports," which came over from the House yesterday, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce. It was referred to the Finance Committee by mistake.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The change of reference will be made if there be no objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House to our amendments and insist on the amendments of the Senate disagreed to by the House, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore being authorized to appoint the committee, Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BECK were appointed the conferees on the part of the Senate.

INTERNAL REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now I hope we shall have a vote on the pending amendment to the tax bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation is before the Senate. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] which is to strike out section 4 of the bill and insert what will be read in lieu thereof.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

That all taxes and customs dues imposed by the laws now in force for the collection of duties on imports from foreign countries shall be subject to a discount of 10 per cent. after the 1st day of January, 1883, and to a discount of an additional 10 per cent. after the 1st day of January, 1884.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have been ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, before the question is taken on that amendment I shall ask for a division of the question, taking the vote first upon the reduction that is to take place on the 1st of January next; and inasmuch as that amendment has been the subject of a good deal of criticism, while I dislike exceedingly to take up or to consume a particle of the valuable time of the Senate at this late hour of the session, I shall desire to assign at least some of the reasons that induced me to offer it.

Mr. PENDLETON. If it be not inconsistent with the wishes of the Senator from Tennessee, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio on that proposition.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope not.

Mr. PENDLETON. There are manifest reasons why we should do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORRILL. Of course this motion is intended to be hostile and to extinguish further consideration—

Several SENATORS. No debate.

Mr. PENDLETON. Of course it is not for any purpose of that kind.

Mr. HARRIS. The patent-medicine men and the banks can wait one day more before they get that relief which the Senator from Vermont is so anxious to extend to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LAPHAM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. SAWYER.]

Mr. SAULSBURY, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I am paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.] I do not know how he would vote on this question, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HAMPTON. My colleague [Mr. BUTLER] is paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.]

Mr. HARRIS. My colleague [Mr. JACKSON] is paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.]

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 27; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; insisted on its amendments to certain amendments of the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FRANK HISCOCK of New York, Mr. BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH of Ohio, and Mr. J. C. S. BLACKBURN of Kentucky, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

INTERNAL REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the whole people recognize and appreciate the fact that the present rate of taxation is excessive, and so far as I know every Senator on this floor on both sides of the Chamber recognizes the duty of giving relief from excessive taxation. In the effort to give such relief as the present condition of an overflowing Treasury justifies, it would seem to me that the first and the most important question to be considered is to whom this relief shall be given. Shall it be extended to the whole people or simply to a class or a few classes of the people? That question must first be determined, and we can then intelligently extend such relief as an overflowing Treasury resulting from excessive taxation enables Congress to grant at this time.

The bill as it came to us from the House proposes to relieve banks, bank depositors, proprietors of patent medicines, perfumery, &c., and the manufacturers of, and dealers in, and perhaps to some small extent the consumers of friction matches; and there the measure of relief, as proposed to be extended by the action of the House, stopped. There is a very small class of persons interested in or benefited by this reduction of taxation.

The object of my amendment was to extend that relief, not to these three or four classes of persons exclusively, but to extend it as near as possible to the whole American people. I understand that we can reasonably and fairly afford to reduce the revenues at least to the extent of from forty to sixty million dollars; and instead of confining that relief to the owners of bank stock, the people who fortunately have bank deposits and have to use bank checks to utilize those deposits, to the patentees of medicines, cosmetics, perfumeries, &c., and to the manufacturers and dealers in, and possibly to some small extent the consumers of, friction matches, I thought a general reduction upon the entire tariff list that would reach every consumer in America would be more equitable, more just, and the relief more generally felt and appreciated than to single out a few classes, however meritorious, needing the relief much less; other classes that would be benefited by a general reduction of tariff taxation, as is provided by the amendment I have proposed.

Now, Mr. President, in contrasting these classes that it is proposed to relieve by the bill as it came from the House with other classes, and vastly the more numerous classes, let us look for a moment and compare the banks, the bank depositors, the proprietors of patent medicines, and the manufacturers of and dealers in friction matches on the one hand and the entire people who are interested in the tax imposed by existing laws upon salt, the tax imposed by existing laws upon all the manufactures of iron, upon all the manufactures of steel, upon all the manufactures of cotton, and upon all the manufactures of wool.

How will the bankers, patent-medicine men, and manufacturers of matches compare in numbers to the consumers of salt, which is taxed by your present laws from 40 to 55 per cent.? Manufactures of iron taxed from 35 to 60; manufactures of steel range from 45 to 76 per cent.; manufactures of cotton range from 35 to 60 per cent., while the manufactures of wool are taxed from 60 to over 100 per cent.

Now, I beg Senators to pause for one moment to consider what proportion of the American people are interested in or benefited by taking the tax off bank capital or the two-cent stamp tax off bank checks. Will it average one in 10,000 of the 52,000,000 of the American people? What proportion of the people of this country are particularly interested in or benefited by reducing or relieving altogether from taxation patent medicines and nostrums of that character?

I undertake to say that the whole American people, now numbering about 52,000,000 are interested in and benefited by a reduction in the tax upon salt, upon iron, and the manufactures of iron; upon steel, and the manufactures of steel; upon the manufactures of cotton and the manufactures of wool. The cost of the tools of the mechanic and the day laborer, the implements of the farmer, are all more or less dependent upon the tax imposed upon iron and steel and manufactures of iron and steel.

The whole people are interested in and benefited by the reduction of tax upon manufactures of cotton and wool, the rich as well as the poor, because these articles are to a large extent consumed by the whole people, constituting a large proportion of the clothing of the rich, and almost entirely the clothing of the poor; for, however poor the man, he and his family must have blankets, flannels, and either cotton or woolen clothing, and if the relief that we are now able to extend in the reduction of revenue shall be given to a general reduction on the whole list of articles taxed by our present tariff laws, every individual in America will be benefited to a greater or less extent by that reduction, while if you consume or swallow up the forty or fifty or sixty million dollars that we are able now to reduce taxation by relieving bank capital, bank depositors, patent medicines, perfumery, and friction matches, as included in the bill as it came from the House, I undertake to say that there is not more than one in ten thousand of the American people that will be benefited by that reduction of taxation.

Hence I say that if the object of this bill be, or if the object of Senators be to give a real relief to the people by the reduction of taxation, they should apply that reduction to those articles that enter into universal consumption, those articles that affect the interest of and reduce the cost of those commodities that every American citizen, rich or poor, is compelled from necessity to use and consume, and for that reason I offered the amendment that is now pending, which proposes to reduce taxation upon all the articles on which there are now tariff duties imposed to the extent of 10 per cent., taking effect the 1st day of January, 1883, and an additional 10 per cent. to take effect upon the 1st day of January, 1884, which in all will only amount to a reduction of 20 per cent. But that amendment, as I said before, has been severely criticised. The Senator from Massachusetts thinks it could have emanated from no source other than a lunatic asylum, nor could it be advocated or supported by any one who is not a fit subject for such asylum.

Mr. HOAR. I did not say that.

Mr. HARRIS. I so understood. I did not hear the Senator say it, but I have heard other Senators refer to it as a remark of the Senator from Massachusetts. But whether the Senator from Massachusetts used language such as I have heard attributed to him or not, certain it is that the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] have all criticised the amendment with more or less severity, and have all proclaimed that the adoption of an amendment such as this would utterly prostrate and destroy the great business interests of the country.

Mr. HOAR. As the Senator has referred to me I desire to say that at some time I wanted to put him a question, and perhaps it would be as agreeable to him before he enters on his argument for me to put it now, if he has no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. I will hear the question.

Mr. HOAR. The question I wish to put is this: Are you yourself in favor of reducing by 20 per cent. the present tariff on French brandy, diamonds, and champagne?

Mr. HARRIS. Is that your question?

Mr. HOAR. That is my question.

Mr. HARRIS. If time were allowed us to go through item by item the vast list of articles that are taxed under our tariff laws I should discriminate so as to leave the highest rate of duties upon articles of luxury that they would bear—that rate which would produce the largest amount of revenue. Upon the articles of brandy, champagne, diamonds, and every other article of luxury, not of absolute necessity to the entire people, I should endeavor to raise the largest amount of revenue possible; but situated as we are here, on the 4th day of August, when we have spent over eight months of the session, and when we have had no opportunity until about one month ago to have any voice in respect to tariff taxation, the Senator from Massachusetts knows, as every intelligent Senator—and certainly there are none other than intelligent Senators—that it is utterly impossible for us now in the expiring days and hours in this session to go through the tariff list item by item, revise and adjust it in a satisfactory manner. Therefore this is the only method by which we can effect a reduction of excessive, unjust, and oppressive tariff taxation at this session.

The Senator from Massachusetts, I doubt not, as every other Senator, will admit that, taking our present rates of duty as a whole they are excessive, an unjust exaction upon the industry and necessities of the people and as this is the only method practical at this time to reduce that excessive taxation, the only method that we can adopt at this hour by which we may give some small measure of relief to the whole people and take at least one short step in the direction of correcting what is universally admitted to be a wrong, let us take that step even though it may not correct all of the evils, absurdities, and gross wrongs that are perpetrated upon a whole people by a system that we find ingrafted upon the statute-books of the country.

Mr. MORRILL. When the Senator says that is the only method which is left, I ask him if he prefers the method which he suggests of taking off 20 per cent. on articles of luxury as well as necessity in preference to the method that he repudiates and proposes to supersede by striking out and inserting his amendment. The section that he proposes to strike out is a section that reduces the duty on sugar, a necessity of life. That would reduce the cost of sugar 25 per cent. to the extent of thirty-seven pounds per capita for every man, woman, and child in the country, and thus cheapen the cost of the breakfast table.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I remember very well the eagerness with which my friend from Vermont seized upon this reduction, a tub to the whale, upon one single item, and that a product of the State of Louisiana, to strike off 25 per cent.; but while that other article of even more universal consumption and absolute necessity, salt, as well in the cabin of the poor as in the palace of the rich, is taxed from 40 to 60 per cent., I have never yet heard the Senator from Vermont or other Senators on that side of the Chamber complain or propose to relieve the 52,000,000 of people who use more or less of salt every day and every hour of their lives.

Now, I am quite ready to reduce the tariff on sugar. I am not hunting classes, I am not hunting specific and sectional articles. If we were going over the tariff item by item I should undertake to discriminate so as to impose the very highest tax on articles of luxury, such as were named by the Senator from Massachusetts, that they would bear, that duty which would produce the largest amount of revenue. And after raising from these luxuries the largest amount of money that could be raised upon them, I would abolish the tax upon salt, reduce the tax upon sugar, reduce the tax upon the manufactures of wool, that every poor laborer in the land is compelled to use, whether he is financially able to do so or not; I would reduce the tax on cotton goods, because they enter into the consumption and constitute a large proportion of the clothing of the entire people.

I would utterly repudiate the entire theory of the Senator from Vermont, the Senator from Ohio, and the Senator from Massachusetts, in selecting the two articles of sugar and Bessemer steel as the only ones upon which duties are to be reduced, while they propose to increase to the point of doubling the duties on other articles in order to compel 52,000,000 of people to pay bounty year by year at the rate of from 40 to over 100 per cent. You have no right under the Constitution to levy a duty except for revenue. It is from the revenue power only that your right to levy a duty is derived, and whenever your duty exceeds the revenue point you not only violate the Constitution but perpetrate a gross injustice and a wrong upon the whole people for the benefit of a very small but much favored class.

My friend from Massachusetts desired to know if I was willing to reduce the tax of 10 per cent. on the 1st of January, 1883, and 10 per cent. more on the 1st of January, 1884, upon brandies and wines and diamonds. The Senator certainly knows what that immense reduction would amount to upon that article of luxury known as diamonds. Will the Senator inform me what the present tax is on those diamonds as fixed by himself and his friends by the present law? It is only 10 per cent. My amendment would reduce to 9 the first year and finally to 8 per cent.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator ask me if I know?

Mr. HARRIS. I take it for granted the Senator knows.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator to inquire. I understand that the tax is 10 per cent., which is as high as it is safe to put upon an article which is so easily smuggled about the person.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. The Senator proposes to reduce it 20 per cent.

Mr. HARRIS. Which will amount to 2 per cent. You have put it at 10 per cent., and I propose, in order to give relief from exorbitant taxation upon articles in universal use and of prime necessity, to put it down to 9 per cent. next year and 8 per cent. the year following.

But, Mr. President, I do not care to consume time in pursuing this line of inquiry. I should like to know, however, how it is that the Senator from Vermont, the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Illinois, and the Senator from Massachusetts, all in 1872, did not see the fatal consequences of a horizontal reduction of 10 per cent. upon tariff duties. At that time, when the average rate of duties was lower than now, the record shows that each of those Senators, without the apprehension of the utter ruin of all the business interests of the country that they now predict, voted to reduce 10 per cent. upon the duties then imposed by law.

No danger was apprehended then, no ruin to the industrial interests of the country was apprehended or declared then. No ruin followed, nor did Mr. Clay and Mr. Webster see the danger of horizontal reduction in 1833 when the compromise tariff of that year was passed. Under the pretense, however, of the necessity of providing for a sinking fund in 1875 the act of 1872 which reduced duties 10 per cent., and for which the Senators from Vermont, Massachusetts, Ohio, and Illinois voted, was repealed and the former rate of duties restored. Now my amendment proposes not only to restore the act of 1872 but to go on the 1st of January, 1884, one step further and reduce, on identically the same principle, 10 per cent. more of the rate of duties that every Senator I imagine will admit on the whole are too high, excessive, and unjust.

Mr. President, I have endeavored to show that if my amendment is adopted such relief as it affords to the poor extent to which it goes will be for the benefit of the entire people of the United States; while if the reduction is made as the bill provided as it came from the House, or as the bill provided as it came from the Committee on Finance of the Senate, the reduction, amounting perhaps to forty or fifty millions of dollars to the Treasury, will benefit only a very small class of people, and a class least needing relief.

I deny that any interest in this country is going to be seriously prejudiced by the adoption of the amendment I have proposed. I deny it upon the high authority that has been cited here to-day by the Senator from Kentucky, who quoted from a speech of Hon. Nathaniel P. Banks delivered in the House on the 7th of May, 1878, in which Mr. Banks asserted that he had requested the manufacturers of his country to advise the Committee on Ways and Means as to the extent of reduction of duties which in their opinion would be proper, that he then held in his hand the petitions or statements of the representatives of one hundred and twelve leading manufacturing corporations and companies, in which they asserted that they could very well afford to stand a reduction of from 10, 20, 30, 40, up to 50 per cent. upon the entire line of articles manufactured by them.

Therefore I say, and I feel that I say it upon very high authority when I say it on the authority of General Banks, a member of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, representing a Massachusetts district, and his assertion was based upon the declaration of the accredited representatives of one hundred and twelve of the leading manufacturing corporations and companies of the State of Massachusetts—upon this high authority I feel fully authorized to say there is no serious evil to result to any of the industries of the country from the reduction proposed, while the benefit to the extent of the reduction proposed will extend to the entire people; and for that reason I offered the amendment, and for that reason I think it ought to be adopted.

But I will not consume at this late hour of the evening and late day of the session more of the time of the Senate in further discussion of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] who wishes a division. The amendment is to strike out section 4 and insert what will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

That all taxes and customs dues imposed by the laws now in force for the collection of duties on imports from foreign countries shall be subject to a discount of 10 per cent. after the 1st day of January, 1883.

Mr. HARRIS. It is on that branch of the amendment that I desire the first vote, being a reduction of 10 per cent., taking effect the 1st day of January, 1883.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has the Senator from Tennessee any objection to striking out the whole of the fourth section and dropping it? I suppose we are all willing to do that.

Mr. HARRIS. My amendment is proposed as a substitute for the section.

Mr. SHERMAN. Could not a division be taken, so that the question may first be on striking out? I imagine we will all agree to that now.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think we all agree to that. I am not in favor of striking it out myself unless by inserting some such provision as this.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire myself to follow the suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to strip this bill of everything relating to the tariff.

Mr. HARRIS. I should be unwilling to strike out the fourth section unless it is connected with a distinct reduction of the line of tariff duties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to strike out and insert cannot be divided.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President—

Mr. BECK. I do not propose to interfere with the Senator from Alabama, but there seems to be so much ignorance on the other side as to what are the rates of duties that when the Senator from Alabama is through I have a paper, prepared at the Treasury Department, not very long, only forty-five or forty-six pages, being the tariff duties, which I propose to have read from the Secretary's desk, so that gentlemen will understand what they are voting on.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have had the honor of being a member of the Senate for now nearly six years, and this is the first opportunity that has been presented since I have been here to lay before the people of the United States a subject that concerns their most material interests and welfare. I will not berate either of the national parties—

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Alabama yield for a moment?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont, in charge of this bill, if he anticipates or desires or intends to force a night session? It is now ten minutes after six o'clock; we have been here seven hours. I think that under the circumstances and in view of the condition of the weather it is best to adjourn, and I desire frankly to ask the Senator what his purpose is?

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator has any proposition to submit as to when we may have a vote upon the whole question, say to-morrow at one o'clock—

Mr. ALLISON. Five o'clock.

Mr. COCKRELL. I say in reply to that that I have no proposition to make in regard to fixing the time of voting upon this question. I have not discussed it and will not discuss it unless I am forced to do so. But we will come to a vote just as soon as a fair and reasonable discussion can be had. I want to know if the Senator undertakes to force a vote to-night. That is the question. If the Senator intends to force a vote to-night, let us know it.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire a vote on this question. I take it that there is no indisposition on the part of the other side of the Chamber to vote for an amendment proposed by a Senator on that side.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no disposition to avoid a vote at all.

Mr. MORRILL. I think they ought not to shirk such a vote as that. We are ready without further debate to vote upon that proposition.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no doubt of that. That is not the proposition. I want to know when Senators are here on the floor after six o'clock, and when they desire to discuss this question in all fairness and sincerity, whether you intend to force us to a night session in order to try to force a vote on the question whether we are willing or not? That is the point on which I want to be informed and I think the information ought to be given honestly, because I will meet it honestly when you tell me what you are going to do.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have had enough experience with night sessions not to care for them or to wish for them; they are very seldom productive of good; but the majority of the Senate feel that they ought to have a vote on this bill some time. If the Senator will fix any day next week, so far as I am concerned, any day at all, on which a final vote can be had on the question of whether to repeal or not to repeal all taxes, I promise to stay here by him and not have any limited debate, taking the time we need on the question; but name a day or promise that within a certain time we shall have a vote. If you intend to say to us that you will defeat us by physical exertion and prevent us from having a vote on the bill, we can understand that. We do not want such a controversy. I do not. I am getting too old for that. Twenty years ago I should rather have liked it than otherwise; but now I rather shun such contests. But if Senators can give us any assurance that at any time, any day they name, a vote can be taken, I believe the Republicans on this side of the Chamber, feeling the importance of passing some bill of this kind, would stay here until any day next week you might name.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will answer the Senator with perfect candor. There is no disposition on this side of the Chamber, so far as I know, to avoid any responsibility at all. We met on the first Monday of December last. We have been in continuous session now until the 4th of August—over eight months. You have had control of the majority of the Senate and of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. You had the privilege of bringing this bill in in January or in March or at any other time. You have brought it here at the heels of the session, passed by the House of Representatives after they had fixed the day for final adjournment, and now you ask us to forego an honest, full, and free discussion in order to gratify your views upon this matter.

We shall come to a vote just as soon as this question has been fully and fairly discussed; but I say to you in perfect candor, as every Senator here knows, we shall not profit by a night session. You have all had experience of night sessions. The Senator from Vermont knows that if he forces a night session he will not get a vote on this bill by eight o'clock in the morning, and why shall we do it?

We have been throwing no obstacles in your way. The discussion has been legitimate. There has been no unnecessary consumption of time. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] has made a fair and free discussion of the pending proposition, and a reasonable one. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] wants to speak, but no Senator desires to be forced into a discussion of this question after six o'clock. I appeal to the Senator from Vermont, in all fairness and justice, that he should allow us to adjourn to-day and go on with this bill to-morrow. We have not delayed taking it up.

Mr. RANSOM. On the contrary, we voted to take it up.

Mr. COCKRELL. We will go on just as long as you want to stay here, in the regular order, and discuss this matter, and dispose of it.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to inquire of him, without now asking him to fix a time, whether he is willing to express an opinion as to how long that discussion will occupy?

Mr. COCKRELL. I cannot tell to save my soul how much time the Senator from Kentucky and the two Senators from Massachusetts will consume. They have consumed all of to-day.

Mr. HOAR. I asked the Senator a courteous question, and he replies with a fling or a sneer.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, I do not; I say I cannot tell you. If I could tell you how many Senators would speak, I would do it. I do not expect myself so say a word, as I have not spoken on the bill. I am not asking for the consumption of time, and I do not propose to do it except in a certain emergency. I say to you in all candor that you are not going to have a vote to-night. That is all there is about it. If Senators are simply to come to contravening each other, there are some men here who are just as contrary as ever were born.

Mr. HOAR. Is the Senator willing to give an opinion as to the probable length of the debate, as he would upon any bill he introduced, and say that he thinks a certain time will be sufficient?

Mr. COCKRELL. I cannot tell about that. I say in perfect candor that I cannot tell the Senator. If I could I would.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator think we can finish this bill in a week?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no idea.

Mr. HOAR. Or in a month?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no idea, none in the world. I tell the Senator with perfect frankness that I do not know of any Senators who expect to speak except what I have learned just now, and that is the Senator from Alabama, who has taken the floor, and I believe the Senator from Florida, [Mr. CALL,] who was going to take the floor at the same time. If anybody else is going to make a speech, I do not know it.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator think they can get through in three weeks?

Mr. COCKRELL. We have had no caucus action on the matter. It is all individual merely.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator think we can get through with this question by debating it all day to-morrow and reaching a vote some time before midnight?

Mr. COCKRELL. I cannot tell that now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is there a desire to reach a vote upon it?

Mr. COCKRELL. I say in perfect frankness that you know you cannot have a vote to-night, and there is no use, after being in session for eight months, to keep the Senate here all night and have a real row, which you will have, and then accomplish nothing, which is the result of every night session I have ever seen here.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is there a willingness on the part of that side of the Chamber that we shall have a vote some time to-morrow, any time before midnight?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator from Ohio must know, with thirty-five or forty amendments already pending, and nearly as many to be proposed to the bill, in order to get the bill in proper shape, it would be utterly impossible to make any arrangement.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I understand the statement of the Senator from Delaware is that it is the purpose of the Democratic party to defeat the bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If you adopt our amendments without any hesitation we will vote to-night; but if you do not adopt our amendments we want to convince you that you are wrong, and make you, by argument and reason, come to our views on this question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand all this amounts to a declaration on the part of the Democratic party that they will not allow a bill for the reduction of taxes to pass at this session.

Mr. SAULSBURY. You have put to us the alternative of taking your bill, which you have conceived in caucus and brought here, or having nothing. We now present to you another alternative, to take the bill that we want or you take nothing.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand that we propose to take the bill sent to us by the House of Representatives, at a late day, I am sorry to say, and so far as the reproach made by the Senator from Missouri on the House of Representatives is concerned, I do not think it was in order. Still the bill came to us at a late hour, but since it came the Committee on Finance have diligently pursued it and reported it here and presented it with no amendment, so as not to excite debate. After that, upon the hostile demonstration of Democratic Senators, we proposed certain amendments, and I think we did wrong in doing that, but we are now willing to withdraw those amendments. You talk about the caucus. We have abandoned the caucus propositions, withdrawn them, and let the question stand on the bill as it came from the House; and now I am told by the Senator from Delaware that they do not intend to allow us to pass the bill at the present session.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I did not say that. I say we want you to adopt our views. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that our bowels of compassion have been yearning towards our brethren on the other side; for we know the very embarrassing position in which the Committee on Ways and Means of the other House have placed them by sending this bill here at all. We know that they feel they have been put in a very wrong and false position by the action of the other House in sending this bill here, and they are trying to parry the effect. We understand it; the country understands it. We have been engaged here in a farce for the last ten days on this question, and the country knows it. It would have been a comedy if it had not been so near the end of the session and such inclement warm weather. It would have excited the risibilities of the whole country to see the anxiety with which the Republican side of this Chamber were endeavoring to relieve themselves from the false position in which they had been put by the introduction of this "little joker" in the other House, and which passed that body and was sent to the Senate.

We understand the embarrassing position you are in, gentlemen; and our bowels of compassion, I repeat, have been yearning toward you. We would gladly relieve you if we could; but it is the position in which your own friends have put you, and you must excuse us now, after you have sent us this bill here.

If you want to do something for the country, relieve the oppressed people from taxation; and if we can hitch it onto your little bank bill, and your patent-medicine bill, and your perfumery bill, we will hitch on a bill which will grant substantial relief to the oppressed industries of the country; and we think we shall thereby have been doing a valuable work for the country. We are willing to stay here with you until the 1st day of October to accomplish such a purpose.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Will you vote on it?

Mr. SAULSBURY. You hear the thundering voice of the people coming up from every quarter, from the State of Pennsylvania as well as other quarters, demanding that you shall accede to the just propositions made on this side of the Chamber, and we call upon you to relieve yourselves now from the rebuke which you will obtain in the November elections if you do not do your duty to the people of this country whom you have oppressed in the past by taxation and whom you now refuse to relieve, while you step forward with this little bill and propose to relieve the bankers of the country and men who have money in the banks, ourselves in fact, for we all keep little bank accounts. It is proposed to relieve ourselves from the onerous duty of a 2-cent stamp upon every check when we draw money from bank, while to the men and women who are laboring from morn till night for the necessities of life you refuse utterly to extend any relief.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. PLATT in the chair.) The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut; I yield to everybody.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am very much obliged to the Senator. I know the other side are willing to prolong the discussion. The Senator from Vermont, it seems to me, made a very reasonable proposition that we should take the bill as it came from the House abolishing the direct taxes upon everything except whisky, tobacco, and beer, and even reducing the tax upon tobacco from 16 to 12 cents, providing also for a rebate. He asked the other side if they would agree not to pass it, but to take a vote upon it now, and saying that if it be a proposition that gives no real relief to the country, a proposition upon which they could make good points in the campaign, one upon which they could damage the Republican party, we should be exceedingly gratified to make the test and have them take a vote on it. We do not ask them to pass it; we ask them to defeat it if they dare. We ask them only to take a vote, but they say it is not reduction enough.

Mr. President, how much is reduction enough? As the bill came from the House it took off about $26,000,000 of taxation, of that, to the American people, odious taxation, taxation that comes into every man's house and taxes him a cent for his little box of matches, &c. I need not specify. We have been made familiar by the four hundred and fifty or five hundred or six hundred repetitions of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] with the exact details of that little bill. If $26,000,000 is not enough, suppose we add the reduction upon tobacco from 16 cents to 12 cents, which is about six million more, making $32,000,000. Is not that about enough reduction to make, when we have been obliged by Democratic deficiencies, deficiencies made by Democrats, and by the necessity of a pension bill passed in a Democratic Congress, when we have—

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President—

Mr. HAWLEY. No, not a word. When we have been under the necessity of increasing the appropriations so largely, is it not about enough to make $32,000,000 reduction in view of the uncertainty of the future? Now they find fault with us that we did not bring in these reductions earlier. No man could have told last December just exactly what revenue we were to have. It has turned out to be a wonderful surplus, a magnificent surplus. We are startled ourselves to think that our surplus revenue has been $150,000,000, and that we are enabled to reduce our indebtedness to that extent. It is too much. I am sorry, not that we are able to do it, but I am sorry that there is not a disposition to reduce our taxation.

As matters go on now, with the increase of importations, I am very much afraid that the surplus revenue may be $175,000,000, or perhaps $200,000,000 next year. There is no reason in taxing the people of the country to that extent. There is no sense in it; there is no justice in it, and we stand here to beg you to-day not to make a reduction but to beg you to let us have a vote upon it, and if the vote will hurt us before the people we rejoice to make the challenge. Try it. We do not ask you to do it.

You say you have not discussed this question. There is not a point in the bill, there is not a point in the whole subject, that has not been discussed over and over and over, and hammered and bored and drilled and pounded into the American people for years and years past. You began it when the taxes were first imposed by denouncing the match tax and all direct taxation as the oppression, the egregious oppression and torment of a Republican majority.

We invite you not to remove them; we dare you to vote on the subject. That is where you stand to-day, and if $32,000,000 be not enough—

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to know if this debate is to be taken out of my time?

Mr. HAWLEY. No; the gentleman's time is eternal; we all know that. If $32,000,000 is not enough, please name your figure. About how much ought to be taken off? Will you add sugar? We will add any amendment that will take several millions more. I do not think you ought to go above about $32,000,000. It is a little dangerous, with our excessive appropriations, but if you think $40,000,000—

Mr. RANSOM. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HAWLEY. Just wait. I am stealing my time now. I do not want to be responsible for—

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from Alabama allowed you to interrupt him. Will you not permit me to ask one question for information?

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, yes; you are a good—

Mr. RANSOM. I am very much in earnest in this subject, if the Senator from Connecticut will believe me. I understand the Senator to say that he thinks the reduction of revenue ought to be about $32,000,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not make the figure. I am anxious to accommodate.

Mr. RANSOM. I understood the Senator just now to say that he thought it would be safe to reduce it $32,000,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, I do.

Mr. RANSOM. With the present large expenditures you do not think it safe to go beyond that now?

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not say with certainty.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator said that was his impression at this moment. Then you will reduce it by this bill $32,000,000. That is all the reduction you propose?

Mr. HAWLEY. I propose what is agreeable.

Mr. RANSOM. Then you do not mean to touch the tariff. You have by the reduction of internal revenue made all the reduction you propose, and the result will be your enormous tariff will be left untouched, unreformed, for you have just said that $32,000,000 is the amount you thought may be safely reduced. That being done, according to your opinion no other reduction can take place and the tariff must stand just as it is.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not see the question the Senator was going to ask. No, we tried to begin upon the tariff, and in order that there might be no argument about it we took up two or three things that nearly the whole world agreed upon. But that would not suit them. Now, in August, after eight months of session, they wish to open the whole illimitable subject, though a handsome majority of the Senate has voted to commit the tariff in general to a commission for a report that will come in in December to be acted upon. In the mean time we offer just as much reduction as any safe business man in this world ought to attempt at present.

I submit it to bankers, to business men, the statisticians, and the statesmen of the United States and the world over if from thirty-five to forty million dollars reduction is not as much as is safe to try to make in the present condition, with the uncertainty about us, the possibility of great wars, and the enormous appropriations that we have made. I submit that question to the American people at the polls, and upon it I invite and challenge debate.

If $32,000,000 is not enough, name your figure, take five or eight million dollars more; I will not quarrel with you about a little trifle of that kind. Americans have got over bothering about eight or ten million dollars, especially after the river and harbor bills we have agreed to. I will agree to all the reduction any business man will say can safely be made, but I ask no favor of any kind. Do I beg you? No, I do not; I dare you to have a vote without any further debate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. MORGAN. I yield to the Senator from Missouri because he is a man who will not take a dare by banter offered to him and is always on the floor when it is made; and I am glad to see him.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to disclose to the Senate a little secret and let the Senate know what has inspired the deep devotion and earnestness of my good friend from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. What is it?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will read it to you.

Mr. HAWLEY. Good.

Mr. COCKRELL. There was a committee appointed to investigate certain charges. Upon that committee was the Senator from Connecticut, and the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] was the chairman of it, and I happened to be a lay member of that committee. On the 31st day of May, 1882, before the Windom investigating committee, as it was called, there was a very distinguished Republican summoned. His name was Henry B. Miller, of Chicago, largely engaged in the whisky business. You will find that on page 20 of the testimony. Now turn to page 57 of the testimony taken before that committee, when Mr. Miller was under examination, and you will find this:

Mr. COCKRELL. We are getting away with about $150,000,000 of it this year in paying debts.

The question was the heavy revenues that the Government was receiving. The witness, this Mr. Miller, replies:

Well, your debts will be paid at this rate in about three years, and you cannot pay any more unless you go on Wall street and buy bonds at a premium. Now, I do not suppose we ourselves would have asked for a reduction, but we could not help it.

The friends, this witness says, of internal-revenue relief would not have asked a reduction, but they could not help it.

There were three or four bills introduced in Congress for the reduction of the tax, and we preferred to take charge of that ourselves, because this agitation was hurting our business. Then the tariff men—of course there is so much money coming in, and the tariff men do not want to take it off the tariff, and as I have always been educated in that doctrine, as a Henry Clay Whig, I am in favor of a protective tariff. I have always advocated a reduction of the tax on whisky.

Q. For the benefit of the tariff?

A. Yes.

Q. You made a kind of a combination with the tariff men?

A. Oh, no; they seduced us and then went back on us. After they seduced us they jilted us.

Q. When they got the tariff-commission bill through they were not so much in favor of the reduction of internal-revenue taxes?

A. Oh, no; they were tearing everything to pieces for the reduction of internal-revenue taxes until they got what they wanted, and then they left us out in the cold.

Now you see the reason of the earnestness and devotion of the Senator from Connecticut. He is trying to make the world believe in the honesty and sincerity of these men who are favoring a reduction of the internal-revenue taxes of the country, so that the tariff cannot be touched. They combined with the whisky men, then jilted the whisky men, and now the elections are coming on they fear their power, and they are tearing themselves to pieces with earnestness, with devotion, just as my good friend from Connecticut has done, to convince the whisky men of the country that they were honest and sincere.

Where does the demand for the reduction of internal-revenue taxes come from? From what source? From those who favor a high protective tariff, and the sole and only object under the shining sun is to take off an amount of internal-revenue taxes so that the tariff cannot be touched. There, in a nutshell, is the whole object and aim of this matter. It is not to benefit the tax-payers of this country; it is not to benefit the yeomanry who toil, and by their toil and sweat earn their daily bread.

You refused right here in the Senate to vote a tax off the producers of tobacco. You are not seeking to benefit them, and now you undertake to parade yourselves before the country as in favor of reducing taxation when it is only to convince the allies you made last fall and jilted, the whisky men, that you are honest and sincere in your first combination.

You can all readily see why the Senator from Connecticut is so earnest. He saw this investigation. He saw the attitude that the friends of this measure were placed in by this testimony of "Buffalo" Miller, as they call him. He lives in Chicago, I believe.

Mr. LOGAN. He used to live in Chicago. He lives in Springfield, Illinois.

Mr. COCKRELL. He formerly lived in Chicago.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; a distiller there.

Mr. COCKRELL. Here was the combination, and when the tariff-commission bill got there they deserted and abandoned the ally they had prostituted, and when the fact is made known and this jilting is published then my good friend from Connecticut is trying to do away with the whole force and effect of it.

The Senator talks about reducing the taxes $32,000,000. What is the effect of that reduction of taxation? It is to leave in existence that amount of interest-bearing bonds, the hoarded wealth of the country. The past year by the surplus revenue we paid off $150,000,000. What was the effect of that? We forced $150,000,000 of idle, inactive, burdensome, interest-bearing capital out of its hiding place into the avenues of business in this country. Now you propose to prevent a reduction of the bonded, interest-bearing debt of the country; yes, reduce the taxes so that we cannot pay off the bonds.

Over $400,000,000 are now due and payable at the option of the Government. If we pay at the rate we have paid the past year we can pay them off in three years. Yet you are clamoring for a reduction of taxes, not to benefit the tax-payers of this country, but to keep on the high protective tariff. That is the alpha and the omega, the beginning and the end, of this matter. If there is no reduction of the kind you propose, the country is not hurt, the country is benefited; the laboring, toiling masses are benefited in this country. If there be no reduction of the kind you propose we shall pay off a larger amount of this interest-bearing, burdensome debt, and we shall force every dollar that is paid off from its hiding-place into the channels of commerce and business in this country. There will be railroad development; there will be public enterprises all over the country; there will be manufacturing establishments put up here and there; there will be ocean commerce; there will be the establishment of steamship lines from your eastern coast and from

New Orleans and other places; the idle, unemployed capital of the country will seek investment in that way.

Mr. President, we are perfectly willing as soon as these matters can be fairly and legitimately discussed to vote upon them; but knowing that the Senator from Connecticut had been present on that committee and heard this exposed, I could not forego the opportunity and the pleasure of presenting to the world the motives which inspired his earnestness and his devotion.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have seldom listened to a speech that has given me more unalloyed pleasure. I do not refer alone to the courtesy and kindness of the gentleman, with whom my personal relations are unexceptionable, but to the perfect simplicity with which he has fallen into a bottomless trap. Does the Senator desire high taxation that we may make a very heavy reduction on the debt annually? Does he desire to make a great payment on the debt every year?

Mr. COCKRELL. I hold to that doctrine which has always been taught and practiced by that party to which I have the honor of belonging, the payment of the national debt honestly and justly and as rapidly as possible; no standing debt in this country. The people want no bonded aristocracy.

Mr. HAWLEY. As honestly as some of the gentleman's Democratic States have paid their State debts?

Mr. COCKRELL. That, the Senator knows, does not refer to my State.

Mr. HAWLEY. No, I am happy to say it does not.

Mr. COCKRELL. My State needs no apology or vindication by the side of any State in this Union in anything.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am happy to say it; and certainly mine does not, which has just renewed some of her debts at a rate of 3.16, selling a 3½ per cent. twenty-year bond at 105. My State does not need it.

Mr. COCKRELL. We borrowed money in Missouri at 2½ per cent. when you gentlemen would not let us fund United States bonds for the Treasury at 3 per cent.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think the Senator will say that they borrowed at 2½.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do, and the record will show it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will show that my State has made a loan at the lowest rate known among our States. But we will postpone that discussion.

The Senator introduced me to a stranger to-night, Henry B. Miller. I have been trying to remember Henry B. Miller. I had an old friend named Miller in college who went to Chicago and began the practice of law, but I think his name was not Henry B., nor is he a distiller.

Mr. LOGAN. Call him "Buffalo Miller," and then everybody will know him. That is the name he goes by.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know "Buffalo" Miller, though I have heard of Buffalo Bill. I think there is not a Republican among the distillers. I never heard Henry B. Miller's testimony to a supposed bargain made with high-tariff men. Probably I was absent from the sub-committee that morning. I never heard of it. If I had heard Henry B. Miller say there was a bargain with protectionists that direct taxation should be abolished in order to secure a high protective tariff, I should not have believed Henry B. Miller, because I should probably have heard of such a treaty before Miller testified of it. I have the credit of belonging to a high-tariff region.

The gentleman was never so mistaken in his life as when he supposes that he can get a vote in all New England for taking off all direct taxes. I tell him candidly I do not know a newspaper, a stumper, or an individual, high or low, who believes in taking them off. About the only persons in the United States whom I have heard of as advocating an abolition of all direct taxes are the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. VANCE.] The Senator from North Carolina said yesterday:

Do you want to give any relief to the American people? Then why mock the common sense of mankind in this way? Give us a total abolition of the internal-revenue system. It is a remnant of the war. Wipe it all out and lay your duties upon the products that are imported in this country in such a manner that they will yield the necessary revenue. Wipe it all out and then your banks and bank capital may go; then your patent medicines also may go.

He proposed to us that if we would take all the tax off whisky and beer and tobacco we might have the tax off banks and banking, matches, checks, &c. That is a most extraordinary proposition; that is the proposition of the wildest protectionists that I have heard of in any section of the country. We received from direct taxation last year $146,000,000. If we should abolish all direct taxation we have got to add $146,000,000, or nearly that, to the duties upon imports. Will the gentleman be so kind as to take the list and tell me how that tax is to be imposed without making a very high and an exceedingly protective tariff, not a prohibitory tariff, because you must get your revenue; but I defy any statistician to levy an additional $146,000,000 without vastly increasing the list of articles upon which the duty has been levied. Yet our Secretaries of the Treasury, our Republican economists, have always advised to reduce as soon as possible the number of imported articles taxed, and we have been very glad to do it. But if we follow the only men in this Chamber who have advocated an abolition of all direct taxation, we have got to restore the great number of articles taxed under a war tariff and on many things to increase the present duty.

There are no such extreme and fanatical protectionists in New England as the gentleman seems to intimate. I will not vote for the entire abolition of direct taxation, nor can the gentleman find a wise government or a wise head of finance in any foreign country that is in favor of taking all duties from whisky and tobacco. They are the legitimate plunder of the tax collector, the legitimate plunder of the exchequer in every government of the world. They all get a large part of their revenues from them. We should be immeasurably and insufferably foolish if we abolished those taxes. I am against it. The gentleman made no point against me in that respect.

I close, with my thanks to the Senator from Alabama for the time he has granted me, by again inviting and more than inviting those gentlemen to have a vote even upon their whole thirty-five proposed amendments without another word of debate. I could not teach them anything; I see that is useless. I think they believe they know it all; and indeed each side thinks it knows it all already; and let us vote on all the propositions in succession.

Mr. MORGAN. It would be very ungracious in the Senator from Connecticut to demand a vote at this moment after having occupied the floor so long.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I am willing to yield.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator has occupied a whole hour and more of time that I had intended to take to inform not the Senate of the United States so much as my own constituents of the real situation of the case before the country, for if I get them to understand it, that will be entirely satisfactory to me. I do not expect in anything I have to say to change any vote here, to change any opinion, to alter anybody's course, but I do expect to inform the people I have the honor in part to represent here of the grounds of our action and what it is we propose to do.

I was remarking about an hour and a half ago, when some of the Senators interrupted me, that since I had had the honor of a seat in this body I had never before had the opportunity of considering the subject of the tariff; and while I do not profess to be entirely competent to deal with that broad and very comprehensive subject, there are some features of it which concern the people whom I have the honor to represent which I believe I do understand as they understand them, and on which I feel as they feel, and which I desire to relieve against as they desire that they shall be relieved against.

No man ought to expect to be heard in speaking over a tariff which comprehends 2,000 articles of taxation, except to say that any country must be very badly tax-ridden which finds among its industries and among those things that the people are compelled to consume in order to live and have civilization a list of 2,000 articles of taxation.

I do not know that any one statement could be made which would point more directly upon the good sense and the statesmanship of the age in which we live than the fact that we have now after twenty years or more a tax list which covers over 2,000 articles of taxation. We might as well expect health in the human body with 2,000 distinct diseases preying upon it at the same time as to expect health in the body-politic with so broad and enormous a list of taxable articles as we have in our country.

I have not the slightest responsibility in the world for the existence of this system in its present form, or rather in its present deformity. I may justly say, I think, that the Democratic party has no responsibility for its existence in its present form; but I am not here this evening for the purpose of vindicating the conduct of the Democratic party or of berating the conduct of the Republican party upon this question, for since we have dismissed from our contemplation some subjects which heretofore have been a great grief to the country and which we have been compelled to get rid of in the best way we could, I rejoice at the fact that there is not only liberty of thought but liberality of thought in all parts of this great country upon this very important topic of tariff taxation.

In witnessing the division of opinion which has occurred and been exemplified by Senators here in the offering of amendments and in the votes given on this question, I have recognized the approach of a period in our history when the American Senate and House of Representatives and when the entire Federal Government will address itself to the consideration of this proposition, that we are here as the agents and representatives of the people of the United States, and that we desire to do them all the good that we can in our legislation.

I recognize and I welcome the approach of that period in our history when the Congress of the United States, and the Executive too, are no longer to devote their attention simply and purely to the maintenance of the political ascendancy of one party over another party, but when they will remember that there are some interests of the people of this country which even rise above party consideration and which demand at our hands that, forgetting our divisions to some extent, we should contrive for the people of the United States such measures as are just and equitable, such measures as comport with the genius of our institutions, and such measures as will bring profit and honor to the country, not disgrace and distress. So, sir, I welcome this tariff discussion in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. PENDLETON. (at six o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) It is very apparent that there is not a quorum of the Senate here; and with the consent of the Senator from Alabama I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PENDLETON. Let us see if there are enough Senators present to call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the call for the yeas and nays seconded? [Counting.] The yeas and nays are ordered. There is a sufficient number up.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask to have a count. There is not a fifth of the members present seconding the call that I see.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a matter which the Chair must decide.

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly the Chair must decide it, and I submit humbly to the Chair that he ought to decide it according to the fact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no doubt whatever that more than one-fifth of the Senators present raised their hands to second the call.

Mr. LOGAN. How did the Senator from Ohio get the Senator from Alabama off the floor?

Mr. PENDLETON. He yielded for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. MORGAN. It was an act of politeness on my part.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Ohio doubts that a sufficient number has seconded the call for the yeas and nays, the Chair will put the question again.

Mr. PENDLETON. I do not make any question with the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will try it again. Those who second the demand for the yeas and nays will stand or raise their hands. [Counting.] A sufficient number is up, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL, (when the name of Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, was called.) My colleague [Mr. VEST] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] are paired.

Mr. BAYARD, (when the name of Mr. DAWES was called.) The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. CONGER, (when Mr. FERRY's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. FERRY] is paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.]

Mr. RANSOM, (when Mr. FRYE's name was called.) The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. BAYARD, (when Mr. HAMPTON's name was called.) The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. MILLER, of New York, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME.]

Mr. MORGAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

Mr. PENDLETON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

Mr. RANSOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

Mr. SAULSBURY, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.]

Mr. RANSOM, (when Mr. VANCE's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. VANCE] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MITCHELL.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] If I were not paired, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 15; as follows:

| YEAS—9. | | | |
|--------------------|-------------------|-------------------|------------|
| Bayard, | Coke, | Jonas, | Voorhees, |
| Beck, | Davis of W. Va., | Maxey, | Walker. |
| Call, | | | |
| NAYS—15. | | | |
| Aldrich, | Harrison, | Mahone, | Rollins, |
| Blair, | Hawley, | Miller of Cal., | Sherman, |
| Chilcott, | Logan, | Morrill, | Windom. |
| Conger, | McMillan, | Platt, | |
| ABSENT—52. | | | |
| Allison, | Ferry, | Ingalls, | Pendleton, |
| Anthony, | Frye, | Jackson, | Plumb, |
| Brown, | Garland, | Johnston, | Pugh, |
| Butler, | George, | Jones of Florida, | Ransom, |
| Camden, | Gorman, | Jones of Nevada, | Saulsbury, |
| Cameron of Pa., | Groome, | Kellogg, | Saunders, |
| Cameron of Wis., | Grover, | Lamar, | Sawyer, |
| Cockrell, | Hale, | Lapham, | Sewell, |
| Davis of Illinois, | Hampton, | McDill, | Slater, |
| Dawes, | Harris, | McPherson, | Vance, |
| Edmunds, | Hill of Colorado, | Miller of N. Y., | Van Wyck, |
| Fair, | Hill of Georgia, | Mitchell, | Vest, |
| Farley, | Hoar, | Morgan, | Williams. |

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate refuses to adjourn; but no quorum has voted.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Vermont if he will consent to an adjournment? It is now seven o'clock, and it must be apparent to him, as it is to us all, that nothing can be done to-night.

Mr. ROLLINS. I object to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Nothing can be done; there is no quorum, and we shall have to sit here, I suppose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The only thing in order is a call of the Senate.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let us have a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If any Senators desire to negotiate with reference to the matter of adjournment, the Chair by unanimous consent will allow it. Otherwise a call of the Senate will be ordered. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. It seems to be obvious that the other side of the Chamber are determined to leave us without a quorum—

Mr. GROOME. Both sides.

Mr. COCKRELL. I protest against any such assumption. For every absent Democrat there is an absent Republican.

Mr. ROLLINS. They persistently refuse to allow us to vote until we find ourselves without a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But it is not in order for the Senator from Vermont to make a speech.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for a call of the Senate, so as to see, after these remarks, who is absent and who is present.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask for a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL, (when the name of Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, was called.) The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] and my colleague [Mr. VEST] are paired, and are absent from the Senate Chamber.

Mr. BAYARD, (when the name of Mr. DAWES was called.) The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. BAYARD, (when Mr. HAMPTON's name was called.) The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. HARRIS, (when Mr. JACKSON's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. JACKSON] is paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.] Both Senators are absent.

Mr. PENDLETON, (when his name was called.) While I am here I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] who did not believe that any vote would be reached to-night.

Mr. RANSOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

Mr. SAULSBURY, (when his name was called.) I am paired, and I do not know whether I am here for the purpose of this call or not. I am simply present; but I am paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.]

Mr. SAUNDERS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. CAMDEN.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MORGAN. It is due to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that I should say that I am paired with him for one hour.

Mr. McDILL. I wish to say that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER] is necessarily absent from the Senate this afternoon, and upon all votes I am paired with him.

Mr. VOORHEES. My understanding is that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.] Both Senators are absent.

On the call of the roll the following Senators were found to be present:

| | | | |
|-----------|------------------|------------------|------------|
| Aldrich, | Davis of W. Va., | McMillan, | Ransom, |
| Bayard, | Gorman, | Mahone, | Rollins, |
| Beck, | Groome, | Maxey, | Saulsbury, |
| Blair, | Harris, | Miller of Cal., | Saunders, |
| Call, | Harrison, | Miller of N. Y., | Sewell, |
| Chilcott, | Hawley, | Morgan, | Sherman, |
| Cockrell, | Jonas, | Morrill, | Voorhees, |
| Coke, | Logan, | Pendleton, | Walker, |
| Conger, | McDill, | Pugh, | Windom. |

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call of the Senate discloses thirty-six Senators present, no quorum.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let the absentees be called.

Mr. RANSOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MORGAN. Would it be in order for me to proceed? I see a beggarly array of empty benches, but I am very much in the habit of seeing that, and it does not disturb me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to adjourn was made, and no quorum was present upon the vote. No quorum being disclosed upon a call of the Senate, no motion is in order except a motion to adjourn, or to request the attendance of absentees.

Mr. RANSOM. I have made a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will take this occasion to say that it is utterly impossible to proceed unless Senators assist the Chair in preserving order. The yeas and nays are demanded on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Vermont if he desires to proceed with the consideration of the bill? If so, I shall vote with him.

Mr. MORRILL. I do.

Mr. HARRIS. Then he will have my vote.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL, (when the name of Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, was called.) The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] and my colleague [Mr. VEST] are paired.

Mr. McDILL, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. SLATER.]

Mr. RANSOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

Mr. SEWELL, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. McPHERSON,] with the right to vote only to make a quorum.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MORGAN. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

The result was announced—yeas 7, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—7.

| | | | |
|---------|------------------|-----------|---------|
| Bayard, | Davis of W. Va., | Jonas, | Walker. |
| Call, | Gorman, | Voorhees, | |

NAYS—20.

| Aldrich, | Groome, | McMillan, | Platt, |
| Blair, | Harris, | Mahone, | Pugh, |

| Fair, | Jackson, | Plumb, | |

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate refuses to adjourn; but no quorum has voted.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that he move on the former call that absent Senators be requested to return to the Senate, or that he ask for a call of the Senate. Of course he knows that he can accomplish nothing without a quorum of the Senate, and we had better secure the assistance of a quorum before we proceed.

Mr. MORRILL. From the tactics pursued it is obvious that we cannot reach any vote to-night. I therefore move that we do now adjourn.

Mr. MORGAN. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. That motion is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not strictly in order if a point is made upon it.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not make the point.

Mr. COCKRELL. I congratulate the Senator from Vermont on his successful effort.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it; the ayes have it.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask for the yeas and nays. ["Too late!"]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire insist on calling for the yeas and nays?

Mr. HARRIS. Had not the result been announced?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (at seven o'clock and thirteen minutes p. m.) The Senator from New Hampshire demands the yeas and nays. Is the call seconded? [Counting.] The call is not seconded; and the yeas and nays are not ordered. The Senate stands adjourned until to-morrow at eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, August 4, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate, in pursuance of the Constitution, had proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, returned to the House of Representatives by the President with his objections, and sent by the House of Representatives to the Senate with the message of the President returning the bill, and had passed the same, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 1472) for the relief of Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of Haller Nutt, deceased.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 929) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Saint Joseph, in the State of Missouri;

A bill (H. R. No. 1364) to authorize the auditing of certain unpaid accounts in the Indian Bureau by the accounting officers of the Treasury;

A bill (H. R. No. 5841) to provide for deductions from the gross tonnage of vessels of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 6111) donating condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6520) in relation to land patents in the Virginia military district of Ohio; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 288) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution to provide temporarily for expenditures of the Government.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, to the concurrent resolution of the House to print 300,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture of the year 1881.

EDWARD K. WINSHIP.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time Senate bill No. 97, to authorize the settlement of the accounts of Acting Assistant Paymaster Edward K. Winship, United States Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the Treasury of the United States be, and they are hereby, directed, in settling the accounts of Edward K. Winship, acting assistant paymaster, United States Navy, to credit him with all stoppages charged against him, amounting to $5,098.15.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the report be read.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. If the House will give me a few minutes I think I can explain this bill as satisfactorily as the report would explain it. Mr. Winship was a paymaster on board the supply ship Massachusetts which supplied the blockading fleet on our coast during the war. He disbursed something like six or seven millions of dollars. When he settled with the Department his accounts were all right. Some fifteen or sixteen years afterward, while he was abroad, he was sued for a balance of $5,098, and judgment was obtained against him and execution issued. On his return he called at the Department and asked permission to examine the vouchers on file. He was allowed to do so; and it then turned out that there was one voucher for $6,000 which the Treasury Department had not credited him with. The judgment which had been obtained against him had passed into the form of an execution, and therefore the Department had no power to make an adjustment.

I hold in my hand the Auditor's report, in which it is stated that the "balance due the United States per official statement is $5,098.18," which is thus explained:

| Dr. | |
|--|-----------|
| To cash received on requisition 5457, warrant 3432, draft 395, July 1, 1864, and not charged on account current, as follows: | |
| Amount of requisition and draft..... | $206,000 |
| Charged on account current..... | 200,000 |
| Amount received and unaccounted for..... | 6,000 |

That is to say, Mr. Winship received a draft for $206,000 on the 1st of July, 1864, with which he proceeded to the fleet, instructed to pay $50,000 to Paymaster Bradford for one purpose and $150,000 for another purpose, and $6,000 to be paid to the paymaster at Port Royal. I will incorporate the entire statement of the Auditor.

The statement is as follows:

Reconciling statement in the account of Edward K. Winship, late acting assistant paymaster, United States Navy. Supplementary to Report No. 6079. (Bonds, December 24, 1862.)

|---|------------|
| Balance due United States, per official statement | $5,098 18 |
| Balance due paymaster, per account current | 1,510 15 |
| Difference | 6,608 33 |

Thus explained:
To cash received on requisition 5457, warrant 3432, draft 395, July 1, 1864, and not charged on account current, as follows:
Amount of requisition and draft..... $206,000 00

SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, December 2, 1875.

E. B. CURTIS, Acting Comptroller.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FOURTH AUDITOR'S OFFICE, December 2, 1875.

S. J. W. TABER, Auditor.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I hold in my hand certified copies from the Auditor's department, which are as follows:

Received 5 July, 1864, from E. K. Winship, A. A. paymaster, U. S. Navy, under appropriation "pay of the Navy," one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, for which I am accountable to the U. S. Navy Department.

J. O. BRADFORD,

Fleet Paymaster, U. S. S. A. B. Squadron.

$150,000.

Certified to be a true copy.

CHAS. BEARDSLEY,

Fourth Auditor.

Received 5 July 1864, from E. K. Winship, A. A. paymaster, U. S. Navy, acc't "prize-money," fifty thousand dollars, for which I am accountable to the U. S. Navy Department.

J. O. BRADFORD,

Fleet Paymaster, U. S. S. A. B. Squadron.

$50,000.

Certified to be a true copy.

CHAS. BEARDSLEY,

Fourth Auditor.

Received 6th July, 1864, from E. K. Winship, A. A. paymaster, U. S. Navy, under appropriation for "naval station, Port Royal," six thousand dollars, for which I am accountable to the U. S. Navy Department.

FRANK C. COSBY,

Paymaster, U. S. S. Vermont.

$6,000.

Certified to be a true copy.

CHAS. BEARDSLEY,

Fourth Auditor.

That voucher for $6,000 was never credited to Mr. Winship, but the Treasury Department was so well satisfied that the judgment obtained against him was wrong that they have been holding back the execution in order to give Mr. Winship an opportunity to obtain from Congress authority to have this matter settled at the Department.

Mr. RANDALL. Is there any letter from the Department in corroboration of the statements which the gentleman has made? Not that I doubt his word, of course.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. No, sir. I will say to the gentleman in frankness that although the Senate committee, as well as the House committee, reported favorably upon this bill, these papers never came into my hands until to-day. As I am informed, these certified copies from the Auditor were furnished in duplicate. One set of them was handed to Senator JONES, who mislaid them, and therefore they do not appear in the report. All this matter has been thoroughly examined, and the Treasury Department is satisfied that the measure is right. I trust that no member of the House will object to doing justice to an officer who disbursed $6,000,000 and of whom the Auditor says that his accounts were excellently kept and properly rendered.

Mr. HOLMAN. This claim appears to be meritorious; but there is one explanation which I think ought to be given. I would like to know how it happens that this voucher for $6,000 was overlooked in the statement of this officer's accounts.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. It is to be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that this officer after leaving the Navy went to Philadelphia and was there two years as chief officer of the sub-treasury. After serving in that capacity, he went abroad; and while he was abroad suit was brought against him and his bondsmen without notice to him of the deficiency, and with no opportunity on his part for explanation. Upon his return he went to the Treasury Department and asked to look at his vouchers, which were handed to him. He called upon the officers of the Treasury to show what they had done with this voucher for $6,000. They said it had not been applied at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was there any reason why it was not applied?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I do not know the reason.

Mr. MILLS. I suppose it was overlooked by the officer in drawing the account.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. It is admitted at the Treasury Department that this measure is right. I will say that this receipt for $6,000 is larger in amount than the deficiency with which he was charged, which was only $5,098. This officer was accustomed to go on board the Massachusetts, taking with him from $250,000 to $500,000 to be disbursed among the fleet. He left on the 1st day of July, and on the 6th he received this voucher.

Mr. MILLS. We are all satisfied.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORFEITURE OF RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have a resolution of public interest which I ask may be read. I hope it will be adopted by unanimous consent.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That House bill No. 2878 entitled "A bill in relation to land grants," which bill declares forfeited all lands heretofore granted by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads to which the railroad companies which obtained the benefit of the grants were not entitled to patents when the time expired for the completion of the railroads respectively, and that said land be restored to the public domain, be made a special order for December 6, 1882, and be open to debate and amendment until disposed of, subject to reports of the Committees on Ways and Means and Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. HAZELTON. I object; I would like to know something about it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman wish these companies to retain 96,000,000 acres of lands wrongfully obtained by them?

Mr. HAZELTON. Where does the resolution come from?

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer it. Is not the gentleman willing to have it considered?

Mr. HAZELTON. Let it come in in regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is its regular order. If a measure of great public moment like this is to be kept out by the cry of "regular order," then I must insist on the regular order as to other propositions. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to object.

Mr. HOLMAN. Perhaps he does not understand the measure.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the resolution is not before the House.

PROTESTANT ORPHAN ASYLUM, NATCHEZ, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2455) for the relief of the Protestant orphan asylum of Natchez, in the State of Mississippi.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized and required to audit, settle, and pay the claim of the Protestant orphan asylum of the city of Natchez for the use and occupation of the property of the said asylum by the United States military authorities during the late war: Provided, That the amount allowed shall not exceed the sum of $1,750; nor shall any allowance be made for any damage done to said property during such use or occupation, or otherwise.

Mr. MILLS. I will ask whether it has been customary to pass bills here making payment for the use and occupation of houses by Federal troops in the South during the war? There has been a claim here for the use and occupation of a Methodist establishment in the city of Nashville; but I do not think we have ever paid that claim.

Mr. LYNCH. I will explain this matter.

Mr. MANNING. Because we have not paid proper claims heretofore, I hope the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] will not object to this.

Mr. MILLS. I have not made objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to object to this measure.

Mr. MANNING. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not object.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. It is in conflict with the settled policy of the House and the settled policy of the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not say anything about the claim, but the subject seems to be a meritorious one, and I will state to my friend from Pennsylvania if it be expressly provided that this shall not be understood as giving the sanction of Congress to the payment for property occupied by the Federal troops in the insurrectionary States during the war, then he ought to withdraw his objection.

Mr. MILLS. We will not accept any such construction.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from Indiana favor the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I say the subject is a meritorious one, and with the reservation I have mentioned I do favor it.

Mr. MANNING. This cannot be invoked as a precedent one way or the other.

Mr. LYNCH. If I am allowed to explain the matter, I do not think there will be a single objection to it.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I do not object of course to the gentleman from Mississippi being allowed to explain the bill.

Mr. MANNING. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi in charge of the bill will have an opportunity to explain the reason why it should be passed.

Mr. LYNCH. I will be glad to explain it, if the House will allow me.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I desire to offer a resolution for reference.

Mr. LYNCH. I wish to say this in regard to this bill—

Mr. MANNING. I hope we will have order, so the gentleman from Mississippi can be heard in explanation of this measure.

Mr. LYNCH. In regard to this matter, Mr. Speaker, I will say that the bill introduced by me in the Forty-fourth Congress recommended an appropriation of $10,000 to reimburse the Protestant orphan asylum at Natchez, Mississippi, for damage done to that property during the war. That appropriation was based upon an estimate of a board of military officers appointed by General Grant to assess the damage done to the property. It was situated within the fortification which was built. It was at the time used as a Protestant orphan asylum; the occupants were orphans and the managers of the institution were women, so that they were all non-combatants; so that it could not be considered as "rebel property" in the ordinary acceptance of that term, because, sir, nobody on this side of the House would be more opposed to paying claims of that kind than I would be.

As I have said, the bill was introduced by me in the Forty-fourth Congress, and referred to the Committee on War Claims, and by that committee, of which the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SMITH] was a member, was carefully and thoroughly considered. It was unanimously reported by the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-fourth Congress.

The bill does not allow anything on account of damages, because that would be a bad precedent; but in view of the fact it was a charitable institution, occupied at the time by non-combatants, an allowance of $1,750 is made for the time the property was occupied, but nothing whatever for damages.

Mr. ATHERTON. Who occupied it?

Mr. LYNCH. It was within the fortification, and one of the out-buildings was destroyed and the entire property considerably dilapidated by the occupancy of the Union forces.

Mr. ATHERTON. Was its use valuable to the Government of the United States?

Mr. LYNCH. It was.

Mr. ATHERTON. Is not this a similar case to the one already passed relative to William and Mary College in Virginia.

Mr. MANNING. That bill did not pass, although an eminently meritorious case, and having warm supporters on the other side of the House.

Mr. LYNCH. I examine each case on its individual merits.

Mr. ATHERTON. If you begin to pay claims of this kind, where will they end?

Mr. LYNCH. At the end of this case, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MANNING. Let each case stand on its individual merits.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. This claim is directly in conflict with the settled policy of the Government.

Mr. LYNCH. You would not allow one and deny the other?

Mr. MANNING. I wish to add that this bill passed unanimously in the Senate, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection and let it pass.

Mr. LYNCH. It passed the Senate unanimously.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I want to say simply this in support of the objection I make that this case comes in direct conflict with the act of 1864, as well as the act of 1867, which provides that no compensation shall be allowed for the use or occupation of property, in States in rebellion, by the General Government, and in harmony with that general doctrine we have uniformly acted since the organization of the Committee on War Claims. I therefore object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask a moment on this question.

The SPEAKER. Objection having been made, the bill is not before the House.

Mr. MANNING. Do I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to insist upon his objection?

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I not only insist upon it but I give the reasons for insisting, that this is an effort to get this bill through in direct conflict with the statutes of 1864 and 1867.

The SPEAKER. This bill is not before the House, objection having been made.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. HUTCHINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 239) proposing an article of amendment to the Constitution; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to present at this time a privileged report. I submit the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The statement accompanying the report will be read.

The statement is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the naval appropriation bill submit the following detailed statement in explanation of the accompanying report.

The effect of the action recommended on each of the amendments will be, if accepted by the two Houses, as follows:

On amendment numbered 1: Provides that the two assistant surgeons not in the line of promotion shall, after fifteen years' service, be entitled to receive, as annual pay, when at sea, $2,100; when on shore duty, $1,800, and when on leave or waiting orders, $1,600.

On amendment numbered 2: Provides that vacancies in the Engineer Corps of the Navy and in the Marine Corps shall be filled with graduates from the Naval Academy.

On amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, and 76, relating to naval cadets and graduates: Provides that the number of appointments from such graduates shall not be less than ten in each year; repeals so much of section 1521 of the Revised Statutes as is inconsistent with the provisions of this act touching naval cadets and graduates, and provides "that any cadet whose position in his class entitles him to be retained in the service may, upon his own application, be honorably discharged at the end of four years' course at the Naval Academy, with a proper certificate of graduation," and "that the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe a special course of study and training at home or abroad for any naval cadet."

On amendment 9: Strikes out the provision that "the appointments of chaplains and assistant surgeons shall be made from civil life as now provided by law."

On amendments 10, 11, and 12: Provides for five paymasters more than was allowed by the bill as it passed the House, and thirty less than is provided for by existing law.

On amendments 13 and 14: Provides for sixty passed assistant and forty assistant engineers in lieu of one hundred passed assistant and assistant engineers.

On amendments 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, inserts the following: "Hereafter there shall be no promotion or increase of pay in the retired list of the Navy, but the rank and pay of officers on the retired list shall be the same that they are when such officers shall be retired. Hereafter only one-half of the vacancies in the various grades in the line of the Navy shall be filled by promotion until such grades shall be reduced to the following numbers, namely, rear-admirals, six; commodores, ten; captains, forty-five; commanders, eighty-five; lieutenant-commanders, seventy-four; lieutenants, two hundred and fifty; masters, seventy-five; ensigns, seventy-five, and thereafter promotions to all vacancies shall be made, but not to increase either of said grades above the numbers aforesaid: And provided further, That whenever on an inquiry had pursuant to law, concerning the fitness of an officer of the Navy for promotion, it shall appear that such officer is unfit to perform the duties of the place to which it is proposed to promote him, by reason of drunkenness, or from any cause arising from his own misconduct, and having been informed of and heard upon the charges against him, he shall not be placed on the retired list of the Navy, and if the finding of the board be approved by the President, he shall be discharged with not more than one year's pay."

On amendment 22: Strikes out the following: "That the active list of lieutenants in the Navy shall hereafter consist of two hundred, and until the number of lieutenants now on the active list of the Navy shall be reduced below the number of two hundred and twenty-five no promotion shall be made to fill vacancies occurring in said grade: Provided, That no lieutenant now in the service shall be reduced in rank or deprived of his commission by reason of the provisions of this rank."

On amendments 23, 24 and 25: Makes verbal corrections to perfect text of the bill and provides that officers of the Navy traveling abroad under orders hereafter issued shall travel by the most direct route, the occasion and necessity for such order to be certified by the officer issuing the same.

On amendments 27 and 28: Inserts the following: "For beginning the transfer to copper plates of five hundred and thirty photolithographic charts $15,000," and makes a verbal correction in the text of the bill.

On amendment 30: Strikes out the following: "The Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, furnish to the American Ordnance Company fourteen smooth-bore iron guns of the Rodman, Dahlgren, and Parrott models, of not less than 9-inch bore, and four gun carriages, and the use of instruments for testing the velocity of projectiles, for the purpose of making tests and experiments in the improvement of heavy ordnance: Provided, That the Government of the United States shall not incur or be liable in any event for any expense in the conduct of such tests or experiments; and after the same have been completed, and not later than the 1st day of March, 1883, said guns and gun-carriages and instruments shall be returned to the United States; and said American Ordnance Company shall not be liable for any damage said guns or gun-carriages may sustain in the conduct of such tests or experiments, or in consequence of any alterations made in the same."

On amendment 31: Makes the appropriation for the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting $750,000.

On amendment 34: Provides for rent of officers' quarters at League Island and makes the appropriation for maintenance of yards and docks $220,000.

On amendment 38: Appropriates $30,000 for maintaining naval hospitals at the various navy-yards and stations.

On amendment 41: Provides for purchase of water for vessels for cooking and drinking purposes.

On amendments 53 and 57: Provides that no change in the plans for building the two new iron or steel cruisers shall be made after work has been commenced, or a contract made for it exceeding $500 except upon the approval of the naval advisory board, and that the steel for their construction shall be of a ductility in eight inches of not less than 25 per cent., and that the contractors for building said ships shall discharge the Government from all liability on account of the plans adopted and used.

On amendment 62: Provides that the work of completing the Miantonomoh and launching the other monitors shall be under the Bureau of Construction and Repair.

On amendment 67: Provides "for the purchase of one testing-machine, for making tests of plate-iron, &c., $6,000."

On amendment 68, for the Marine Corps: Provides "for the purchase of forage, $4,680: Provided, That no commutation for forage shall be paid."

On amendments 69, 70, and 71: Makes section of the bill read as follows:

"Sec. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy, as soon as may be after the passage of this act, to cause an account to be taken of the stock of stores and supplies pertaining and belonging to the several bureaus of the Navy Department, in which account shall be stated the original cost of each article and the date of purchase, so far as the same is known, and cause an appraisement of the present value of such stores and supplies to be made and entered in such account; and said appraised value, when so entered, shall hereafter be the price at which they shall be charged in accounting with the several bureaus. Such appraisals shall be made by boards of officers of the Navy to be designated by the Secretary; and all such stores and supplies as shall be found by boards of appraisers to be un-serviceable for use in the Navy shall be condemned and sold in the manner hereinafter provided for the sale of old materials, and the proceeds thereof, after deducting the cost of such appraisal, condemnation, and sale, shall be paid into the Treasury. And no old material of the Navy shall hereafter be sold or exchanged by the Secretary of the Navy, or by any officer of the Navy, which can be profitably used by reworking or otherwise in the construction or repair of vessels, their machinery, armor, armament, or equipment; but the same shall be stored and preserved for future use. And when any such old material cannot be profitably used as aforesaid, the same shall be appraised and sold at public auction, after public notice and advertisement shall have been given according to law under such rules and regulations and in such manner as the said Secretary may direct. The net proceeds arising from the sales of such old material shall be paid into the Treasury. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy annually to report in detail to Congress, in his annual report, the proceeds of all sales of materials, stores, and supplies, made under the provisions of this act, and the expenses attending such sales. It shall also be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy, as soon as may be after the passage of this act, to cause to be examined by competent boards of officers of the Navy, to be designated by him for that duty, all vessels belonging to the Navy not in actual service at sea, and vessels at sea as soon as practicable after they shall return to the United States, and hereafter all vessels on their return from foreign stations, and all vessels in the United States as often as once in three years, when practicable; and said boards shall ascertain and report to the Secretary of the Navy, in writing, which of said vessels are unfit for further service, or, if the same are unfinished in any navy-yard, those which cannot be finished without great and disproportionate expense, and shall in such report state fully the grounds and reasons for their opinion. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy, if he shall concur in opinion with said report, to strike the name of such vessel or vessels from the Navy Register, and report the same to Congress."

On amendments 72, 73, 74, and 75: Makes section 3 of the bill read as follows: "No officer of the Navy whose pay is appropriated for in this bill shall be employed on any shore duty after October 1, 1882, unless the Secretary of the Navy shall determine that the employment of an officer on such duty is required by the public interests, and shall so state in the order of employment, and also the duration of such service, beyond which time it shall not continue."

Upon amendments 35 and 36, striking out the provision that certain navy-yards shall be closed, and touching the acquisition of additional lands and water-front contiguous to the Norfolk navy-yard, the conference committee are unable to agree.

The bill as agreed upon in conference appropriates $14,816,176.70, being $175,267.89 less than was appropriated for the year 1882.

Managers on the part of the House.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 17, 30, and 41.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 27, 31, 57, 67, 68, 70, 71, 73, and 76, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "Nor deprive of such appointment any graduate who may complete the six years' course during the year 1882;" and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following: "Hereafter there shall be no promotion or increase of pay in the retired list of the Navy, but the rank and pay of officers on the retired list shall be the same that they are when such officers shall be retired;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "Hereafter only one-half of the vacancies in the various grades in the line of the Navy shall be filled by promotion, until such grades shall be reduced to the following numbers, namely: Rear-admirals, 6; commodores, 10; captains, 45; commanders, 85; lieutenant-commanders, 74; lieutenants, 250; masters, 75; ensigns, 75; and thereafter promotions to all vacancies shall be made, but not to increase either of said grades above the numbers aforesaid;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 18, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

After the word "of," where it occurs in said amendment, insert the words "and heard upon;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 22, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the words proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and strike out all of lines 5 to 12, inclusive, on page 6 of the bill; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 34, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of "seventy" insert "twenty;" and on page 12 of the bill, in line 20, after the word "ferriages," insert the words "rent of officers' quarters at League Island;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$30,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 16 of the bill, in line 19, after the word "twenty," insert "five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 62, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out, in the words proposed to be inserted by said amendment, the word "board," and insert in lieu thereof the word "bureau," and add at the end of said amendment the word "to;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "All such stores and supplies as shall be found by boards of appraisers to be un-serviceable for use in the Navy shall be condemned and sold in the manner hereinafter provided for the sale of old materials, and the proceeds thereof, after deducting the cost of such appraisal, condemnation, and sale, shall be paid into the Treasury. And no old material of the Navy shall hereafter be sold or exchanged by the Secretary of the Navy, or by any officer of the Navy, which can be profitably used by reworking or otherwise in the construction or repair of vessels, their machinery, armor, armament, or equipment; but the same shall be stored and preserved for future use. And when any such old material cannot be profitably used as aforesaid, the same shall be appraised and sold at public auction, after public notice and advertisement shall have been given according to law, under such rules and regulations and in such manner as the said Secretary may direct. The net proceeds arising from the sales of such old material shall be paid into the Treasury. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy annually to report in detail to Congress in his annual report the proceeds of all sales of materials, stores, and supplies made under the provisions of this act, and the expenses attending such sales;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 34 of the bill, in line 12, after the word "duty," insert the words "after October 1, 1882;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 74 and 75, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the words proposed to be inserted by amendment numbered 75, and strike out, on page 34 of the bill, in lines 16 to 19, inclusive, the following words: "And other officers when not at sea shall be placed on leave of absence or waiting orders or on furlough, as the Secretary of the Navy may direct;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Upon amendments numbered 35 and 36 the committee was unable to agree.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a joint resolution and bill of the House of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 131) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to distribute copies of the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives to public and law libraries; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5740) for the relief of the heirs of Major D. C. Smith.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, joint resolutions and bills of the House of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 205) granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at a soldiers' reunion to be held by the Soldiers' Reunion Association of the State of Illinois in the year 1882;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 254) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer to "Tip" Best Post No. 75, Grand Army of the Republic, of Montrose, Iowa, one piece of condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls or field-piece for monumental purposes;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 263) granting the use of cannon, tents, and muskets at soldiers' reunions to be held in the State of Iowa in the year 1882;

A bill (H. R. No. 4684) to amend section 4400 of title 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulation of steam-vessels;

A bill (H. R. No. 6265) donating cannon and cannon-balls to Post No. 14 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Logansport, Indiana, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6517) authorizing compensation to members of Company B, Fourteenth Infantry, for private property destroyed by fire on the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution and bill of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 99) allowing the widow of George P. Marsh, late minister to Italy, one-half year's salary; and

A bill (S. No. 2092) for the relief of Major W. R. King.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ROBESON. In further explanation of the conference report I wish to say that most of the amendments as detailed which are accepted are verbal changes which are of very little importance. The only substantial questions which remained for the consideration of the conference committee were: first, the question of the reduction of the number of line officers. The House having by its action struck out the grade of commodore, this provision of the House was not assented to by the Senate. The House also struck out eighty lieutenants; this provision was agreed to by the Senate with an amendment, making the number stricken out, I believe, fifty-five. Upon these points the conferees on both sides came to a compromise, which was this: we agreed to reduce the number of commodores instead of absolutely striking them out. We do this in deference to a sentiment which seems to exist in some quarters in favor of the name of commodore. We agreed to reduce them to ten; but as we thought it was not necessary to have so many higher officers in command when we made this concession, to reduce the number of admirals, which is now ten, to six in the future. Then we agreed also to distribute our reduction, which had fallen directly upon the lieutenants, all along the line of officers from admiral to cadet-midshipman.

Mr. MCCOOK. The practical result of that will be to cut off all hope of promotion.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask the gentleman to possess his soul in patience for a few moments.

Mr. MCCOOK. I have heard enough to satisfy me that the effect of this bill as it comes from the conference committee is to prevent the promotion of men who served in the war instead of cutting it off where it ought properly to be cut off.

Mr. ROBESON. With regard to the effect of these provisions, we have provided that promotion movement in the service shall be preserved by not stopping promotion in the various grades, but by providing that half of the number of the promotions as they occur in the ordinary lapse of time shall be made until the various grades come down to the number absolutely fixed. This makes the reduction slower in process than we had provided for; but it gives officers the opportunity of promotion, though not as rapidly as formerly; just half as rapidly as would have been the case under existing law.

The result of this is, without very great substantial difference in the amount of the reduction, to make the operation of the provision, as I understand it, more satisfactory to the general body of the officers of the Navy, because if we stopped the promotion to the grade of commodore absolutely until they were wiped out it might take seven or eight years before any captains could be promoted, and of course a like lapse of time before any commodores or any of the lower grades could be promoted. The men who served in the war are now lieutenant-commanders, commanders, captains, commodores, and admirals—not many below them, that I now recall; perhaps there may be a few lieutenants remaining who served in the war.

We have left this avenue open to keep the stream in motion. Instead of striking out the commodores absolutely and stopping all motion and promotion for six or seven years—

Mr. MCCOOK. And limiting the number?

Mr. ROBESON. And limiting the number. We have left the promotion all along the line in order to meet just that difficulty. Instead of stopping all promotions for seven years, we have given them half of the regular promotions till they are reduced to a fixed number, then the regular promotions again commence and go on as now.

Mr. MCCOOK. I do not think you even could get through the House a bill to stop all promotions.

Mr. ROBESON. We did get through the House the provisions of the House bill on this subject.

Mr. MCCOOK. You ought not to have done it.

Mr. ROBESON. We got it through against the gentleman's vote and notwithstanding his opposition.

Mr. MCCOOK. Yes, you did.

Mr. ROBESON. The next point of substantial difference was upon the question of the sale of old material and ships, as provided for in the House bill upon the recommendation of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House and in accordance with their bill which passed this House in the last Congress. On that provision the Senate differed with us, struck out the whole provision, and postponed the operation of it until the next session of Congress.

On that point we have again compromised by agreeing that the old material and provisions shall be sold in accordance with the action of the House, but that no ships shall be sold until a report is made to Congress. We provide that in the mean time boards of survey shall be appointed to examine these ships and have them appraised, and to report their recommendation to the Secretary of the Navy, who shall submit the report to Congress for its action.

We thus provide that the old useless material, scraps, and perishable stores may be sold under the House provision of the bill, but in deference to the views of the Senate we provide that no ships shall be sold until they have been appraised, as I have already stated, and that appraisement and their recommendation reported to Congress for its further action.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The old material to be sold by advertisement.

Mr. ROBESON. By "public advertisement according to law;" those words are specially introduced. We have also stricken out, in deference to the views of the Senate, the provision that naval officers may be employed upon civil duties at the navy-yards; and we did that the more readily in deference to the views of some gentlemen of the House.

Mr. PEELE. Will the gentleman state what is the difference in the actual amount of the bill as reported by the committee of conference and as it originally passed the House?

Mr. ROBESON. It is $530,000 less than it originally passed the House, and $175,000 less than the bill that passed the House last year.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBESON. Certainly.

Mr. BOWMAN. What objection is there to the House concurring in Senate amendment No. 35, in regard to dismantling navy-yards?

Mr. ROBESON. I have not yet reached that. The only question on which we disagreed was the question of allowing the Secretary of the Navy, under the provisions which the House adopted, to discontinue the use of such of the navy-yards as he thought could be dispensed with, and the work concentrated in other and fewer navy-yards, with advantage to the service and economy to the Government.

This House had agreed to that proposition by a vote so large, when the proposition was made, that the conferees on the part of the House insisted upon retaining that provision. The Senate by a vote not large had disagreed to it. The conferees on the part of the Senate, feeling themselves instructed by the vote of the Senate, were not able to agree with us on that proposition. The right of the proposition is so evident on our side that every reasoning man, on the admitted statistics, must admit the correctness of it. By the statistics it appears that it takes $10,000,000 to expend $11,000,000, as the navy-yards are now organized and carried on.

As we have seven navy-yards on the Atlantic coast and one on the Pacific coast, and the work on the Atlantic coast can be done with two or three navy-yards, and the work on the Pacific coast can be done with one, the House concluded that it was in the interest of general economy and in the interest of good government, not that these navy-yards should be destroyed, not that they should be sold, not that they should be absolutely given up, but that work at them should be discontinued while there was no great amount of work to be done. Therefore on that subject the conferees stood firm upon the House action, which was an action which has been twice sustained by an overwhelming majority, quite three-fourths.

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ROBESON. Certainly.

Mr. O'NEILL. The gentleman has stated it requires $10,000,000 to expend eleven millions at the navy-yards.

Mr. ROBESON. It has required in the last five years ten and one-half millions of dollars to expend $11,900,000 in the navy-yards on the Atlantic coast, exclusive of the pay of the officers stationed there.

Mr. O'NEILL. That is what I understood the gentleman to say, and he made the same remark a few days ago when the Senate amendments to this bill were then before the House. Now, that cannot be said of such a Secretary of the Navy as we now have, who is a thorough business man. Whatever extravagance in expenditures of money has occurred within the last five years under prior Secretaries of the Navy, that would not apply to the present Secretary of the Navy, who, being a business man, would know what to do with money, and would never take ten and a half millions of dollars to expend eleven millions. It was not the fact in the past that in the keeping up of our navy-yards $1,000,000 was used to expend another million. It was not so during the administration of the gentleman from New Jersey himself.

Mr. ROBESON. I am afraid it was pretty nearly so. I must be frank. It is impossible to keep eight navy-yards running without making mere housekeeping very expensive.

Mr. O'NEILL. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this will not be the fact in the future, and under the present administration of the Navy Department I believe it will not be.

Mr. ROBESON. Unless some gentleman desires to put some question, I will move the previous question on adopting the report.

Mr. BOWMAN. I wish to make an inquiry as to whether we cannot concur in the amendment numbered 35. The position of affairs now, as I think the gentleman will admit, is very different from what it was when this question was before acted upon by the House. An amendment has been sent to the House by the Senate and concurred in by us providing that a commission of three persons shall examine into the question of selling or closing up every navy-yard; the various facts and statistics in regard to the value of the property, the depth of the water, the facilities for carrying on a navy-yard, are to be reported, so that the Secretary of the Navy and Congress may be enabled to reach an intelligent judgment as to dismantling the navy-yard. Yet, Mr. Speaker, in the face of the fact that this commission is to report in four months upon the whole question as to which of the navy-yards should be dismantled, we have in this bill a clause providing that the Secretary of the Navy alone may practically decide this question, may close up any navy-yard he may select; and it is provided that if he should close any yard he shall—not "may" but "shall"—remove all the perishable stores and property from the yards so closed to other yards. If this provision be adopted and action taken under it by the Secretary of the Navy, then when the question shall come before us upon the report of that commission we shall be met at once by the argument, "Why keep up this or that yard when it has been dismantled and the property removed to other yards?" Thus the question will be foreclosed.

One suggestion further. It is provided that this commission shall investigate and report upon this question. But the moment this bill passes, the moment notice is given to the country that one or more of the navy-yards may be closed by the Secretary of the Navy, the friends of the different yards will feel it necessary to bring to bear upon the Secretary of the Navy all the pressure they can command, political and otherwise. He will be tormented and we shall be tormented by the effort on the part of the friends of the different yards to see whether they cannot concentrate upon the Secretary of the Navy enough political or other influence to have the favorite yard of the applicants kept open. Thus the whole subject will be in turmoil. Why not let the question rest quietly until all the facts are brought before us, when we shall know how to act, having before us the report of the commission to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy under this bill for the very purpose of investigating this question?

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Speaker, upon this subject the House concurred—very properly I think—in the provision of the Senate that a commission should be appointed to report upon the general question of the navy-yards, their value, &c., and what ought to be done with regard to their final disposition. But that has nothing to do with this provision which changes a condition of things now existing under which we are going on in time of profound peace just as we did in time of war, carrying on the same number of and even more navy-yards than we did then.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will not the gentleman admit that if a navy-yard is wholly dismantled and the property carried away to another yard, that fact would have great weight concerning the question of disposing of the yard so dismantled?

Mr. ROBESON. I will admit that after a yard has been wholly dismantled and the property carried away, it would be inconvenient to restore the yard to its previous condition. But we must trust something to discretion; and the provision of this bill is that only the perishable property shall be removed. Does the gentleman want such property to stay and perish or to be carried away and used?

Now, Mr. Speaker, with this explanation and in order to facilitate business, as the Senate has now before it a resolution to adjourn tomorrow at twelve o'clock, I move the previous question on the adoption of this conference report. [Mr. ATKINS rose.] I will yield of course to my colleague on the committee [Mr. ATKINS] for such remarks as he may desire to make.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I only desire to say I hope this report, as far as it goes, will be adopted. I think it presents a very good bill and ought to be concurred in. But I wish further to say that I trust the House will adhere to its position in regard to amendment numbered 35, in reference to navy-yards. The only point of difference between the House and Senate now is whether or not that amendment shall stand or be stricken out. It provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall close up such navy-yards as he may deem to be just and proper. We have made appropriations in this bill for only three, leaving the Boston navy-yard as a rope-walk, and the Washington navy-yard for ordnance, equipping, and recruiting. We leave three navy-yards, and nobody doubts one of those will be selected north of the Potomac, one south of the Potomac, and the other upon the Pacific coast. As the House has so emphatically acted on this proposition and declared in favor of it by a unanimous vote heretofore, I hope it will adhere to it now.

Mr. ROBESON. I demand the previous question.

Mr. O'NEILL. One minute. I ask the gentleman from New Jersey to yield to me for one minute.

Mr. ROBESON. Very well.

Mr. O'NEILL. One remark, Mr. Speaker, to show with what propriety the Senate acted in its amendment providing for a commission. We, or a large majority of the members of this House, are legislating upon subjects which necessarily we cannot be acquainted with. I do not suppose one man in ten sitting in this House has ever visited the navy-yards of this country or knows anything about their location or about their usefulness. And when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] puts forth his programme to the House, saying, "Oh, yes; let us have a navy-yard at Norfolk, one at Brooklyn, and the other at Mare Island," he does so without having ever considered the practical usefulness of navy-yards located in other portions of the country, and he does not look to the commission provided for in the bill itself. That commission will give to this House all the necessary information four months hence, so we may act intelligently on this subject. It is not a long time to wait, and I say under the circumstances it is our duty to wait until we get, each and all of us who do not know anything about the navy-yards of the country, information as to their location and special usefulness; that report which the commission created to investigate the whole subject will make to the House at the next session.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. O'NEILL. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. I will tell the gentleman that I did know there was one navy-yard in his district.

Mr. O'NEILL. Yes, and one of the very best navy-yards in the whole country. It is the most useful one in the country; indeed none could be better located in the world for the construction of modern naval vessels. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House concur in the amendment numbered 35.

Mr. ROBESON. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask the gentleman from New Jersey to yield to me for one moment. Now, Mr. Speaker, I followed the explanation of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] with great interest and care. I agree in everything he has said in regard to this amendment. And in regard to this amendment numbered 35, I think there can be no question; it is absolutely in the interest of economy; the House should adhere to its original position.

There is but one criticism which can be made on it, and I want to make it now in order that the Secretary of the Navy may understand the position which the members of this side of the House will occupy on this question. A very large discretion is confided to the Secretary; it is a discretion which can be exercised in the interest of economy; and I believe he will so exercise it, and therefore I am willing to trust him. But I do say, Mr. Speaker, and I want to call the attention of the House to the fact, that it gives to him a discretion in a political and partisan sense for which he will be held to very strict account. For example, he could transfer the property from Boston and Portsmouth to other navy-yards and concentrate the business in the Brooklyn navy-yard, where 5,000 or 10,000 persons could be put on service just before the day of election, and therefore could be made an engine of political abuse.

Mr. O'NEILL. He cannot do that under the law.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I do not believe the Secretary will exercise it, and I am therefore going to support this amendment, and I ask my friends to support it, but at the same time I wish to give notice if he abuses this power he will be held to strict account by the country.

Mr. ROBESON. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. ROBESON moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBESON. I now move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 35 and 36, and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers of said conference on the part of the House Mr. ROBESON, Mr. KETCHAM, and Mr. ATKINS.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of making a correction.

The SPEAKER. A correction of the RECORD?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. No; but to make a correction of what appears in the report of the Associated Press of the proceedings of the House on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. If it is a correction of the RECORD, the gentleman would be entitled to the floor; but if it be a correction of a newspaper report, the Chair would not regard it as a question of privilege unless it personally affects the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to put myself on record correctly, and to show that there has been a misapprehension on the part of the Associated Press reporter. I ask that the short extract which I have marked from the press report be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it could be entertained as a matter of privilege unless it is an attack upon the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is a misapprehension, and in that respect a personal attack upon me.

The SPEAKER. The paragraph to which the gentleman refers will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KASSON asked leave to introduce a resolution declaring that Congress ought not to adjourn until a bill had passed reducing taxation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, (Democrat,) of Illinois, objected, and the adjournment resolution, amended as recommended by the committee, was adopted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That is a misapprehension or error in the report, and is, so far as I am concerned, absolutely untrue. I desire to have read from the official record of the proceedings of the House what actually occurred with reference to the matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot see how this can present a matter of personal privilege.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The Chair will see as soon as what I desire to have read is heard.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KASSON. I desire to ask a parliamentary question of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.] It is whether before asking the previous question he will allow this amendment to be voted on—that this Congress ought not to adjourn until a bill has been passed reducing taxation?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object to debate.

Mr. KASSON. It is not for the gentleman from Illinois to object.

Mr. HISCOCK. I cannot yield for that amendment. I call for the regular order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The RECORD therefore shows, Mr. Speaker, what actually took place, that I did not object to the consideration of the resolution, but that it was the gentleman from New York who objected. I have no doubt the mistake occurred in the confusion which then prevailed in the Hall, and certainly I do not mean to impute any intentional desire to misrepresent me to the reporter for the Associated Press. I am satisfied it was only a mistake.

Mr. ROBESON. Do I understand my friend from Illinois to say that he did not object to the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON]?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I did not, and I have had the RECORD of the proceedings of yesterday read to show that I objected simply to debate upon the resolution and not to the resolution itself. I was in favor of the passage of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think this is an attack upon the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to make the correction, Mr. Speaker, for the reason that the Associated Press reporter is furnished a seat upon the floor of the House by its courtesy, and when a mistake of that kind is made I think the members of the House should have the right to correct it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes such matters would be corrected by the reporters themselves.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to present at this time the conference report on the legislative appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The statement will be read.

The statement was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill submit the following in explanation of the report submitted:

The effect of the action recommended on the amendments of the Senate numbered 330 to 337 inclusive will be, if accepted by the two Houses, to insert the following in lieu of section 6 of the bill as it passed the House, namely:

"Sec. 6. That so much of the funds appropriated by this act for the contingent expenses of the Surgeon-General's and the Adjutant-General's Offices, respectively, as are or may be necessary to provide stationery, blank-books, furniture, and other articles for the use of the clerks and others engaged in those offices on work relating to the settlement of applications for pensions, may be used, all or in part, under the orders of the Secretary of War, in either of said offices, as in his judgment the best interests of the service may require. The fourth story and attic of the south wing of the State, War, and Navy building, except such portion as is now within the library of the State Department, are assigned to the War Department for such uses of the Department as in the judgment of the Secretary of War they may be best fitted; and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, to enable the Department to remove from said fourth story and attic the records, documents, and papers now stored there and to rearrange them in other rooms in said Department. That the partition wall separating the corridors of the first, second, third, and fourth stories of the east wing from the said stories of the south wing of the State, War, and Navy building shall be removed, so as to afford easy access from one wing to the other on the aforementioned floors of said building: Provided, That a joint select committee of three members of the House of Representatives and three Senators, to be appointed respectively by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate upon the passage of this act, shall, on or before the completion of the north wing of the State, War, and Navy building, make examination of said building and set apart such portions thereof for the use and occupancy of the State, War, and Navy Departments respectively, as in their judgment the best interests of the public service and the needs of said Departments, respectively, may require; and upon filing an agreed statement of such partition by said joint select committee in triplicate with the respective Secretaries of such Departments the building shall be occupied as therein provided as soon thereafter as practicable."

J. G. CANNON,
FRANK HISCOCK,
JNO. D. C. ATKINS.

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, and 337, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the entire section insert the following:

"Sec. 6. That so much of the funds appropriated by this act for the contingent expenses of the Surgeon-General's and the Adjutant-General's Offices respectively as are or may be necessary to provide stationery, blank-books, furniture, and other articles for the use of the clerks and others engaged in those offices on work relating to the settlement of applications for pensions may be used, all or in part, under the orders of the Secretary of War, in either of said offices, as in his judgment the best interests of the service may require. The fourth story and attic of the south wing of the State, War, and Navy building, except such portion as is now within the library of the State Department, are assigned to the War Department for such uses of the Department as in the judgment of the Secretary of War they may be best fitted for; and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, to enable the Department to remove from said fourth story and attic the records, documents, and papers now stored there and to rearrange them in other rooms in said Department. That the partition wall separating the corridors of the first, second, third, and fourth stories of the east wing from the said stories of the south wing of the State, War, and Navy building shall be removed, so as to afford easy access from one wing to the other on the aforementioned floors of said building: Provided, That a joint select committee of three members of the House of Representatives and three Senators, to be appointed respectively by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate upon the passage of this act, shall, on or before the completion of the north wing of the State, War, and Navy building, make examination of said building and set apart such portions thereof for the use and occupancy of the State, War, and Navy Departments, respectively, as in their judgment the best interests of the public service and the needs of said Departments, respectively, may require; and upon filing an agreed statement of such partition by said joint select committee in triplicate with the respective Secretaries of such Departments the building shall be occupied as therein provided as soon thereafter as practicable."

And the Senate agree to the same.

J. G. CANNON,
FRANK HISCOCK,
JNO. D. C. ATKINS.

Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAVES,
H. G. DAVIS.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. I can say to the House that while the phraseology of the original bill is changed, as shown by the report of the conference committee, touching this sixth section of the bill, so far as the transfer of the records is concerned or the consolidation of the same in the Surgeon-General's Office and the Adjutant-General's Office there is no substantial change from the House provision. Under the House provision the Secretary of War had the discretion to make such transfer, and under the report now submitted to the House he has the same discretion. It is a mere change of phraseology.

As to the occupation of the room for pension work, the report modifies the House provision in this, that we take upon the passage of this bill all the room we proposed to take in the south wing of the State Department building; but for the permanent occupancy of the north and east wings, which the House bill provided for, the conference report makes provision for a postponement until that wing is completed in December next, approximately. The joint committee which the conference report provides for is to be appointed by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate, to make provision for the occupancy of those portions of the building, and when made it is to be occupied as provided by the original bill.

It will be seen, therefore, that the report of the conference committee substantially accomplishes what the House originally intended. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TITLE TO LOTS IN BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Mr. MCCOID. I ask that by unanimous consent the Committee on the Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2299) relinquishing the title which still remains in the United States to all lots or portions of ground which lie within the limits of the present city of Burlington, State of Iowa, to the said city of Burlington, and that the same be put upon its passage. I will state that the Committee on the Public Lands have unanimously agreed to report this bill favorably, and they have authorized me to call it up for passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all the title which still remains in the United States to any lots or portions of ground which lie within the limits of the present city of Burlington, in the State of Iowa, is hereby relinquished to the said city of Burlington, to be disposed of as the corporate authorities thereof may deem proper; but this relinquishment shall in no manner impair the legal rights of third parties therein, but shall be subject to any such rights if any such rights exist.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will explain the purpose of this bill before objections are called for.

Mr. MCCOID. There are in the city of Burlington some lots the title to which is not in the city. This bill relinquishes the title of the United States in those lots. It was referred to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and he has transmitted a letter stating that he has no objection to it whatever. That letter is embodied in the committee's report. The Committee on the Public Lands have examined the matter with the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office before them, and agreed unanimously to report the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much land is involved?

Mr. MCCOID. None at all of any importance. These lots are just some little triangular bits at the corners of streets.

Mr. HOLMAN. They do not include land of any value?

Mr. MCCOID. None at all. And I may state that the money received for all those lots when originally sold went to the city.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCCOID moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call up from the Speaker's table the concurrent resolution for the printing of the annual Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture, with Senate amendments, and to move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments, and ask for a committee of conference.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

In lines 1 and 2 strike out "resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,)" and insert, "resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled."

At the end of the resolution add the following:

"And $219,164.54, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to carry out this resolution."

Mr. VALENTINE. That is all right.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois what is the exact point of disagreement?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Senate has changed a concurrent resolution into a joint resolution, and instead of paying the expenses of this printing out of the fund appropriated for paying for printing at the Government Printing Office has inserted an appropriation to cover the amendment. The effect of the amendment is to increase the appropriation for that purpose to the amount of $219,164.54. I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. The chairman of the Committee on Printing is sick and absent from the House, and I therefore ask the Chair to appoint as one of the conferees a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the committee later.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, with the Senate amendments. I send to the desk the report of the Committee on Appropriations thereon.

The SPEAKER. The report recommends concurrence in certain amendments, and non-concurrence in others. The reading of the report, in which the amendments are designated by numbers, would give no information.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest that the Clerk proceed to read the amendments for consideration.

Mr. KENNA. Before the Clerk proceeds to read, I desire to say I ask a separate vote on amendments numbered 177 and 178, relating to the Geological Survey.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will indicate the action desired by the Committee on Appropriations as the reading proceeds.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it would be well to have some understanding that there may be one or two minutes allowed for debate when necessary. I do not want to delay the bill, but some of these amendments may require explanation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not agree to that. It would make it interminable. Let us proceed with the reading of the amendments, and when we reach an amendment that calls for some discussion we can arrange for the discussion to be had on that amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no waiving of the question of order on the amendments. I mean the right to consider them in the Committee of the Whole is not waived unless it is understood that the amendments are now to be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not care to have them considered as in Committee of the Whole. I think that is unnecessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. The question of order on these amendments will have to be reserved.

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly; reserve every question of order on the amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I mean the right to have them considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ATKINS. I do not think the gentleman from Indiana will be likely to make the point of order, because the Committee on Appropriations have not conceded the appropriations made by the Senate in a single instance.

Mr. HOLMAN. It may be that none of these amendments are subject to the point of order; but of course they are subject to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HISCOCK. They are if you insist upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not want to insist upon that, and therefore I propose the amendments should be considered now as in Committee of the Whole; that the Clerk shall read the amendments, and if there be no objection that the recommendation of the committee be concurred in.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman insists on that I am compelled to concede it, but I think he ought not to insist.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think it will cause any delay at all. We are all interested in facilitating the passage of this measure.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let the Clerk proceed to read.

Mr. HOLMAN. With that understanding.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments of the Senate.

Amendments numbered 1, 2, 5, and 6 were non-concurred in, and amendments numbered 3 and 4 were concurred in. Amendment No. 7 was to insert the following:

For salary of consul-general at Madrid, (in addition to that of secretary of legation when acting as such,) $1,200.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move that the amendment be concurred in. At the time the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill was under consideration in the House this matter was being examined by the State Department, but the report was not made in time to have this item incorporated in that bill. There are between twenty and thirty consuls in Spain, but no consul-general; and there is a secretary of legation. This amendment is in the line of reform started in the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, and I therefore move that it be concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The question will be first upon concurrence.

The question was taken and the amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 8 was concurred in.

Amendment No. 9 was to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a site for, and cause the commencement of, the construction thereon of a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the uses of the post-office, United States courts, and other Government offices, in the city of Williamsport, Pennsylvania, $50,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. WALKER. I move to concur in that amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. There are several amendments to this bill in relation to public buildings, and the Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in them all, so that we may have opportunity to make precisely the same proportion of appropriation in each case that we did in the public buildings bills which were passed before this bill went to the Senate. I assure the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] that his building will not be prejudiced by this action. We have agreed in the House to allow 50 per cent. of the limit in these bills, and we propose to non-concur in all the amendments for public buildings put in by the Senate, with a view of adjusting the matter upon that basis. We had not time this morning to examine the figures, and we want the committee of conference to have that opportunity.

The amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 10 to 21, both inclusive, were non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 22 was as follows:

Add a proviso to the paragraph in relation to Bridewell dock property at Chicago, so that the paragraph will read as follows:

"For the Bridewell dock property at Chicago, Illinois: for repairs of pavement and sidewalk around Bridewell dock property, $3,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall make examination and recommendation to Congress at its next session as to the advisability of selling this property."

Mr. HISCOCK. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that amendment should be concurred in.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no objection to concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope it will be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendments numbered 23 and 26, and amendments numbered 31 to 60, both inclusive, were non-concurred in; and amendments numbered 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, and 30 were concurred in.

Amendment 61 was to decrease the appropriation in the item "for compensation in lieu of moities" from $50,000 to $30,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why should not that amendment be concurred in?

Mr. HISCOCK. It is simply an arbitrary reduction of a sum which is absolutely due. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] understands what is meant by "compensation in lieu of moities." The audited claims in the Treasury Department to-day, the sums which are now due, as the Committee on Appropriations of the House were assured, amount to $50,000, and it is believed that they will amount to more than that sum before the close of the current year.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The sixty-second amendment was to insert the following:

(62) The governor of the Territory of Utah is hereby authorized to appoint officers in said Territory to fill vacancies which may be caused by a failure to elect on the first Monday in August, 1882, in consequence of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882, to hold their offices until their successors are elected and qualified under the provisions of said act: Provided, That the term of office of any of said officers shall not exceed eight months.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. CASSIDY. I move that the amendment be concurred in; it is very necessary.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am entirely willing to have a vote taken on it.

Mr. CASSIDY. It merely gives the governor of the Territory of Utah power to appoint officers, such as justices of the peace, who have been legislated out of office.

Mr. RANDALL. Let it go to a conference.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am perfectly willing it should go to a conference, and I expect we will agree to let it remain in the bill.

Mr. CASSIDY. With that understanding I will withdraw my motion to concur.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendments numbered 63 to 71, both inclusive, were non-concurred in.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in the amendments from No. 72 to No. 89, both inclusive. Those amendments were to strike out the following:

For pay and expenses of the members of the National Board of Health, $10,000.
For pay of secretary and disbursing agent, and pay of clerks, messengers, and laborers, $5,500.
For rent, light, fuel, furniture, stationery, telegrams, and postage, $2,000.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

For quarantine service, Mississippi River, $16,000.
For quarantine service, Ship Island, $14,000.
For quarantine service, Sapelo Sound, $13,000.
For quarantine service, Hampton Roads, $2,000.
For pay and expenses of inspectors, $4,000.
For pay and expenses of members of board, $5,000.
For printing Bulletin, $5,000.
For clerks, messengers, and laborers, $15,000.
For secretary and disbursing agent, $1,500.
For rent, light, and fuel, $1,500.
For telegrams, $250.
For stationery, $1,000.
For postage, $400.
For furniture, $100.
For miscellaneous expenses, $500.

Mr. ATKINS. Does the gentleman move to non-concur in all the amendments relating to the Board of Health?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do, down to and including amendment No. 89.

Mr. SIMONTON. I think these amendments are very important indeed. The amount appropriated by the bill as it passed the House was not sufficient to enable the Board of Health to maintain an efficient quarantine on the Mississippi River. There is at this time a special necessity for that, because the yellow fever has now broken out on the coast, and there is apprehension in the Mississippi Valley that it may extend to that region.

When this bill recently passed the House there was a very great apprehension throughout the Mississippi Valley of the approach of the yellow fever. I know that boards of health and the cotton exchanges and citizens throughout the valley have sent telegrams here requesting Congress to increase the appropriations for the National Board of Health. In obedience to those demands the appropriations have been increased by the Senate, and in my judgment not beyond the amount which will be found necessary.

I hope the House will take a vote on this question now, because if it is sent to a conference we will not again have an opportunity to consider these various items, but will have to vote on the report of the committee of conference and either accept or reject it as a whole. I therefore hope that there will be a vote of the House and that these amendments of the Senate will be concurred in.

Mr. PEELLE. I sincerely hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Senate amendments on this subject, which, as I understand, are virtually a restoration of the National Board of Health to its appropriate functions, will be concurred in. If a National Board of Health is to be maintained at all it ought to be maintained in such a manner as to give the greatest good to the greatest number. I believe, from my brief examination of these amendments, that they will be salutary in their effect. It appears to me that the officers of this board should have at their disposal ample means for the investigation of these questions. I trust that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] will withdraw his motion to non-concur, and move to concur. Before taking my seat I will ask this parliamentary question of the Chair: Is it in order for me now to move that the House concur?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. PEELLE. I move, then, that the House concur in the Senate amendments. I wish to add that communications have come to various members of the House from physicians in all parts of the country urging that this Board of Health be maintained. I understand that it has performed good service. I know that it has done so in my State, and I believe I am safe in saying that the case has been the same in Illinois and Missouri.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, before a vote is taken on concurring in these amendments, I wish to say a word. Some of them, it seems to me, are of very great importance and their adoption may save the country from great calamity. I understand that the yellow fever is now epidemic in Havana. It is said to be epidemic in Matamoras, immediately opposite Texas, on the Rio Grande. It is necessary that steps be taken by the authority of Congress and of the State governments to protect life and property.

It will be seen that the seventy-sixth amendment is for quarantine service at Ship Island, $14,000; and the seventy-seventh for quarantine service at Sapelo Sound, $13,000. Now I wish to make one statement with reference to the quarantine station at Ship Island. We are informed by the National Board of Health that during the last summer four vessels came in having cases of yellow fever on board. These vessels were sent to the station at Ship Island, and remedial and protective measures adopted in pursuance of appropriations of a previous Congress. The sick were put into hospitals by themselves; the well were put into other hospitals. The cargoes were taken from the vessels and fumigated. The vessels themselves were cleaned and fumigated. In due time the vessels went on their way, and no evil resulted. It is believed by the National Board of Health that any one of those ships might have spread an epidemic of yellow fever through the country. The consequent loss of life, desolation of homes, and interruption of commerce can hardly be estimated. I shall not now attempt to go into that question. I have once already done so in this House.

Some appropriation, I presume, is contemplated as necessary to give efficiency to these stations. The policy of the country ought to be to establish two additional stations. By this means the commerce of the country would be protected, and injury to property, health, and life in a large measure prevented. This would not only be to the interest of the localities affected but vessels from Baltimore, from New York, from Philadelphia, from Boston, from Europe, could carry on their business without interruption. If infected vessels should come to our shores we would, under existing law, be advised by our consular agents abroad that they were infected or the information would be otherwise obtained; so that the vessels could be compelled to go into these stations for the adoption of proper remedial and preventive measures. Thus the general commerce of the country would be preserved. I will state (not because it is a local matter, but because it has come under my observation) that during the last two or three epidemics the yellow fever, by a strict quarantine, has been kept out of Texas, although prevailing at other points in the South and along the border of the Gulf. But this has been at an expense to the general commerce of the country and to the people there that is almost beyond computation in figures.

So largely is the country interested in this matter that I hope the House will concur in these amendments of the Senate as a means of arresting and preventing the propagation of this terrible scourge. The amounts proposed to be expended are insignificant in view of the end proposed. I have not been able to go through the amendments consecutively; but they seem to me appropriately arranged, and the amounts proposed are scarcely a drop in the bucket compared with the losses to be incurred if proper preventive measures be not adopted.

Why, sir, it was stated that the breaking out of the yellow fever at Savannah, Georgia, besides resulting in great suffering and loss of life, caused a general interruption of trade, by which some $5,000,000 of property was sacrificed. In the city of New Orleans, by the breaking out of the epidemic, about the same time or a year later, the loss as stated by medical authority, after investigation, was enormous.

When we think of the vast suffering and loss entailed by an epidemic of this kind, the number of deaths, the destruction of property, the general stoppage of commerce, it seems to me that a proper regard for the general commercial interest of our own and other countries, if not protection of localities against suffering and death, would induce us to concur in these Senate amendments, and to do whatever we can under existing law to guard the country against such things in the future.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I hope in the consideration of this question we will not confound the means with the end. There is no disagreement between the members of this House, I take it, as to the desirability of accomplishing what my honorable friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] proposes. There is no difference of opinion about the desirability of doing that very thing. We recognize the fact that yellow fever may appear in the South and other sections of the country, and we all desire to prevent it; we all desire to deal with it successfully. But my friend [Mr. REAGAN] speaks as if the difference between us in regard to the means for its accomplishment is a difference in regard to the desirability of its accomplishment. That is a mistake. I agree with my honorable friend as to the importance of establishing a quarantine at the particular place suggested, and I am willing to vote for that now. The difference between us is solely as to the means of accomplishing what is proposed; that is, to prevent the introduction of yellow fever, cholera, and small-pox, and the suppression of those diseases when they make their appearance in the country; and also to investigate the origin and character of those diseases. Every member of this House and every gentleman in the country desires to accomplish what is proposed by the gentleman from Texas.

We only differ as to the means, the instrumentalities. It was suggested in discussion the other day that the Board of Health is not necessary; that it might be dispensed with. I concur in that opinion, that it is not necessary. The tendency in this country is to build up new bureaus. There is not an issue, there is not a purpose, there is not a plan, there is not a suggestion to be carried out in this country but is coupled with a proposition for the establishment of a new bureau. It is the tendency to the establishment of new and needless bureaus that we oppose. The multiplication of unnecessary and expensive executive machinery.

The truth is, Mr. Speaker, we already have an organization better fitted than the Board of Health, with ampler means, better provided in every way for the accomplishment of this purpose than your Board of Health is or can be without the expenditure of a large sum of money.

Mr. HOUSE. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSE. What is the general opinion of the medical fraternity of the United States as to this National Board of Health?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. As to those who give an opinion, the value of that opinion depends largely upon the relation of the doctor who gives it to the Board of Health itself, or his relation to some doctor who has some connection with that national board. I would want to cross-examine those whose testimony is submitted to this House in favor of the National Board of Health before I would take it at what it is seemingly worth.

I wish the attention of the House for one single moment to the fact we have already a perfect system in the—

Mr. MANNING. It seems to be difficult for the gentleman to tell. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. We have already a perfect system in the Marine-Hospital Service. We have evidence that when the National Board of Health has been called upon it has proved to be unequal to the demand. When called upon to deal with the threatened introduction of disease that board was found wanting in the means and authority, if not the ability, as constituted, to successfully deal with such a condition.

Mr. MANNING. Whenever it has had to resort to the Marine-Hospital Service it was as an auxiliary, because of inefficient appropriations made by Congress for the National Board of Health.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Not at all. The gentleman was never more in error; that is if what is radically wrong can indicate such a state of things. A vessel approached a northwestern town, Fort Benton, I believe. The citizens appealed to the National Board of Health for relief. There are fifteen members of that board, and they require a long time to get together, and after they get together they are authorized to do nothing except to co-operate with the local authorities, and that they were unable, as it seems, to do. They were helpless. They had no power which enabled them to act with that promptness and effectiveness indispensable to the proper protection of the people in sudden emergencies. What did they do? They immediately appealed to the Treasury Department, and the Marine-Hospital Service had to aid them. At the head of that service is a thoroughly competent and able physician, having in hand all the machinery to deal promptly and effectively with epidemic diseases, both in preventing their introduction and stamping them out when once they gain a foothold within our borders.

Mr. DUNN. Now, one word just there.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Wait until I make this statement and I will hear the question of the gentleman. The surgeon of the marine hospital at Fort Benton, under instructions from his chief here, utilizing the agencies and means at their command at all times, stopped the approaching vessel, had it thoroughly fumigated, and thereby prevented the introduction of small-pox at that port. This was a case in which the proper agency, the proper bureau was called upon, a bureau which should have charge and jurisdiction in matters of which it is supposed the Board of Health now takes charge. But I am asked why this same thing was not done years ago. In answer I will reply that the Marine-Hospital Service was not thoroughly organized, nor equipped, nor as fully prepared for such emergencies as it now is. It was formerly under the management merely of a clerk in the Treasury Department, who had no knowledge or conception of what was required, and perhaps little qualification for the work in its more extended operations. But since then the service has been thoroughly reorganized and equipped, co-operating with the Treasury Department, of which it is a bureau, having the use of Government vessels, having hospitals, and being authorized to enforce quarantine regulations, and having, as I have said, the co-operation of the agencies of the Treasury Department, and that service is now prepared with efficient machinery and with sufficient authority and funds to secure a proper discharge of all the duties devolving upon it and the accomplishment of the good results which are expected to be secured through its agency.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman allow me just a word at this point? I did not submit the remarks I did on the idea of any particular plan which I had in view. I did so because this seemed to be the only remedy proposed, and I feared that if it was stricken out of the bill by this House it might operate to prevent the doing of anything practicable. But let me say again that I have no objection, if it can be done properly, that this service shall be transferred to the Marine-Hospital Service; but that would require a reform in the legislation on the subject, and I have no advice from the committee that they will be prepared, on a conference, to make that transfer. If they would propose a plan that was deemed preferable to this, or one that was practicable to secure its adoption at the present time, I should certainly not object. But it seems to me that if the service in this respect is to be changed, it ought to be changed only upon a sufficient examination and after the substitution of something practical in the shape of a plan to take its place.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas that is exactly what the committee proposed. For that reason we do not propose to strike out the provision making appropriations for the Board of Health, nor at this time to transfer its duties to the Marine-Hospital Service. It was deemed expedient to permit the Board of Health still to exist, but make such provision only as is necessary in view of the circumstances. That we have already done in this bill in a very liberal manner. We deem it wise hereafter to transfer, as my friend from Texas suggests, the whole duty to the Marine-Hospital Service, with the full assurance that the result will be beneficial, that the service will be better rendered, better performed, and the end which we have in view will be more satisfactorily and effectively reached.

Mr. KASSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. KASSON. I do not propose to enter into this question of quarantine, trusting that to the committee; but in speaking of the revenue marine I do not understand whether the gentleman claims that they also take charge of the overland and inland transportation of immigrants under the existing provisions of law—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will say—

Mr. KASSON. Allow me to conclude what I desired to ask, as I do not wish to occupy the time of the House, and the gentleman may answer the entire interrogatory. I wish to add that I have had most energetic communications from my State as to the importance of a provision of this character in checking the introduction of small-pox or other contagious diseases, which in many instances have alarmed whole communities and operated disastrously in that section of country. I want to vote concurrence in the Senate amendments if no other efficient machinery exists for inspection of railroad trains to stop the dissemination of such diseases by overland routes.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. We do not curb or abridge the operations of the Board of Health in that respect—

Mr. KASSON. But the amount is abridged.

Mr. HOUSE. Is the amount appropriated the only difference?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes; we object to the amount. And right here let me say, although it is not quite pertinent to this subject, a word in reference to the requests or communications to which my friend from Iowa alludes as to the importance of this supervision over inland lines of travel. He is considerably advanced in years, at least as a politician, and knows how little difficulty there is to pour letters of this character in upon a Representative from every quarter where a physician interested in continuance of the Board of Health has a cousin, a brother, a sister, or an aunt to get up just such communications to answer his purposes, and addressed to his member, calling attention to the great importance of the subject.

Mr. KASSON. But let me ask the gentleman if he does not admit that we are bound to trust men whose professional standing and character as citizens are known personally to the member who happens to receive such communications?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It has been stated upon this floor that letters are being poured into the House urging members to stand by this Board of Health. Here are fifteen members of the Board of Health, one appointed in this section and another in that. To accomplish anything they must have a quorum here in Washington and pass resolutions which have to be approved by the President; and thus they put the cumbersome machinery at work. Gentlemen speak as if all the doctors in this country had been suddenly abolished, as if local measures and local efforts were to be absolutely done away with.

Mr. KASSON. May I say on the main point, because I wish to meet it fairly, I do not wish to pay a cent of money that is not necessary. There are these local organizations in the States with power, if they have the means to do it, to inspect, vaccinate, and take charge of small-pox cases.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly. That power is conferred by the State or the locality, and that right is neither enlarged nor abridged by what the Senate has done or has failed to do.

Mr. Cox, of New York, rose.

Mr. PEELE. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. HISCOCK. I give notice I shall insist that the debate shall be under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PEELE] for a question.

Mr. PEELE. The gentleman from Ohio stated that some years ago the marine-hospital board was not equipped for this work as it is now. I want to ask him as a matter of fact if the marine-hospital board to-day is not equipped precisely as it was when this law was passed creating the National Board of Health?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Of course it is.

Mr. PEELE. I ask further if it is true or not that any jealousy exists on the part of the marine-hospital board toward the National Board of Health?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Not in the slightest. But there exists a jealousy here touching the demands upon the national Treasury as to whether we shall have two boards when one can serve the purpose better.

I have explained sufficiently before to the gentleman that the difficulty was the lack of a proper executive head necessary to a wise administration of the service. They had a clerk at the head of the bureau, a position requiring executive and medical skill. In 1873, I think it was the board was reorganized and a medical man put at its head. The whole system was reorganized, so that everywhere at every port, wherever a vessel enters, the Marine-Hospital Service is armed and equipped to meet at the door or to meet outside, if you please, the approach of an epidemic. All I want is to accomplish this thing in a practical way and at a reasonable price and without ingrafting upon the Government another bureau.

One word more and I have done. We place at the disposal of the President $100,000 to be used in case it shall become necessary. He may use your Board of Health as he does now if he wishes; and he may also use the Marine-Hospital Service. What more is wanted?

Mr. MANNING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. MANNING. My question is in reference to the use to be made of the Marine-Hospital Service. Does the gentleman from Ohio know that a case of yellow fever is not admitted to a marine hospital?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I know it ought not to be. But that does not prevent their providing means for taking care of yellow-fever cases.

Mr. MANNING. Does the gentleman concede that the Marine-Hospital Service would not avail in the case of a yellow-fever epidemic?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No, sir; it could be taken care of by the Marine-Hospital Service. It is a kind of disease which ought to be kept by itself, and that service has all the necessary machinery.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

- A bill (H. R. No. 219) for the relief of Elizabeth Leebrick;
- A bill (H. R. No. 2317) for the relief of Mary Bullard;
- A bill (H. R. No. 2524) for the relief of Alice J. Bennit;
- A bill (H. R. No. 2966) granting a pension to Annie W. Osborne;
- A bill (H. R. No. 3601) for the relief of Martha A. Jones;
- A bill (H. R. No. 3717) granting a pension to Alvin Walker;
- A bill (H. R. No. 3733) granting a pension to Mary E. Taylor;
- A bill (H. R. No. 5018) granting a pension to Elizabeth F. Rice;
- A bill (H. R. No. 5985) granting a pension to Martha Jane Douglass;
- A bill (H. R. No. 6317) granting an increase of pension to James Bennett;
- A bill (H. R. No. 6399) granting an increase of pension to Stephen D. Smith;
- A bill (H. R. No. 6521) granting a pension to Mrs. Adeline A. Turner; and
- A bill (H. R. No. 6624) granting an increase of pension to Eliza F. Porter.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

- A bill (H. R. No. 4594) authorizing full pay to Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, United States Army, while on leave to serve in command of the Franklin search expedition in the Arctic; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6743) to establish diplomatic relations with Persia.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 1280) for the relief of Captain Nicholas J. Bigley;

A bill (S. No. 1304) granting a pension to Sarah J. Bovell;

A bill (S. No. 1787) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Saint Croix River between the city of Calais, Maine, and Saint Stephen's, New Brunswick; and

A bill (S. No. 2080) granting a pension to George Foster.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. DUNN. I am very much gratified, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Ohio has frankly placed this question squarely before the House. The Committee on Appropriations have squarely presented the issue for the abolition of the National Board of Health, and we are confronted with the whole question whether it is to be discontinued or whether it shall be maintained longer. The House ought to decide that now, because the law under which that board exists expires after one year from this time. And it is time we either so legislate as to perpetuate and make that service effective or that we take steps to abolish it and replace it with something else.

I agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] that if the Marine-Hospital Service was amplified and clothed with the power necessary to enable it to perform all the duties which are required and expected of the National Board of Health, and furnished with ample means to do it, it might be made more effective and satisfactory to the country. But that is not the case. They have no such powers; they have no such jurisdiction; and they would be, if confronted with an epidemic or a threatened epidemic, as they are to-day, absolutely without the power to cope with it. They cannot protect the country against inland epidemics and contagions for want of what may be termed overland jurisdiction, nor are they clothed with sufficient powers and means to effectually prevent the introduction of pestilence from abroad. If this is to be abandoned we should perfect that before it is done, so that there may be all the time some security from those horrible tropical plagues which we are always liable to import.

The gentleman from Ohio says that the bill as it went from the House provided amply all the means for that purpose. That is not true. We all know that the House and the Senate have been notified that the order has been issued to withdraw from commission all the Government property that is employed in the inspection service and to discontinue inspection for want of sufficient means to continue it. I regard inspection as the most important and valuable part of the health service. There is where epidemics are met on the threshold and prevented; where the people look for their safety is in the inspection. We might have millions of dollars appropriated for the aid of sufferers in and during the prevalence of epidemics; but that is not what the country wants, that is not what is required. What is needed is the protection against the introduction and spread of epidemics.

The yellow fever is to-day an epidemic at Havana and at Matamoras. It is announced that in Brownsville the yellow fever has already found a lodgment. There was undoubtedly a case of yellow fever at New Orleans not long ago. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read an article on the subject, to show the state of feeling pervading the whole country along the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is there any necessity for reading that?

Mr. DUNN. There is a necessity for reading it, for it shows the deep apprehension of danger which threatens the country.

The Clerk read as follows:

The people of Mississippi, Arkansas, Tennessee, Kentucky, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio are urgent in their appeals for the restoration of the inspection service of the National Board of Health. Without it they are at the mercy of the Louisiana State board of health. Not having any confidence in that body they will be compelled to establish and enforce permanent quarantines against New Orleans every year, commencing in June and continuing until October. This the merchants of that city will find will tell sadly against their trade. They should therefore take steps by the reorganization of the Louisiana board of health to prevent the recurrence of so summary a process as Memphis is now enforcing for her own protection.

Mr. DUNN. That is from the Memphis Daily Appeal, of the 20th of last month. It only voices the universal apprehension of the people in all that section of country.

Gentlemen speak of local boards. Local boards do not satisfy the public demands; local boards do not give protection. It is known to everybody that they come under local commercial influences. They protect commerce against quarantine, but through trade and commerce they permit epidemics to go to all portions of the country. They do not relieve public apprehension; the country will not trust them. What is needed, and what the country demands, is some authority through which the power of the Government can be exerted, some agency which the people feel sure will not come under the influence of local commercial boards.

We all know that in 1878 the yellow fever was declared epidemic in Memphis before it was in New Orleans; and we also know that it was transported from New Orleans to Memphis. New Orleans then had its local board as it always has had. Now, if Congress intends to abolish the National Board of Health, let it habilitate the Marine-Hospital Service, give it the necessary jurisdiction, extend it not only to the sea-coast and to commerce with foreign nations but extend it inland so that the country may have complete protection. Give us a national authority through which the power of the Government may be exerted. That is what the interest of the country requires; that is what the public safety requires. Nothing short of this will meet the exigency of the case. I know of nothing that can form a more proper subject of national legislation than the public health.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I believe from much that has transpired in this House, and what I have seen in the newspapers, that there has been a sort of plot to work up such a yellow-fever panic as we had in 1878; and I believe that this National Board of Health—

Mr. DUNN. What evidence has the gentleman of such a plot?

Mr. HISCOCK. There is not any doubt of it.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will show the gentlemen the evidence. The secretary of the board of health of New Orleans (where there was an attempt to make the rice fever appear as yellow fever) and the Memphis board of health got together. The Memphis board was scared; but the board of health of New Orleans had the good sense to collect the facts, and they made the exposure which I shall ask to have printed in the RECORD. There is not time to read it.

Mr. REAGAN. What is the paper which the gentleman sends up to be published with his remarks?

Mr. COX, of New York. It is an extract from the New Orleans Picayune:

THE NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH—SOME REVELATIONS AS TO THEIR WORKING—A CORRESPONDENCE WHICH SHOWS UP SOME OF ITS MACHINATIONS—A PLOT TO WORK UP YELLOW-FEVER CASES IN 1880—HOW THE RICE FEVER WAS MADE YELLOW.

It will be remembered that in the year 1880 very strenuous efforts were made by the National Board of Health to scare up some cases of yellow fever and make a sensation throughout the valley. The germ-hunter, Dr. Sternberg, who, by the way, did not continue long in service, hunted up some cases of rice fever below the city and came rushing back with the information that he had found an epidemic of yellow fever just below New Orleans.

The National Board of Health agreed to send down to investigate the matter a delegation of doctors representing both State and national boards. The report of that commission was against Sternberg and against the national board.

But this did not satisfy the national representatives, and there was some private correspondence which we have at our command.

Below we give some specimens of Turner and Mitchell's private work against the interests of New Orleans. The opening letter of the former may be keyed by saying that Turner had predicted an epidemic in 1880, and the States had pronounced him a charlatan, or something to that effect. We do not know what transpired on the alleged interview for which thanks are returned, but Turner's letter is at last in print, which he so much feared, and it is a very rich reading. The plotting will open the eyes of some who have been swearing by the national board.

As all well know, the Picayune does not make charges without proof of its assertion, and, on call, we can furnish a photograph of Turner and Mitchell's letters taken from the originals.

A VERY SPICY LETTER FROM TURNER.

(Personal—Confidential.)

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH,
Washington, July 12, 1880.

MY DEAR DR. BEMISS: I have to thank you and Dr. Chaillé for the generous effort you made for me. I could expect nothing else than that sort of filth from a blackguard, but that is lowering myself to give high praise. You know me better than to suppose that I offer any suggestions to any person concerning the outlook regarding yellow fever. I know exactly what that outlook is, and you recognize the fact that I can and do keep my own counsel. There is only one notice to be taken of the matter—silence. I am sorry that the effort to protect me carried you into such a filthy mess.

Can you give me the date of the shipment of the "Pape Clemant." It's not here yet, from all that I can learn. Get a duplicate of the bill of lading and send it on so that it can be hunted up.

I hope you will carry Dr. Smith over to Ship Island and let him pick up all the items. Take him by railroad to Biloxi, showing him the towns and their sanitariums.

I've had no end of anxiety concerning the Benner and the launches. Mitchell will work the river inspection all O. K. Dr. Smith, Mitchell and yourself will have to consider railroad inspections, and how far they should go—if go at all—when yellow fever is absent from a city.

I am very tired, very nervous; two weeks' river cruising under the circumstances nearly used me up.

It's hot here. How your State board must pay for just one case of yellow fever, only a little one.

Now, if this gets into the papers what a row there would be. D—d if I don't suspect every one, or shall if I remain here long enough. Commend me to your family. Make my warmest recognition to Dr. Chaillé. I'll remember that kindly act. Vale.

Yours, very sincerely,

T. J. TURNER.

THE EXTRAORDINARY POSTSCRIPT.

I wish I had your ears for about an hour. Can't you get the Excelsior out to Ship Island? I just hint that to you; no one else knows that I make this. If you can do so you do a big thing for yourself. But you know the situation and outlook.

Sincerely,

T.

DR. BEMISS.

MITCHELL TO BEMISS.

MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE, September 20, 1880.

DEAR DR. BEMISS: Have Sternberg fortify his reports at all points—first appearance opposite the quarantine station—prevailing no neighborhoods that it did not in '78—Hayes & Hebert statement that it is the same disease that they had in '78 but denied that it was y. f. then, and Dr. Wilkinson's positive assertion that it is the same he saw in '78, and that was y. f. and this is the same.

He need not fear to go before a jury of experts with the evidence he can command.

Don't forget that you and I will have to take position very soon on this question, and I think the sooner the better. Get your N. O. cases together—no rice fields there.

Send Collins down the river if necessary to obtain more correct information.

Yours,

MITCHELL.

HOW THE PLOT WORKED AT WASHINGTON.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH,
Washington, October 1, 1880.

MY DEAR DR. BEMISS: Your letter of September 28 is just received, and in the same mail I have a letter from Dr. Mitchell on the same subject.

I also have a letter from Dr. Sternberg, reiterating the opinion that the disease was actually yellow fever, and stating that Dr. Devron has reported to him that a child that came from Point Michel, in the vicinity of the family where four children died out of six, has recently died on the outskirts of the city with black vomit and suppression of urine, and Dr. Jones would not permit the body to be brought to the city for burial, although he pronounced the case one of malarial fever.

I find from Dr. Mitchell's note that he thinks Dr. Sternberg's diagnosis was probably correct. I must confess that under the circumstances I am a little puzzled as to what to advise. I should certainly accept, without hesitation, any course upon which you and Dr. Mitchell may see fit to agree, but you are the only two members of the board who have any special knowledge as regards yellow fever, and when you disagree the matter becomes somewhat embarrassing. If there is a reasonable probability that the disease concerning which Dr. Sternberg reported was really a mild form of yellow fever, intermingled with some cases of remittent fever, and if you and Dr. Mitchell agree to make such a statement as that, I think I can say that the National Board of Health will support you with all its power, will publish in full your reports, and that the interior States of the Mississippi Valley will arrange themselves upon your side of the question.

There are several ways of getting at this matter. In the first place it seems that the president of the board, in his report for the quarter ending September 30, ought to furnish such information as it would be desirable for the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury to have before them in the preparation of their annual reports to Congress.

It will be perfectly proper, then, to state the difficulties which the board has met in relation to the Louisiana board of health, to comment severely upon their Mississippi River system of quarantine, and upon the results which it has produced.

If, however, you are not prepared to agree with Dr. Mitchell, and to say that this was yellow fever—and I know very well what the saying of this will involve on your part—then it becomes doubtful as to the expediency of making such a report. It then seems to me that the most dignified course which you could take will be to ignore the matter altogether, so far as you personally are concerned. As regards the national board, if can of course take no notice of the action of the Louisiana board until it is brought formally to its attention.

We have received no copy as yet of the resolutions which they have passed. If, however, they should send us a copy of such resolutions, I am doubtful about the expediency of our taking any action upon them. There is but one body that I know of which could properly and without loss of dignity take up this set of resolutions of the Louisiana State board of health and the course of action which they have pursued during this last spring and summer with regard to quarantine measures. This body is the sanitary council of the Mississippi Valley, whose constitution provides for the taking up of precisely such questions as these. It will be a question whether the council will not consider that the calling of the convention by the Louisiana state board of health, without having consulted it, is a piece of impertinence, and will take up the matter and will act on it in its own way, at its own time, and give the Louisiana State board convention the entire go-by as an organization, and also its members. You must remember that the State of Alabama is not represented in the sanitary council of the Mississippi Valley, having declined to join it.

If this view be correct, it will perhaps be best that the national board shall keep serenely on its way and leave the sanitary council of the Mississippi Valley to attend to the case of the Louisiana State board of health, which I think it is fully competent to do. It can use the press quite as well as Jones, and probably have quite as extended a circulation and secure a great deal of all beliefs.

The American Public Health Association will keep clear of all questions of this kind, I think. It is a body for the promotion of sanitary science, and will not engage in any local quarrels. The matter will not be brought up in the association unless it is done by the Louisiana State board of health itself; and if that body undertakes to introduce it, I rather think it will be very promptly suppressed. The Public Health Association has its own work to do, which is entirely distinct from that of local boards, or even of such an organization as the sanitary council of the Mississippi Valley, and it will not take up or deal with any local quarrel whatever.

I shall write a letter to this general effect to Dr. Mitchell. I sincerely hope that you and Dr. Mitchell will be able to agree as to the course to be pursued, and I can only repeat what I have said above, that if you and he agree and are willing to state over your own signatures that the diagnosis of Dr. Sternberg was probably correct, you shall receive all the backing which we are able to give you.

Very respectfully and truly, yours,

J. S. BILLINGS.

DR. S. M. BEMISS.

HONEST CABELL DOES NOT LIKE THE ODOR.

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA, October 1, 1880.

DEAR DR. BEMISS: The foregoing communication has been sent to me that I might add such comments as I may deem proper.

My first impulse on reading it was to return it to Washington to be laid before the executive committee, there being no evidence on the face of the letter that the matter had been brought to the attention of the committee, while several contingent pledges are given on behalf of the board. On a second perusal of your letter, which Dr. Billings had also forwarded to me, and of this reply, I came to the conclusion that yours was not intended as an official communication, but that in a case in which charges had been made against you personally (though in your capacity as a representative of the board) you had consulted another member of the board in whose judgment you justly confided as to what steps you should take in vindication of yourself. In this aspect of the case I withhold the protest I should otherwise have made against the practice of directing official communications to a single member of the board, who often answers such communications without consulting the executive committee.

Like Dr. Billings, I believe that if you and Dr. Mitchell should concur in the statement that you believe Dr. Sternberg's diagnosis was correct, the national board would not fail to sustain you; but neither he nor I can give a pledge on behalf of the board or of the executive. It must be distinctly understood, then, that this is merely our opinion, and that no guarantee can be given of the official action of the executive committee until the committee has been consulted. I confess that until seeing in Dr. Sternberg's "confidential" letter to Dr. Billings, of September 26, the statement made on the authority of Dr. Devron that a child from Point Michel had died on the outskirts of the city with black vomit and suppression of urine, I had been disposed to adopt the conclusions of the report of the commission. But I concur with Dr. Billings in thinking that the board ought to and will sustain any view in which you and Dr. Mitchell concur.

I also agree with Dr. Billings in what he says about the Sanitary Association of the Mississippi Valley. Indeed I made a similar suggestion to Dr. Mitchell more than a month ago, with reference to the rather impertinent invitation given by the Louisiana State board for a quarantine convention. I have never had a reply from him.

I take occasion to remind you that some weeks ago I made a request that you would furnish, if accessible, the record proof of certain allegations respecting the official acts of the quarantine officer at the Mississippi station. If it be practicable to obtain this record it will be of great importance to the board to have possession of it as early as possible.

Truly and cordially, yours,

J. L. CABELL.

I desire also to have printed the action of the New Orleans board of health in reference to the proceedings of the Memphis board of health:

THE BOARD OF HEALTH—REGULAR WEEKLY MEETING—THE HEALTH OF THE CITY EXCEPTIONALLY GOOD—THE BOARD RESENT THE IMPERTINENT INTERMEDDLING OF THE OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

The regular weekly meeting of the State board of health was held last evening, Dr. Joseph Jones, president, in the chair, and Drs. Formento, Faget, Von Gohren, and Kella, and Messrs. Marks, Booth, and Bosworth, present.

Dr. Jones called the attention of the board to the remarkably healthy condition of the city for this season of the year, and to the almost total absence of any contagious or infectious diseases. During the week ending on Saturday last there were only one hundred and two deaths in New Orleans from all causes, and during the last five days ending Thursday evening but forty-six deaths had occurred, two of which were from scarlatina, one from small-pox, and one from malarial fever. The steady high temperature which we have had of late was conducive to health.

Dr. Jones stated that he had held under personal inspection the house No. 100 Old Levee street, where Henry Forbes was first taken sick, and although there were fifteen persons in this and the adjoining house, six of whom were small children, not a single case of sickness had occurred among them to date, and all were in a perfectly healthy condition.

In regard to small-pox, Dr. Jones said the board and its officers had done every thing in their power to prevent the spread of that disease, and regretted that vaccination was not made compulsory by law.

Reference was made to the quarantine and health laws passed at the recent session of the Legislature. The former was in substance the same law as that passed in 1855, with but slight changes in the wording.

The act requiring that all inhabitable rooms should be provided with a water capacity of two hundred gallons, Dr. Jones said was in the right direction, but this supply was insufficient.

A special report from Dr. Beret, sanitary inspector of the fifth district, was read, relative to the health of Algiers in connection with the overflow in the rear from the Live Oak crevasse, showing that as yet no serious effects had resulted therefrom.

A communication from Dr. Finney, resident physician at the Mississippi quarantine station, was read, showing that all the vessels there were in a clean and healthy condition.

Mr. Marks introduced the following resolution:

"Whereas the Memphis board of health has adopted a resolution to the effect that on and after the 15th instant, and until the 1st of October, 1882, coffee, rice, sugar, molasses, spices, and all tropical fruits, &c., shall be prohibited from entering Memphis, coming from southern ports, and this extraordinary and uncalled-for action (as far as New Orleans is interested) has been superinduced by the action of the national board in suspending its inspection service; and

"Whereas the city of New Orleans is entirely free from epidemic diseases of every kind and in a state of health comparing favorably with any of the large cities of the Union; and

"Whereas the efforts of intimidation that are being made to terrify Congress into making appropriations for the support of the national board, by declaring non-intercourse with this city, or through the appeal of the secretary of the national board to the trusty shot-gun, should not assume the dangerous form of the unnecessary destruction of commerce:

"Be it therefore resolved, That the State board of health of Louisiana views with regret and astonishment the action of the board of health of Memphis, and respectfully requests that so far as this city is concerned this action be reconsidered."

Mr. Marks said that if this action by the Memphis board was to protect the people of that city from the introduction of any contagious or infectious disease, why was it that such articles of commerce as were excluded from New Orleans, after being subjected to thorough disinfection and a detention of ten days at the quarantine station, were received from New York with only one day's detention at the quarantine station there?

The resolution was unanimously adopted and the secretary instructed to forward a copy to the Memphis board of health.

Mr. Booth introduced the following resolution:

"Whereas an effort is being made to have it appear that the health of the people of New Orleans, of Louisiana, and of the Mississippi Valley is being jeopardized by the Congress of the United States in refusing to continue the appropriation for the salaries of the official staff of the National Board of Health; and

"Whereas Dr. T. J. Turner, secretary of said National Board of Health, has caused to be circulated (it is to be supposed) by order of said board a scandalous telegram as below, to say:

"MEMPHIS, July 9.—Dr. R. W. Mitchell, resident member of the National Board of Health, this morning received the following telegram from Dr. T. J. Turner, secretary of the National Board of Health at Washington:

"Give notice to all concerned to be prepared to close inspections on the 15th instant, and get all Government property ready to place out of commission. Notify the valley. This action is owing to Congress failing to make an appropriation, and in the event of an outbreak of fever along the coast remands the residents of the Mississippi Valley to such protection as can be given by the State and local boards of health and the trusty shot-gun."

This alleged notification, as aforesaid, intended as a libel upon this and other State boards of health, and, by thus defaming them, to bulldoze the Congress of the United States into granting said National Board of Health their accustomed moneys and salaries; and

"Whereas said National Board of Health, by the emission of such innuendoes and incendiary publications, violates the conventionalities of official intercourse in a gross and unwarrantable manner, showing what it would do if it once had power, and reflecting most aristocratically upon the self-governing ability of the American people: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the telegram of Secretary Turner be copied and forwarded to President Cabell, of the National Board of Health, with a request that in future—if the board has any future—their communications to the people of the valley be couched in more decorous language when alluding to the board.

"Resolved, That this State board, supported by the confidence of the people, will continue its efforts, with aid from State, city, and volunteers, to ward off the importation of foreign pestilence, and trusts that, with the help of a beneficent Providence guiding the skill and courage of man, the health of the valley may be preserved without recourse to the 'trusty shot-gun,' recommended by the National Board of Health."

The resolution was adopted, when the board adjourned.

The Senate, under the influence of newspapers around the country, brings in a proposition here to add $61,250 to the appropriation of the House, making the aggregate $78,750, the House having appropriated for this purpose $17,500. Not one dollar is for the preservation of health; it is simply to pay salaries to men around Washington who are doing no good, but only starting rumors about the prevalence of disease here and there, for the purpose of being enabled to draw their salaries.

Mr. REAGAN. Where is the gentleman's authority when he speaks of there being $78,000 appropriated?

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations will cipher it out.

Mr. HISCOCK. Seventy-eight thousand dollars is proposed by the Senate to be appropriated, and every dollar for salaries or services.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will correct my figures if I am wrong. I never change the RECORD; but on this occasion, if I am in error, I will make the matter right.

I wish to have read the remonstrance of the board of trade of Baltimore against the bill to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States. This remonstrance puts the matter on a higher ground than the mere mercenary consideration as to appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

Remonstrance of the board of trade of Baltimore against the bill entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States."

The attention of your committee has been called to the effort now being made before Congress by the National Board of Health to increase their power and authority by means of a bill which has been introduced with the title of "An act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States," but which, in the language of the Journal of Commerce of New York, ought rather to be entitled "A bill to create a further burden upon the commerce of the United States."

Upon an examination of the subject, your committee find that it contemplates not only the appointment of a horde of new officers and inspectors and of a medical officer at each of our consulates abroad, with almost unlimited powers and fees, but looks to the final absorption and abolition of all State systems of quarantine; and it even looks to the establishment of an interstate system of quarantine which would be attended with endless and unnecessary annoyance and expense; in short, the powers proposed to be invested in the national board are, in the opinion of your committee, of a monstrous and unparalleled character.

And we therefore propose the following resolution.

W. W. SPENCE, Chairman.
JAS. CAREY COALE.
W. H. PEROT.
E. D. BIGELOW.
G. A. VON LINGEN.

Resolved, by the board of trade of Baltimore, That in the opinion of this board the bill proposed by the National Board of Health, and now before Congress, entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States," is unnecessary, mischievous, and fraught with great evil to the commerce of the country; and

Resolved, That this preamble and these resolutions be printed and sent to each of our Representatives and Senators in Congress, with the earnest request that they will oppose the passage of said bill by all honorable means in their power.

BOARD OF TRADE ROOMS,
Baltimore, May 6, 1882.

SIR: At the stated meeting of the board of trade of Baltimore City held last instant the annexed report and resolutions; presented by the committee on foreign commerce, were unanimously adopted, and in pursuance therewith I have the honor of presenting you with a copy.

Very respectfully,

GEORGE U. PORTER, Secretary.

Mr. REAGAN. What is the date of that paper?

Mr. COX, of New York. May 6, 1882.

Mr. REAGAN. What bill before the House was that a protest against?

Mr. COX, of New York. It reaches this case; and I will give the gentleman from Texas something more in the same direction.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to know what is the bill against which this is a protest?

Mr. HISCOCK. There was such a bill in the Senate.

Mr. REAGAN. I never heard of it.

Mr. PEELE. I will ask the gentleman from New York whether it is not true that provision has been made for the erection of a marine hospital at Baltimore.

Mr. COX, of New York. I am not talking about marine hospitals, I am talking about the inutility of this National Board of Health and the means they have taken to perpetuate their salaries and to perpetuate their inutility.

In the New Orleans Picayune of July 19, 1882, appears what I should like to have go into the RECORD. It is as follows:

On Monday afternoon Louis Dischler, a patient at Charity hospital, died exhibiting some symptoms of high fever and yellowness of the skin, which suggested to some of the attendants appearances of yellow fever.

Notice was given to Dr. Joseph Jones, president of the State board of health, and he, attended by Dr. S. S. Herrick and other officials of the State board, at once visited the hospital.

Dr. S. E. Chaillé, of the National Board of Health, having been also notified, was present, as were a number of other physicians of note. The assembled faculty proceeded to make an autopsy of the corpse, while Dr. Jones applied himself to investigating the history of the case so as to trace its bearings and relations to any possible causes that might exist.

As a result of the post mortem examination of the dead body and an investigation of the case in all its various bearings, Dr. Jones made up a report and diagnosis, which are here given, and which the doctor forwarded by telegraph to Dr. W. D. Kelley, president of the board of health at Galveston, and subsequently furnished to the agent of the Associated Press a copy for transmission over the wires to all parts of the country. The following is the official statement from the hand of the president of the State board of health:

"This day, July 17, about 2.30 o'clock in the afternoon, I was requested by Dr. A. B. Miles, house surgeon at the Charity hospital, to examine a corpse at the Charity hospital. A thorough examination developed the following: Exterior, golden colored; no marked mottling of dependent portions; universal gold color of integuments, fibrous and serous membranes, from the diffusion of bile. Heart, normal in size, firm in texture; under microscope, transverse striae of muscular tissue distinct; no fatty degeneration of the heart; textures of the heart and pericardium discolored by bile. Liver congested and of a brownish red color, with portions of a lighter shade; under microscope, liver cells distinct, with no marked accumulation of oil globules. Mucous membrane of the stomach highly congested, contained about two fluid ounces of a reddish mucoid fluid, coagulated by heat and nitric acid, and containing numerous epithelial cells. Kidneys large and congested; urinary bladder contained about one fluid ounce of golden-colored urine, with a moderate quantity of albumen and yellow casts; many of the casts were transparent, with little or no granular matter, indicating that Bright's disease may have existed before the supervention of jaundice.

"History of the case.—From the hospital records, as well as from a searching personal inspection and investigation, I gather the following facts: Louis Dischler, age thirty-one years, a native of Germany, a resident of New Orleans for twelve years, brewer by occupation, is said to have had yellow fever in 1878. He has suffered for several years with a large ulcer in left leg, marks of which were visible at post mortem. Was treated for ulcer in Charity hospital in October and December, 1881. He worked for several years in the canal brewery, near Old Basin, then in eagle brewery, 540 Tchoupitoulas street, until the 31st of March, 1882. June 20, 1882, he entered the brewery No. 1010 Tchoupitoulas street, fourth district, near Louisiana avenue. No. 1010 is the only house in the square, and is entirely isolated. His habits were like those of brewers generally, intemperate. He used wine and beer freely.

"On Tuesday night, June 11, while drunk, he lay exposed to a draft of cold air, and next day complained of sore throat, and wrapped ice around his neck. Dr. C. E. Schuppert saw him on the 12th instant. Patient was jaundiced and suffering from the effects of alcoholic stimulants. He prescribed Glauber's salts. On the 13th jaundice was well marked; no fever, head cold, complained of chilly sensations; prescribed podophyllin as a purgative.

"According to his landlady, on the 14th or 15th patient was alternately up and down; was very yellow; drank two bottles of wine; was admitted to the Charity hospital on the morning of the 16th of July, and stated that he had suffered with access of fever every second day. At 7 a. m. on the 17th, the temperature of the axilla was 104° F.; at 9 a. m., 105°; at 12 m., 107°; at 1 p. m., 109.5°. The patient died in less than twenty minutes after this rise of temperature.

"We have in this case a history embracing intemperance, intense jaundice, no vomiting, purgation, albuminuria, congestion of internal organs, rapid rising of temperature, and death.

"JOSEPH JONES, M. D.

"President Board of Health, State of Louisiana."

Dr. Charles E. Schuppert, who had attended the patient just preceding his entrance to the Charity hospital, addressed to the board of health the following statement:

"The man who died at the Charity hospital did not show any symptoms whatever of yellow fever.

"My diagnosis is gastro-duodenitis, brought on by overindulgence in spirituous liquors and exposure.

"I will gladly give any further information required. It is as ridiculous as unjust to even surmise yellow fever in this case.

With great respect, I am yours,

"CHAS. E. SCHUPPERT."

In addition to this Dr. Schuppert was visited by a Picayune reporter yesterday. He stated that the patient, Dischler, was represented to be sick from lying out at night when intoxicated. On Thursday last when Dr. Schuppert examined him he says Dischler had no sign of fever whatever. He had a cold, clammy sweat upon him at that time and his eyes were injected with bile. He complained of a pain in the stomach. For many days previous to this attack he was complaining of indigestion, with a slight pain in the abdomen.

Dr. Schuppert states that he prescribed for jaundice, caused by an inflammation of the stomach and duodenum, technically called duodenitis.

Dr. Schuppert says he was informed that on the following evening, in addition to drinking spirituous liquors and beer, Dischler drank two bottles of red wine. The next morning he was conveyed to the charity hospital.

The medical men present at the autopsy were Dr. Joseph Jones, president of the State board of health; Dr. S. S. Herrick, secretary of the board; Dr. S. E. Chaille, resident member of the National Board of Health; Dr. Thomas Layton, vice-president of the board of the administrators of the charity hospital; Drs. A. B. Miles and D. Jamison, respectively chief and assistant house surgeons of the hospital.

It is considered that the case has been so thoroughly and carefully studied as to its symptoms and history that there can be nothing doubtful in the matter, and it is therefore in the most authoritative manner pronounced to be jaundice. The full information that President Jones has promulgated on the subject, and the prompt action he took to test the nature of the disease should disarm all suspicion or tendency to alarm on the subject in every section of the country, and doubtless will.

There it appeared this case of yellow fever turned out to be a case of alcohol and jaundice; and so if we give this National Board of Health the power to go into all our quarantine regulations and overturn them, the power to go into our hospitals and make their reports on every suspicious case, we will have a great big, stupendous institution here which will do nothing else than to interfere with our commerce and make trouble throughout the country. Our committee have done wisely therefore in trying to limit, and if possible to expurgate from the Federal statute these laws which give this peculiar institution this peculiar privilege. I believe that is all I have to state.

Mr. HISCOCK. I take the floor, and I suppose I am entitled under the rules to an hour, and then I will call for a vote; and I do this for the purpose of controlling this question. I yield five minutes in the first instance to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MANNING.]

Mr. MANNING. Mr. Speaker, I earnestly urge the House to concur in the amendments of the Senate, which are as follows:

- (75) For quarantine service, Mississippi River, $16,000.
- (76) For quarantine service, Ship Island, $14,000.
- (77) For quarantine service, Sapelo Sound, $13,000.
- (78) For quarantine service, Hampton Roads, $2,000.
- (79) For pay and expenses of inspectors, $4,000.
- (80) For pay and expenses of members of board, $5,000.
- (81) For printing Bulletin, $5,000.
- (82) For clerks, messengers, and laborers, $15,000.
- (83) For secretary and disbursing agent, $1,500.
- (84) For rent, light, and fuel, $1,500.
- (85) For telegrams, $250.
- (86) For stationery, $1,000.
- (87) For postage, $400.
- (88) For furniture, $100.
- (89) For miscellaneous expenses, $500.

These amendments, with the $25,000 provided for in this bill for aid to State and local boards of health and to local quarantine stations in carrying out their rules and regulations to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases in the United States, and the $100,000 contingently appropriated, we may hope will make the board efficient in the performance of the duties that are imposed upon it by law.

The National Board of Health should either be supported amply or it should be abolished, and it certainly ought not to be abolished. I am much mistaken if there are among the intelligent people of the country any considerable number who desire this to be done. They have not forgotten the frightful experience, in 1878, of the people in the Mississippi Valley when they were visited by yellow fever. They can never forget that four years ago this scourge swept up the Mississippi Valley like a besom of destruction, and one hundred thousand people were stricken, and doctors were as helpless as children in its presence. When that horrible disease had ceased and the national convention of the distinguished men of medicine assembled at Richmond, Virginia, the president of that convention, Dr. Elisha Harris, a famous physician from the State of New York, opened its proceedings by declaring as a fact to be confessed broadly and unqualifiedly in the face of all mankind, that no advance had been made by the medical profession of the world in the treatment of this terrible pestilence since the plague at Lisbon, over a century ago.

Every man concedes, Mr. Speaker, that it is of the greatest importance to keep this disease, if possible, beyond our borders; but if, perchance, it should get in, then every possible machinery that the human mind can devise should be invoked, and all the money necessary should be appropriated to meet it and stamp it out of existence. When I hear gentlemen talking as the gentleman from New York who has just spoken, or others who agree in the views he submitted, I am almost cruel enough to want them transported into the presence of such a terrible scourge, so that thereafter they will have a proper appreciation of such annual duty as now confronts us. It would be a wholesome lesson to them. I would be glad to have them become more familiar with the facts in regard to the ravages of this disease than they seem to be by what they have said to-day. I would wish them to feel a little more interest in the indescribable sufferings and irreparable losses to which others have been subjected.

The Life-Saving Service which is annually so eloquently commended on this floor by my friend from New York cost the Government during the last fiscal year $700,000. Can he tell us how many lives were saved in that period? He will certainly admit there were but few; but still I would not antagonize or cripple that important service by withholding proper appropriations. The Light-House system likewise I believe is near to his heart and is cordially supported, and Congress and the President assent to an annual expenditure of $2,500,000 to maintain it. These large sums of money are wisely appropriated as the protection of human life is paramount to every question which presents itself to the consideration of the legislator and patriot.

The average annual expenditure of the National Board of Health since its creation is $168,038.72. Who can reasonably and without prejudice contemplate the security to life and protection to the business interests of the country which these three bureaus respectively afford, without promptly concluding that while all should be maintained upon the most efficient basis yet, the National Board of Health is entitled to be first considered, although it costs millions less each year to sustain it. The necessity for a national board of health was made painfully apparent by the yellow-fever epidemic of 1878, although yellow fever has invaded our country sixty-five times within the present century.

During the prevalence of that fatal pestilence the people were forced to resist its ravages without organization or pecuniary assistance by the Government. The emergency called forth every measure of relief which was possible, under the circumstances; but fully twenty thousand deaths occurred in a hundred thousand cases, and the pecuniary loss to the country occasioned by this epidemic is reckoned by the hundred millions of dollars.

Now, the gentleman from New York, in his desperation, a moment ago, to defeat the pending motion to concur in the amendments of the Senate, flourished this paper, published in New Orleans, which I hold in my hand, in the presence of this House and defiantly invited our consideration of its contents, charging that a plot was disclosed involving the good faith of the National Board of Health. I have read this newspaper slip since he sent it to the reporter's desk to be embodied in his remarks in the RECORD to-morrow morning; and while I have not had time to read it as carefully as I would like—he did not have the time to read it to the House while he spoke—I have read it carefully enough to know that the charge preferred is not sustained, and I invite the closest scrutiny to it on the part of every member of the House. I venture to predict now, without intending to be discourteous to my friend from New York, that when gentlemen come to read the contents of this paper, if he does not modify his statement made in this discussion as to what it contains, they will be very much disappointed when they come to learn exactly what the charge is based upon. It does not bear the gentleman out at all. He read his paper too hastily. I recognize therein the names of reputable gentlemen; I know some of them personally; they are the peers of any man on this floor in the matter of integrity or of any in distinction in the medical profession. There is no plot, Mr.

Speaker, here that affects the integrity or the bona fides of the action of the National Board of Health, and I defy the gentleman to take the floor and point it out.

When gentlemen come to read the paper in question they will discover exactly why it was published. Talk about jealousy! You will perhaps discover that the criticisms betray the prejudice of a New Orleans editor prompted, possibly, by fears for the commerce of his city. We should not forget what effect an epidemic of yellow fever has on the commerce of any city. We know how people run away. We know how serious is the consequent prostration of trade and business when the yellow fever comes.

In this connection it is proper to read the following extract from the report of the State board of health of Louisiana for the year 1878:

Cost of the yellow-fever epidemics of 1878 to the city of New Orleans.

|--|------------|
| Estimated number of cases..... | 25,000 |
| Cost of 10 days' sickness of each one, at $3 per day..... | $750,000 |
| Cost of 4,500 funerals, at $25 each..... | 112,500 |
| About two-fifths of the 4,500 victims represent each a capital value of $1,000, amounting to..... | 1,800,000 |
| Remaining three-fifths, at $300, amount to..... | 810,000 |
| Loss of time of half the industrial population, say 20,000 people, for 90 days, at $2 per day..... | 3,600,000 |
| Values destroyed by the epidemics..... | 7,072,500 |
| Commercial losses by interruption of intercourse with the surrounding country, and diversion of trade to other cities..... | 5,000,000 |
| Total losses..... | 12,072,500 |
| Estimated profits of the summer trade with ports where yellow fever usually prevails..... | 1,572,500 |

The difference between these two sums, say $10,500,000, represents the actual cost of the epidemic to the material resources of New Orleans.

These figures, made upon a basis deemed moderate in all particulars, show that a trade during half the year with certain tropical ports, and worth to our city $1,500,000, is held at a risk of more than $12,000,000, the actual loss of 1878 from yellow fever. An estimate of the total loss to our country from this epidemic has been made by Mr. A. B. Farquhar, in a letter to Surgeon-General Woodward, in which he places it at the enormous sum of $175,000,000.

From the highest official sources (a message from the President and reports from two committees during this session of Congress) we are informed that the total loss to the people of the United States in the element of material wealth, to say nothing of loss of life and impaired health, was about $2,000,000 per day during the epidemic of that year.

When you come to consider the facts and human nature you will better understand the value of the statement made in the paper referred to by the gentleman from New York. So it is that this editor takes issue with the doctors as to the appearance of yellow fever a few miles below the city of New Orleans and says it is nothing but a scare for unworthy purposes. Now certain doctors charged with the investigation of this matter, having examined all the facts, have declared there was absolute truth in the report. Others disagreed. Will you put confidence in this editor on the one hand and ignore the doctors on the other, honorable men, knowing what they speak after diligent investigation and making their report over their own signatures? It is immaterial whether this was in the instance cited yellow fever or not. The important question at issue is the integrity of this National Board of Health.

Mr. Speaker, we have advanced far in all departments of science, but we have not advanced far enough yet to solve the question of how to treat yellow fever to avert death to those who are stricken, and we want all of the information upon the subject that we can get, and all the money essential to our protection.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi allow me to have read in this connection a resolution passed by the Auxiliary Sanitary Association of New Orleans, asking for an increase of appropriation for the National Board of Health, and stating that a case of yellow fever prevailed there at that time, in which statement Dr. Chaille and other distinguished physicians also acquiesced?

Mr. MANNING. I have but a moment, but have cheerfully submitted the interruption of my friend from Arkansas.

I submit the following telegram from distinguished physicians of Mississippi, whose judgment can be accepted without apprehension that they are in the least degree under any improper influence:

JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI, July 24, 1882.

Senators LAMAR and GEORGE, and Representatives MULBROW, MANNING, MONEY, SINGLETON, HOOKER, and LYNCH, (care J. Z. GEORGE, Washington, D. C.):

The State board of health, at a special session held here this day, have unanimously agreed that the National Board of Health can and will perform vital and important sanitary services that can be rendered by no other body, and would respectfully urge you, in view of the important interest involved, to do all in your power to obtain such an appropriation from Congress as may enable that board to fully discharge its responsible duties in accordance with the plans foreshadowed in its annual report.

F. W. DANCY, President.

C. A. RICE.

W. F. HYER.

J. N. BENNETT.

W. D. HILL.

B. F. KETTRELL.

J. W. BLANKS.

H. P. SALE.

WIRT JOHNSON, Secretary.

Telegrams, in effect the same as this, I am informed, have been received by many members and Senators from a large number of States in different sections of the country.

To disregard such communications is to impute bad faith to those who sent them and the grossest duplicity to the Board of Health, which I apprehend no member of this House is reckless enough to do.

It is asserted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] that we can safely rely for protection against yellow fever upon the Marine-Hospital Service. I would remind him that we never felt any security or realized any protection at the hands of that service either before or since the creation of the National Board of Health. What efforts were put forth by it during the yellow-fever epidemic of 1878, when death was in the very air? If efforts were made they were so inefficient as to make no impression upon those residing in the section of the country visited in that year by this dreadful disease, and who would have gladly testified to its efficiency if its services had been valuable. Did not the law then give authority to it to fight this disease and has the law been substantially changed since that date? If so, I do not recall it.

While the gentleman from Ohio was submitting his argument that the board of health should be abolished and all its duties and responsibilities under existing law be transferred to the Marine-Hospital Service, he conceded in reply to my inquiry that no case of yellow fever is ever admitted to a marine hospital, the only shelter afforded by law to patients under the care of marine surgeons. The gentleman should remember that it was an Ohio River tow-boat, John Porter, that scattered the yellow fever in its most malignant type up the Ohio as far as Gallipolis in 1878, and that the steamer Golden Crown, from his own city, transported that disease from New Orleans to Memphis in that year. While he declares that we should dispense with the board he signally fails to overcome the opinion of those competent to advise us on the subject, that the maintenance of the board is of the utmost importance to the lives of our people and to the business interests of the country.

It is not proposed to ignore local boards or local authorities, but to act in concert with them for the accomplishment of the one great end. It will be seen by the following, which I read from the first annual report of the board, that there is no inimical feeling or jealousy between it and the State and local sanitary authorities:

The rules and regulations recommended by the board for adoption by State and local sanitary authorities have met with very general approval, and have been adopted by the following State and local boards of health, namely:

The State health authorities of Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Jersey, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and the local boards of health of Argentina, Arkansas; Brunswick, Georgia; Brownsville, Texas; Bayou Sara, Louisiana; Brunswick County, North Carolina; Cairo and Carlinville, Illinois; Corpus Christi, Texas; Charleston, South Carolina; Clarendon and Camden, Arkansas; Clarksville, Tennessee; Cedar Keys, Florida; Delhi, Louisiana; Decatur, Alabama; Darien, Georgia; Devall's Bluff, Arkansas; Fernandina, Florida; Forest City, Arkansas; Huntingdon, Tennessee; Helena, Arkansas; Indianola, Texas; Jacksonville, Florida; Jefferson County, Mississippi; Landerdale County, Mississippi; Louisville, Kentucky; Mobile, Alabama; Meridian, Mississippi; Morgan City, Louisiana; Pensacola, Florida; Pine Bluff and Prescott, Arkansas; Shelbyville, Tennessee; Saint Louis, Missouri; Saint Mary's, Georgia; Tampa, Florida; Vicksburg and Warren County, Mississippi.

These recommendations were somewhat hastily drawn up to meet a present emergency, and it could not be supposed that they would prove perfect. The experience of the past summer has shown that certain improvements in these rules are desirable, but upon the whole it may be said that they have worked satisfactorily wherever they have been enforced.

I wish to say that we violated no principle of State rights in the passage of the law of 1879 creating a National Board of Health. I had the honor to discuss that question in the Forty-fifth Congress, and cited early and late decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, pronounced by Democratic judges, in support of the bill then pending and which subsequently was enacted into law.

For over a half century Congress has been adding one precedent to another illustrating the power and purpose of Congress to give greater security to the health and lives of those within our borders who chance to be afloat upon our waters.

The proposition is res adjudicata, and I submit that there is no valid reason to take any backward step or to regret what we have done. At the head of the board we have a great and good man, and we can confidently rely upon his head and heart in the discharge of all the duties imposed upon him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MANNING. I ask for a moment longer.

Mr. HISCOCK. I cannot extend any additional time to the gentleman.

Mr. DUNN. I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the matters to which I have referred bearing upon this subject, taken from the Times-Democrat, of New Orleans, and the Memphis Appeal of recent date.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the articles to which the gentleman refers will be printed.

There was no objection.

They are as follows:

There was the regular weekly meeting last night of the executive committee of the Auxiliary Sanitary Association. There were present: Messrs. James Jackson, T. J. Woodward, G. Devron, M. D.; W. H. Watkins, sanitary director; C. K. Converse, Henry Ginder, Albert Baldwin, Stanford E. Chaille, M. D.; John W. Glenn, T. J. Richardson, M. D., and B. M. Palmer, D. D.

Mr. Baldwin presided.

The finance committee made the following report:
Contributions received from July 15 to 22, 1882:

THOMAS S. ELDER, Secretary.

Dr. Watkins said that as soon as the Diechler case of alleged yellow fever was made known the association went to work disinfecting and cleansing. All the rooms occupied by the man were inspected, and four squares above, four squares below, and four squares to the rear of No. 1010 Tchoupitoulas street had been cleansed, four men and two carts being employed there. He said further that the health of the city was remarkably good.

Mr. Ginder offered the following:

"Resolved, That Congress is hereby petitioned to grant the National Board of Health an appropriation sufficient for the efficient continuance of the quarantine and inspection service, as these services are useful in maintaining the confidence of our adjacent communities.

"Resolved, That this resolution be forthwith telegraphed to our Representatives in Congress."

This was carried unanimously.

Dr. Chaillé addressed the meeting in these words:

"Gentlemen, one case of undoubted yellow fever, and a second suspicious case, have caused much uneasiness. Those who are best informed know well how dangerous are prophecies about this disease. None the less I shall now venture, after thirty years' observation and study of yellow fever, to make the modest prophecy that unless several cases should occur between this date and the 1st of August, New Orleans will escape an epidemic at least.

"I base this opinion on the following facts: the summer has thus far been the coolest and pleasantest I have ever experienced here; our local sanitation, however defective, is comparatively good; the death-rate during the past two weeks has been exceptionally favorable; the fevers generally prevalent manifest no exceptionally evil traits; and, finally, there is no record of the occurrence in New Orleans of a violent epidemic when its outbreak has been later than August 1. At the present there is ample reason for excessive vigilance, but there is little room for serious alarm."—Times-Democrat, New Orleans, July 23.

A reporter of the Times-Democrat last evening called upon Dr. Miles, house-surgeon of the Charity hospital. Dr. Miles said that Dr. Veazie, Dr. Jamison, Dr. Campbell, and himself had seen the patient before his death and diagnosed his disease as yellow fever. They had been conscientious in their diagnosis, and he and the other physicians believed it was yellow fever. The pathological examination by Dr. Schmidt, pathologist of the hospital, had convinced him that his diagnosis was correct.

DR. CHAILLÉ THINKS THE POST MORTEM CONFIRMATORY OF THE ABOVE VIEW.

Dr. Stanford E. Chaillé, representative of the National Board of Health, was also notified of the case, and was present at the post mortem. Upon being interviewed Dr. Chaillé said that the post mortem examination, which he himself witnessed, was confirmatory but not conclusive evidence of the diagnosis made by the four physicians who saw the patient at the hospital during his life, and that he had informed, in compliance with official instructions, the National Board of Health of the above effect, as also that all sanitary precautions against yellow fever would be taken.—Memphis Appeal, July 21.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. I regret exceedingly, Mr. Speaker, the course this debate has taken to-day. I think that no unbiased, impartial human being, knowing anything of the facts that surround our country and its condition, as far as sanitary regulations are concerned, could have heard that debate without regret. What is it, sir, that is presented here as a reason why no action should be taken by the House to prevent the spread of great epidemics in our country? A miserable scramble about the expenditure of some $80,000; and as to whether, if spent at all, it shall be spent by one set of officers or another. It is a contemptible scramble about an amount of money which in itself would not be the one-thousandth part of the expenditure and loss in money values alone to which an epidemic would subject the country, leaving out of sight altogether the sacrifice of thousands of lives, the breaking up of homes, the destruction of families, leaving children without fathers or mothers, fathers without wives or children, and wives without children or husband. Is it possible that American statesmanship has come down to this? I do not doubt that in the effort of the gentleman from New York to exercise economy he might very well sacrifice a thousand human lives somewhere else to place himself on the record in favor of saving $80,000. I do not doubt that he would sacrifice ten thousand lives, break up a thousand families, to preserve his record for statesmanship on the subject of economy and constitutionality.

He would be willing to see all the people die constitutionally; he would be willing to see the property of the country dispersed and scattered and destroyed constitutionally; he would be willing to see the commerce of this country blotted out of existence to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars constitutionally. This is his statesmanship. I regret to say it, but this is the statesmanship which he exhibits here, a statesmanship that grasps at the penny while the pound is wasted.

But, Mr. Speaker, suppose we reverse the picture. Suppose our great State or city of New York was stricken with such a desolating epidemic, would his statesmanship tell this Congress that no effort should be made to supplement the action of the citizens of the State and of the city to prevent an epidemic involving the loss of thousands of human lives and the destruction of millions of property? I opine, sir, that "locality" would have a great deal to do with his statesmanship. I regret to say it, but I cannot doubt it.

Why, sir, he has been told this morning that the yellow fever is epidemic in Havana to-day. He has been told that yellow fever is epidemic on the southern bank of the Rio Grande; that there are cases of yellow fever in Brownsville and cases of yellow fever in Key West; and yet he higgles over $87,000! It has been said here that all of this is to pay the salaries of officers, and I regret that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations made that statement in the face of the facts as they exist.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman what else can be done with it except to pay salaries?

Mr. REAGAN. There is a provision here for quarantine service at Ship Island, $14,000. What does that mean? It means to supply the hospital; to put men in there; to heal them; to take the cargoes from the vessels and fumigate them; cleanse the vessels, and then let them go upon their way. And does he mean to say that all of that is for the salaries of officers? Then, again, provision is made for quarantine station at Sapelo Sound. That is for the same service. That is to put men into the hospital, to treat them there, to fumigate the vessels, and to prevent the spread of devastation and destruction. And yet we are told that all of this sum is for the salaries of officers!

Then, again, for quarantine service at Hampton Roads $2,000 are appropriated. Is that for salaries? Are not the salaries otherwise provided for?

Such, Mr. Speaker, are the great questions which confront us; such is the danger which menaces us. The States have it not in their power to arrest it. They cannot bring consular reports from foreign countries advising them when we are threatened by an infected ship with these diseases. They cannot control commerce on the high seas. They cannot direct ships to particular ports where they can be disinfected and the sick cured, and from which the vessels, relieved of disease, can be allowed to go on their course. They cannot prevent or arrest those diseases which close commerce to vast sections of country; which not only affect local interests but arrest the commerce from all the Northern States and from Europe, and which can be preserved if you will but give us such stations as are provided for at Ship Island and at Sapelo Sound. These agencies at small expense will enable us to treat infected ships and sailors, and those not infected can go on their course.

What I desire is not the agencies; it is no matter to me what officers are salaried or are not salaried; or whether the Federal agency shall be employed through the National Board of Health or the Marine-Hospital Service, so that it is in a sphere of duty or of action which cannot be occupied by the States. It is necessary to supplement the action of the States.

When we look back upon the calamities this country has suffered in past epidemics and remember that it is now liable to and threatened with the same epidemic to-day, is it possible that American statesmanship will stand here higgling over $80,000 to prevent the sacrifice of life, the almost desolation of the large tracts of country, the arrest of commerce to an extent affecting the North and South and European and American trade alike? Are all these things to be disregarded and are we to enter into a petty higgling, scrambling over a few thousand dollars and over the agencies by which they are to be expended? I trust that something broader, grander, nobler, more patriotic and beneficent will rule in the minds and souls of members in this House than a disposition to get into a petty, contemptible scramble of this kind in the presence of threatened consequences like this.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. LYNCH.]

Mr. LYNCH. I only want to give one or two reasons why I shall vote for concurrence in the Senate amendments, and why I cannot agree with my facetious and strict-construction friend from New York, [Mr. COX.] The only trouble with my distinguished friend from New York is this: his heart is large; he means well; he is charitable; he is kind; he is good-natured; he is benevolent; but he is too much of a strict constructionist. He believes that the true Jeffersonian principle is that each State must regulate its own affairs, even to the extent of excluding yellow fever, and that it is a usurpation of authority on the part of the Federal Government to invade the sacred precincts of a State, even to exclude that terrible disease from its borders. I am very glad, however, that my friend does not represent his party altogether on that subject, though I fear he does represent too many of them.

My opinion is that we should not base our action upon the opinions exclusively of physicians. We should not regard the mistakes that physicians make either in the treatment of yellow fever or gunshot wounds as sufficient to control our action. We should look at this question from a common-sense stand-point. Let us inquire is there any reason for this Board of Health? Is there any necessity for making this appropriation? If so, let us make it. If there be no reason for it, then let us refuse to make it.

I have formed my opinion upon this question regardless of jealousies that may exist between physicians, regardless of what they may think of each other. We know from a common-sense stand-point that there is a necessity for a board of this kind, and for an appropriation sufficient to enable the board to prevent the importation and spread of yellow fever and other diseases.

I happened to be in the South during the epidemic of 1878. The great trouble then with us was this: every State had its own plan, every county had its own plan, every city and municipality had its own plan, and the result was we had no effective plan of any kind.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. This does not change it. The board is only authorized to co-operate with the local authorities.

Mr. LYNCH. As to that, I will say we have had too much of locality in this question. I want it nationalized. I am not a strict constructionist, and do not believe in local authority in such matters. I believe in national authority to control and prevent yellow fever.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The law only authorizes the Board of Health to co-operate with the local authorities. They are still supreme.

Mr. LYNCH. That is the only objection I have to your bill. It does not go far enough, although it gives them the money to do what is necessary to be done.

But, as I was remarking, when the epidemic was upon us in 1878 we suffered very serious inconvenience in consequence of the States, the counties, the municipalities, all claiming supreme authority to act in the matter of preventing yellow fever. Sometimes a little town of three hundred or four hundred people would hear of a case that somebody reported to be yellow fever; and then a quarantine would be established. They would have their officers, with their badges on, receiving their authority from the mayor and the board of aldermen of the little town; in that way a great deal of inconvenience was caused. I hope, Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendments will be concurred in.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. PEELLE.]

Mr. PEELLE. I desire simply to call the attention of the House to a paragraph on page 11 of this bill. It is as follows:

For constructing a marine hospital at Baltimore, Maryland, $100,000.

That paragraph was in the bill when it passed the House, and it has been agreed to by the Senate. Perhaps it may somewhat explain the resolutions from the board of trade in the city of Baltimore which the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] had read, and we might reasonably conclude that the city of Baltimore would rather have a marine hospital at a cost of $100,000 than to have provision made for a National Board of Health.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now yield four minutes to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. LORD.]

Mr. LORD. Sincerely hoping, as I do, that the amendments of the Senate now under consideration will be concurred in, I cannot allow the occasion to pass without expressing my dissent from the position taken by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH.] He expressed the opinion that we could very well do without this National Board of Health, with no great detriment to the public service. And that sentiment was strongly re-echoed and still more emphatically enforced by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.] I believe that we need a national board of health.

In all our little incorporated villages, in all our cities, small or large, and in nearly all our States we have boards of health; but they are in a great measure simply auxiliary organizations to the national board. To a very considerable extent they receive their instructions, at least suggestions, derive inspiration in fact, from the National Board of Health, and are kept in active service by connection with the National Board. I do not believe that you can cut off the head of this organization without paralyzing it in all its parts.

I disagree with the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] who appears to hold the opinion that there is danger to be apprehended that physicians of this country, those constituting the principal officers of this National Board of Health, and their assistants and correspondents in the different States and cities and towns, may become engaged in an effort to spread abroad alarm and to create a panic concerning imaginary incoming diseases. I would as soon expect that General Sherman and General Sheridan would undertake to create a false alarm concerning hostile armies about to invade this country as to entertain a suspicion that the physicians of this country in official public service would in any manner endeavor to create needless apprehension merely for their own notoriety or for their unjust advantage.

It has been said in this debate by several gentlemen, I believe by the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. HISCOCK,] certainly it has been urgently enforced by the other gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] that this is a mere matter involving the payment of salaries and has nothing to do with the public health. It seems to me that that is a very illogical statement to make, quite as illogical and absurd as it would be to say that the appropriations made by Congress for legislative purposes are simply to pay the salaries of members of this House and of Senators at the other end of the Capitol. It is just as absurd as it would be to say that our officers of the Army and of the Navy are simply representatives of an organization to secure appropriations for the payment of salaries to themselves.

These physicians stand picket-guard in the country against the terrible diseases of yellow fever, cholera, small-pox, scarlet fever, and diphtheria, a fearful and fatal alliance of foreign and domestic enemies, walking in darkness, from whose attacks greater numbers perish than by shipwreck, war, and famine.

And that reminds me that my large-hearted friend from New York [Mr. COX] has associated his name honorably for some generations to come with the Life-Saving Service. Yet when there is suggested here for his approbation a life-saving service in comparison with which the one his name is identified with sinks into insignificance, he arises in his place and endeavors to obstruct our action and doubts both the skill and the fidelity of those to whom the duty is to be intrusted.

Unless we concur in these amendments of the Senate the resources of this National Board of Health will be so circumscribed and its duties so very much restricted that its services will amount to little in comparison with what it would have the ability to perform if proper provision were made for its reasonable maintenance.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would inquire, Mr. Speaker, how much of my hour has been occupied?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-five minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER.]

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I would like to have the gentleman yield to me for a few minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will be able to give the gentleman from Mississippi a portion of his time.

Mr. TUCKER. I would not engage in this debate except that certain criticisms have been passed upon gentlemen who are members of this National Board of Health. I have a communication at my room which, if I had known this debate was coming up, I would have brought here with me. It is from the president of the National Board of Health, Dr. Cabell, professor of surgery in the University of Virginia. He is a gentleman of whom I can say that he combines not only all the science of his profession but all the integrity that ought to belong to a president of a board charged with the administration of a public trust.

My friend from New York [Mr. COX] has said something about the members of the board being very solicitous about their salaries. What do their salaries amount to? They are $10 a day while engaged in the public service. I have a statement from my friend, Dr. Cabell, that although when at his home he is engaged in correspondence in behalf of this board, which takes up a large amount of his time, yet he never charges his $10 per diem except when in the city of Washington engaged officially as the president of the board.

I think it is unkind on the part of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to reflect upon these gentlemen, whose only connection with this matter was a connection brought about by an act of Congress passed four years ago in the interest of a great life-saving service; a service to which my friend from New York is very much addicted when it is to save the lives of anybody but those living in the South and subject to the ravages of yellow fever.

I would go as far as the gentleman from New York in limiting the functions of this board of health. The act passed four years ago, when our late friend from Georgia, Mr. Hartridge, was here, limited the functions of this board to aiding the local quarantine boards, aiding them where the commercial power of this country trenches upon the quarantine power of the States. The object was to say to the foreign commerce of the country that it should not import disease into the States; that through the operations of this board foreign vessels should be prevented from bringing disease into a State contrary to the local quarantine regulations. I have it from Dr. Cabell that he has carried out strictly the purpose of that bill; that all the National Board of Health has done has been in aid of and upon the suggestion of the local boards of health. Although complaint has been made that in the city of New York the local authorities have been interfered with by this national board, the fact is it has only extended its hand to help them.

This is all I wish to say; and I have said it in justice to those who have been in some degree assailed. I take the liberty of adding to my remarks a statement of Dr. Cabell in a letter addressed to me on this subject a fortnight ago. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. SINGLETON.]

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH,
Washington, D. C., July 20, 1882.

MY DEAR FRIEND: I take occasion to assure you that never in a single instance have either I or the board over which I preside deviated in the least degree from the letter or the spirit of the argument which at my instance you addressed to the American Public Health Association in October, 1878, on the subject of quarantine and health laws generally. We have consistently adhered to the doctrine that we had no authority in these matters except to aid State and municipal health authorities in the execution and enforcement of their rules and regulations to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States, and from one State into another.

In extending this aid it was our duty to be assured that it was necessary as a means of securing the end of the law; next, that the local authorities could not otherwise obtain the means of accomplishing this end; and thirdly, that the amount appropriated should be properly applied—that is to say, we never turned over money to the parties applying for aid, but always required certain work to be done, and then paid for the work by checks drawn in favor of the persons doing the work after carefully auditing their accounts, first at the office and subsequently at the Treasury by the proper officers of that Department.

The most effective and most economical way of protecting the extended coast of the South Atlantic and Gulf shores from the invasion of yellow fever we found to be the establishment of a few refuge stations to which infected vessels could be sent by the local quarantine authorities for proper treatment. We did not claim to have authority to exercise, and did not in fact exercise, any police powers, which is always reserved by local health authorities. They regard our refuge stations as the very salvation of their ports. We have two such stations, at each of which three infected ships were successfully treated and promptly restored to commerce last summer, so promptly that the masters expressed themselves as delighted with the arrangement. Any one of these might have initiated an epidemic over the entire southern country if it had been detained in the anchorage ground of the local quarantines, in close proximity to other shipping temporarily arrested there for inspection. No such additional protection is needed at New York or Boston, because of the large area of anchorage, putting it in the power of the authorities effectually to isolate infected vessels. Indeed our system was modeled on the New York system, and is executed under the orders of the local quarantine authorities and in aid of them.

The singularly erroneous statement was made on the floor of Congress that we interfered with the State quarantines. This is evidently referring to the immigrant-inspection service, which has for its object the prevention of the introduction of small pox into the United States by immigrants arriving from foreign ports infected with that disease. You will be surprised to learn that everything we have done in that direction was done by the suggestion of the health officer of the port of New York, and in conformity with a request made in official form by a resolution unanimously adopted by the State board of health of New York. Soon thereafter a similar demand for aid was made by the health authorities of Michigan, Illinois, and Iowa, and concurred in by the municipal health officers of Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Boston. The law of June 2, 1879, made it our duty to render aid under such circumstances as far as we lawfully may. We should have been derelict of our duty if we had refused the solicited aid. New York said, "We do not ask aid for our own protection, but we do ask that the General Government should assist us to prevent the transmission of small-pox through our State into the Western States." Many thousands of foreign immigrants pass daily through New York for the West. The burden of stopping them for the benefit of other States ought not to fall exclusively upon the State through which the immigrants are conveyed by rapid railroad transit.

Is it not peculiarly hard that we should be censured by New York Representatives for rendering solicited aid to the regularly constituted health authorities of their State? It was alleged that I only came to Washington to draw my salary. I have no salary ex nomine; I am allowed a per diem of $10 when in the actual discharge of my duties under the law. Another gentleman seemed to charge that I was but seldom in Washington. His charge is based on the assumption that the president of the board is its chief executive officer. In point of fact the secretary is especially charged with these duties, and this is the usual plan of all the State boards of health. The law of July 3, 1879, recognizes this arrangement by providing a special salary for the secretary, while I, in common with other members, receive only a per diem when actually discharging my duties. As president I am ex officio chairman of the executive committee, and whenever a meeting of that committee is necessary I go to Washington. I add that I do a great deal more work, perhaps nine-tenths of the whole, at home than I do in Washington. All the communications received at the office are transmitted to me for examination and consideration. I make an abstract of each and conduct a very large correspondence, occupying several hours, sometimes four or five, each day. I have never charged nor received one dollar for any of this laborious work done at home, nor have I raised the question of my being entitled to some compensation for it.

The statement was made that we had spent all the money appropriated and had come forward with a deficiency bill of between three and four hundred thousand dollars. In point of fact we have over $140,000 to our credit on the books of the Treasury, but the proviso inserted in the bill (sundry civil) prohibits our using it.

I am, with high respect and sincere regard, very truly, yours,

J. L. CABELL.

Hon. J. RANDOLPH TUCKER.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. It seems to me there are two grand considerations which ought to move this House to concur in the amendments of the Senate. One is humanity and the other economy. No man who has ever stood in the presence of yellow fever will forget the suffering entailed upon our race by that dreadful scourge. In 1878 it spread all over the Southern country; alarm was everywhere. In order to arrest this scourge and prevent its ravages in the future Congress, as soon as it met, organized what was termed a board of health, which has been in existence from that day to the present. We have made appropriations each year for the purpose of keeping it in existence; and we have not had yellow fever since that board was organized. Before that time there was no concert of action between the State boards of health; and when the disease broke out confusion prevailed everywhere. But since that time health has been guaranteed to the people of the South. We believe that if this board be continued in existence and permitted to take control of this matter we can still be protected from this scourge.

Then again upon the question of economy. Why, sir, it will be remembered that when we in the South were in the midst of our trouble from this disease you heard our piteous cries and came to our assistance. Magnanimously the whole people of the North responded to the call. Hundreds of thousands, I might say millions, of dollars were sent down there to relieve the distress. Heads of families were carried off; children were in a state of orphanage, and must have been without help if the people of the North had not generously extended it. We glory in that magnanimity and kindness. We wish to avoid the necessity for such assistance in the future.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] was on the floor making his burning appeal to the House not to strike down this service and arraigning the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] for his parsimony when human life was at stake, I would have been glad if the gentleman from Texas had told us what are the powers of this board of health. When he insisted that the amendments under consideration are not for salaries, I would have been delighted if he had pointed out in the act creating the board any power which it has to expend this money otherwise than for salaries. I respond to his remarks on this subject by saying that whenever there is a bill here to provide for another officer, patriotic appeals are made that the health of the community or some other great object is to be conserved by it.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman whether he does not know that the law provides for a quarantine station at Ship Island, for one on the southern coast of Mississippi, and for one at Sapelo Sound?

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I know and the gentleman from Texas knows that with the exception of the law allowing temporary quarantine stations to be erected under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, this board of health has no power other than to investigate. It has no power to put vessels in quarantine, no power to retain a person in quarantine, no power even of inspection—no power except to investigate and to aid the local boards of health. This is the whole warrant of its authority.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will allow me to ask him a question—

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. Under what authority did they build a quarantine station and conduct the investigation to prevent the disease coming into this country?

Mr. HISCOCK. When we passed the law here in the Forty-fifth or Forty-sixth Congress, I believe—

Mr. MANNING. It was in 1879.

Mr. HISCOCK. We gave them the power, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to build temporary quarantine stations, and the intention was to destroy those quarantine stations as soon as the scourge had passed by. They were to be burned and destroyed, together with the germs of the disease. If they have preserved one of those quarantine stations they have violated the theory of the law, and they have violated what was believed and what is still believed to be a wise sanitary regulation.

Mr. REAGAN. All authority, medical and otherwise, agree as between permanent hospitals and temporary hospitals. Temporary hospitals are best adapted to deal with the yellow fever.

Mr. HISCOCK. But it was not in that sense at all. The theory of the law was that these quarantine stations should be of a temporary character; that they should be built for temporary purposes. The law will show it. It was designed when the necessity for their existence passed by they should be destroyed. It was not intended the establishments should be of a permanent character, but that they should be temporary, and when the scourge was over should be destroyed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say after deliberation, after full investigation, that of the money which is provided in this bill not one single dollar of it can be expended except for personal service, and that personal service in the way of fees and salaries to employés.

Mr. REAGAN. Let me say to the gentleman from New York that the Senator at the head of the committee which reported on this subject stated day before yesterday that $14,000 was spent in conducting the hospital at Ship Island last year and that the same amount is required for the present year.

Mr. HISCOCK. I repeat that no report has been made to this Congress—that this board of health never dared to report to Congress it was maintaining a hospital establishment in the United States.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not insist on that and nobody else does. It is to meet an emergency for this season.

Mr. HISCOCK. The only power they have is the power of investigation and aiding State and local boards of health. They are to investigate and report in reference to this disease. This board was appointed in the interest, if you please, of medical science, and was to aid State and local boards of health, furnishing them with whatever knowledge and information it possessed on the subject. The power to expend money on quarantine regulations or in enforcing any quarantine regulations never was granted to the National Board of Health.

Mr. SINGLETON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. If my time is not to be all taken up by these questions I will yield.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I see appropriations are to be made for salaries and expenses of the National Board of Health.

Mr. HISCOCK. I anticipate the gentleman's question, and as I am pressed for time I will proceed to answer it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. But let me finish my question. There is here an amendment as to the quarantine. Now, does not that carry with it the power to use the necessary means for keeping up that quarantine?

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman tell us how with that $15,000 you can build a quarantine station?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. That is not necessary.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman tell us you can do anything else but organize the staff of officers?

Mr. REAGAN. They are already organized.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will he tell us in that simple phrase is couched the power to impose quarantine regulations and to enforce them? Will the gentleman tell us that there is concealed within that language any such power? We must look back to the law itself for the power of the National Board of Health, and when we look back—I do not wish to repeat it to gentlemen, but I wish the House to take notice of it—we find that the whole power of the National Board of Health is to investigate, excepting under the language of one act they are clothed with the power, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to erect temporary hospitals for the prevention of yellow fever.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask my friend from New York whether it is not true that while the act provided temporary stations should be built, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, that contracts were made for all these quarantine stations without the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. HISCOCK. That is true, and I am obliged to the gentleman for recalling the fact. Gentlemen advertised here to be so high-toned in defense of their profession, limited in the execution of the law to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, yet went on and constructed these temporary quarantine stations without regard to his approval, and the Committee on Appropriations, of which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] was an honored member at that time, were compelled to condone what was done and furnish the money to pay for those buildings in order to save from injury innocent parties.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this cannot be used or a dollar of it employed except for the payment of salaries?

Mr. HISCOCK. I say that they have no power under the law which creates them to use the money except for investigation, and that means simply the employment of men and the paying them salaries.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. If the gentleman will look at the last four amendments he will find that provision is expressly made for other purposes.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Mississippi says that several items in this bill provide that the money appropriated may be expended otherwise than for salaries. It does provide money to maintain these establishments here in the city of Washington, and that is what they point at and have in view. We are to have these skeletons of organizations that are ramified everywhere to make suggestions in connection with the subject. Why, sixty days ago they began to lobby for it, and agents for it everywhere, from Mississippi, from Missouri, from Michigan, were appointed without any authority of law, by the force and power of patronage, to work and lobby to secure the passage of such a scheme. And I call the attention of the gentleman to it that all the patronage of this great and patriotic object was called into requisition for the purpose of carrying it through the House. Why Illinois—and I am surprised that my friend from Illinois supports the bill when he knows the fact—in Illinois the same power of patronage was invoked to carry it through the House.

Mr. ALDRICH. The gentleman is mistaken. He knows nothing of Illinois; he was never there. [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Sixty days ago agents were appointed—and I wish my friend from Michigan [Mr. HERR] were here, who would be able to say something upon the subject of lobbying against the spread of these diseases, particularly at one place on Michigan Lake for the purpose of keeping off the small-pox. He inquired (when he received the communications) of his colleague at the other end of the Capitol, [Mr. CONGER,] who had formerly represented the district, and he told him that he never heard of a case of small-pox coming across there from Canada in all his experience; yet there was appointed for that purpose men whose simple duty it was to influence the legislation of this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no man who will go further than I in keeping off this scourge of yellow fever or other epidemics from our shores. But I appeal to gentlemen upon the other side not to seek to increase such an appropriation. I appeal to them that it is never necessary, for purposes of taking care of their constituencies—and do not wonder if I seem to reflect somewhat upon your motives—when ever there is a question of this kind raised which in any way involves your locality, that you should ask for the largest possible appropriations that can be made, and that you should seek the creation of officers without limit as to their compensation and salaries. Do not appeal for it. I say to you it is unjust to that magnanimous North of whom the gentleman from Mississippi has spoken so eloquently.

Representing, Mr. Speaker, as I do in part a State that when the distressed appealed for aid has always opened its hands to feed and support them; representing a State whose charity is boundless, I would not, sir, dare to stand here to question proper and legitimate methods to keep disease from among you more than I would do a dishonorable act. But representing such a people as that, for the sake of paltry patronage, for the sake of creating offices or appointees for somebody, I will not say for the gentleman from Texas, but for the purpose of giving employment to another army of officeholders to fasten itself upon the public Treasury, I will not vote for a measure like this, or vote for its provisions in detail even though that vote is invoked in the sacred name of humanity, for that invocation is a false one and a lie.

The remainder of my time I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the House of the following titles; in which amendments concurrence was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 2997) granting the right of way to the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company across the Niobrara military reservation, in the State of Nebraska, and authorizing the sale of a portion of said reservation;

A bill (H. R. No. 4594) authorizing full pay to Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, United States Army, while on leave to serve in command of the Franklin search expedition in the Arctic;

A bill (H. R. No. 6743) to establish diplomatic relations with Persia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3414) granting a pension to Sarah J. Cameron;
A bill (H. R. No. 4888) increasing the pension of John F. Ellis;
A bill (H. R. No. 5224) to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion; and
A bill (H. R. No. 6249) granting an increase of pension to Joseph F. Wilson.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the Senate amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. ROBESON. How much time is left on the pending amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. ROBESON. I yield five minutes to my friend from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.]

Mr. CANNON. I think I will not occupy the whole five minutes. Mr. Speaker, I want to be heard in the little time I do take.

I say that the men who prepared this bill are about as much against the introduction of yellow fever and small-pox into this country as anybody else, and I presume they would vote just as much money to suppress, to control, or to prevent such disease as anybody else. But that is not the question that is now presented for our consideration.

If you take this bill and turn to pages 38, 39, and 40 you will find the Senate amendments increasing the organization of this National Board of Health, merely providing more officers and more salaries, but not more efficiency. Then, when you turn to line 953, you will find that the bill gives the President of the United States $100,000, to be used in case of a threatened or actual epidemic. That is independent of the National Board of Health. It has nothing to do with the National Board of Health. The President may use that board or he may use that other effective organization, the Marine-Hospital Service, which ramifies throughout the country, which has a single head, a good executive; which has its organization reaching throughout the country, so that you can in a single hour through it effectively reach every part of the country.

There is the organization, there is the $100,000 that can be used through that organization recommended by this committee and carried in this bill. Gentlemen say, Why not run the National Board of Health also? For the reasons given by the gentleman from New York. It is not effective. It consists of fifteen people scattered throughout the entire country. You never did have a board of fifteen people that was an effective board. Even if it had the power that a single executive would have, or that the Marine-Hospital Service would have, if you please, it would not be effective; and even if it would be effective it has not the power under the law to lay a strong hand upon disease.

And I say—not to abuse this national board, not to abuse anybody—but I do say it has been exercising what power it does have in the appointment of inspectors throughout the length and breadth of this country. It has been appointing them within the last few months, some of them in the West at $10 a day and expenses, and others at five and six dollars a day and expenses. And my belief and understanding is that the chief duty of those inspectors in the last thirty days has been to get editorials inserted in the papers of the country and scattered throughout the country, and to write letters to members of Congress and to create a pressure throughout the country and here in favor of this same national board which gives them employment.

If this organization can now reach out in that way, feeble as it is, what will it do if you feed it upon these fat appropriations for a year to come? It will be another organization, the second one in the country, that can lay its hands upon Congress and say there is a third power in the country whose assent must be given before you can legislate whenever its interests are involved.

Mr. ANDERSON. Do you refer to railroads?

Mr. CANNON. No, sir.

Mr. ROBESON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT.]

Mr. BLOUNT. This matter of the board of health is not a new one. As has already been stated by the gentleman from New York, shortly after its creation, by its improper administration of the duties devolved upon it by Congress it created antagonisms in this House and in Congress against it. There had been a liberal spirit throughout the country in sympathy with the southern section of the country in the matter of its invasion by yellow fever and cholera. And it is for this reason, as a representative of that section, I feel it my duty to bespeak for it that its influence shall be contributed to a distinct and honorable recognition of that sentiment.

The law provided an appropriation of $500,000, and at the expiration of four years that was to cease. In one of the acts there was a provision that the board of health might use this temporary fund for the purpose of erecting quarantine stations in the event of an epidemic, when an application had been made to the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by him. It was not intended that this great organization should be brought into active life year by year. It was intended to meet an emergency. The appropriation was not annual. It was $500,000 to be used within four years, and at the expiration of that period its powers were to cease.

Instantly upon getting possession of this fund, in the month of July, the beginning of the fiscal year, contracts were made, without one word to the Secretary of the Treasury, for quarantine stations of a permanent character along the Gulf coast and at many points on the Atlantic coast and on the Mississippi. When we reached here in December, only a few months afterward, the president of the board of health and the secretary, Mr. Turner, presented themselves, asking for a deficiency of three hundred and odd thousand dollars to carry out their contracts—$800,000 in all. But the same sort of thing, reckoning on the humanity of the House of Representatives, has continued from that hour until now. I say it is unjust to the cause, it is unjust to humanity, it is unjust to the South that we should stand here and by our votes vindicate the enormous expenditures we have endeavored to fasten on the country in the shape of a new bureau.

I say, sir, the true plan for us to pursue is to non-concur in the Senate amendments. For one, I should be glad to see any appropriation looking to necessary current expenses, and a sum that might be used in the discretion of the President of the United States.

Mr. ROBESON. Just what we have in this bill. That is just what the House did.

Mr. BLOUNT. If that be so, if there be an appropriation that may be used by the President of the United States in such an emergency, not for the whole country, with reference to all of its diseases, but for small-pox, yellow fever, and cholera, then I say, as a Southern Representative, I accept it as a liberal proposition on the part of the people of this country.

Mr. ROBESON. The public health is a proper object of national legislation. Foreign and domestic commerce, internal intercourse, and the public welfare all unite to enforce those demands. My past official record, as the experience of every man who has served with me will verify, shows that I would not hesitate to vote all that was necessary, were it the last dollar in the Treasury, for this humane and patriotic purpose. But like other good causes, this good cause is likely to be destroyed by the machinery which it is sought to establish for its promotion.

When this bill left the House, under the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations, it provided for everything which was necessary upon this subject for the public welfare. The National Board of Health under the law is authorized to do two things: first, to investigate the causes of and the means of preventing these infectious and contagious diseases; second, to give aid to the local boards and quarantine authorities for the purpose of preventing their extension. We gave to this board, for the purpose of maintaining its organization and paying salaries, the sum of $17,500. And for a time of good public health—I was going to say profound peace on this subject—we gave $25,000 to the board. The paragraph is as follows:

For aid to State and local boards of health and to local quarantine stations in carrying out their rules and regulations to prevent the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases in the United States, $25,000: Provided, That no other public money than that hereby appropriated shall be expended for the purposes of the board of health: And provided further, That hereafter the duties and investigations of the board of health shall be confined to the diseases of cholera, small-pox, and yellow fever.

So much for a time of public health. What else have we done? We have provided for the exigency of existing or threatened epidemic. How have we done it? By making this appropriation:

And the President of the United States is hereby authorized, in case of a threatened or actual epidemic, to use a sum not exceeding $100,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in aid of State and local boards or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same.

The President is to use this amount in his discretion, through the National Board of Health if he deems necessary, through the marine-hospital system if he deems necessary.

We have provided for all that this board is authorized to do in time of good health, and we have provided a fund to be used at the discretion of the President in time of threatened contagion. These provisions have been agreed to by the Senate.

The new provisions of the Senate appropriated $96,000 more for the organization, to enable it to expend $25,000 to which their appropriation is limited by the language of that portion of the bill which is already agreed to by both Houses of Congress.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was upon concurring in the amendments of the Senate numbered 72 to 89, both inclusive, in relation to the National Board of Health.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 43, noes 64.

Mr. MANNING. I call for tellers.

Mr. SIMONTON. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do not make that point.

Mr. MANNING. I hope the gentleman will insist upon the point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMONTON] make the point that no quorum has voted?

Mr. SIMONTON. I do.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. SIMONTON were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 35, noes 79.

So (no further count being called for) the amendments of the Senate were not concurred in.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. PEIRCE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 929) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Saint Joseph, in the State of Missouri;

A bill (H. R. No. 1364) to authorize the auditing of certain unpaid accounts in the Indian Bureau by the accounting officers of the Treasury;

A bill (H. R. No. 5740) for the relief of the heirs of Major D. C. Smith;

A bill (H. R. No. 5841) to provide for deductions from the gross tonnage of vessels of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 6111) donating condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6520) in relation to land-patents in the Virginia military district of Ohio;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 131) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to distribute copies of the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives to public and law libraries; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 288) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution to provide temporarily for expenditures of the Government.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The amendments numbered 90, 91, 93, and 94 were concurred in, and the amendments numbered 92, 95, 96, and 97 were non-concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me that these amendments reducing appropriations should be concurred in.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman will pardon me for one moment I will explain to him in reference to all these items. In looking at these items superficially, without the light which the Senate had, it is suggested to one that the Senate possibly struck down certain appropriations arbitrarily, with a view of obtaining a sum which might be appropriated for other purposes. I know that is probably disrespectful to the Senate, and having made that remark I will withdraw it. [Laughter.] And it is in that view that we propose to non-concur in all of these amendments of the Senate. If we find that I am mistaken in the insinuation or the suggestion which I have made, then certainly we will concur with the Senate in all these reductions.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course, where there is no public interest involved I am not disposed to oppose the action of the committee.

The ninety-eighth amendment was read, and non-concurred in. The amendment numbered 98 $\frac{1}{2}$, to strike out \$20,000 and insert \$10,000 as the appropriation for improvement of reservation No. 17 and site of old canal northwest of same, was read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to non-concur in this amendment. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana, as explaining the policy of the committee, that it seems to us that rather than concur in this amendment the appropriation should be struck out altogether, as $10,000 would in our opinion be totally inadequate for the purpose.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 99 to 103, inclusive, were read, and non-concurred in.

Amendment numbered 104 was read, as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph the following:

"For furniture, carpets, file-cases, and shelving for the north wing of the State, War, and Navy Departments building, $80,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that this amendment be concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope it will not be concurred in.

Mr. HISCOCK. This appropriation is for furnishing the north wing of the State, War, and Navy Departments building, which it is believed will be completed by the 25th of next December. It is absolutely indispensable that this appropriation should be made to the end that the building may be furnished, and that the officers of the Government may occupy it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am only objecting to the amount.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say to the gentleman that the estimate was $100,000 and it has been reduced to $80,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me this appropriation is enormous for such a purpose. I move to amend the Senate amendment by striking out "$80,000" and inserting "$50,000."

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no objection to the Senate amendment being non-concurred in.

Mr. ATKINS. We had better non-concur and let the question be discussed in the conference committee.

Mr. RANDALL. Why should we not express an opinion?

Mr. ATKINS. Very well; if the amendment be amended it still leaves the question open.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate as amended was concurred in.

Amendments numbered 105 to 107, inclusive, were read and non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 108 and 109 were read and concurred in.

Amendment No. 110 was read, as follows:

Strike out the following:
"That all the receipts from private messages sent over the United States military telegraph lines may be expended for the maintenance of said lines; but an account thereof shall be kept and rendered to Congress."

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to non-concur in this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to make a single inquiry. Are these military telegraph lines open without restriction to the use of the public?

Mr. HISCOCK. They are.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 111 to 113, inclusive, were read and non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 114 was read, as follows:

In line 1293, strike out the words "seventy-two" and insert "seventy-three" before the words "superintendents of national cemeteries."

Mr. HISCOCK. I move non-concurrence.

Mr. MCCOOK. I move to concur. There are seventy-three of these superintendents.

Mr. HISCOCK. We think we should find out all about this matter.

Mr. MCCOOK. I have stated what is undoubtedly the fact.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There will be no difficulty if the fact is as the gentleman states.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York withdraw his motion?

Mr. MCCOOK. Yes, sir; upon the assurance that there will be no difficulty about the matter.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments Nos. 115 and 116 were read and non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 117 was read, as follows:

Add to the paragraph appropriating $5,000 for the completion of the roadway from Chattanooga National Cemetery to the city of Chattanooga the following:

"Provided, That none of the money appropriated by this and the preceding paragraph shall be expended unless in each case the amount appropriated shall complete said roadways; and the sum of $2,500 to construct a good road from the corner of the public square in the city of Marietta, Georgia, to the national cemetery, about one mile east of said city, and said amount shall complete the said road."

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to non-concur.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman has looked at this amendment, of course I will not interpose; but it seems to me a very proper provision.

Mr. HISCOCK. As we have non-concurred in amendment 116, it is necessary that the phraseology of this amendment should be changed. I believe myself that with the language properly amended this should go into the bill.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 118, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$1,000," as the appropriation for repair of the road leading from the Aqueduct bridge, Georgetown, District of Columbia, to the Arlington National Cemetery, was read.

Mr. MCCOOK. What is the object of reducing this appropriation?

Mr. HISCOCK. I move non-concurrence.

Mr. RANDALL. Is there any reason why we should not concur?

Mr. HISCOCK. We should, in my judgment, either strike out the appropriation or leave the amount $5,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania make any motion?

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; but I do not know what we have to do with keeping up this road.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 119 and 120 were read and non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 121 to 125 were read and concurred in.

Amendments numbered 126 and 127 were read and non-concurred in.

Amendment numbered 128 was read and concurred in.

Amendment No. 129 was non-concurred in.

Amendments No. 130, 131, 132, and 133 were concurred in.

Amendment No. 134 was non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 135 was read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 1585, the word "repealed" and insert "revived and continued in force."

Mr. DAWES. I move to concur in that amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore decided that by the sound the motion to concur was not agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I demand a division.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will state, Mr. Speaker, precisely what this is, since a division of the House has been called for, so that members may be apprised of the facts of the case.

Under the Revised Statutes of the United States it was provided substantially that the back pay and pensions of soldiers in these soldiers' homes should belong to the homes, or at least that that might be enforced on the part of the Government under certain circumstances. It never was enforced, however, at all. A custom grew up in the homes for the purpose of enforcing order and the regulations of the homes of fining soldiers for disobedience of the regulations. Rules and regulations were made as of necessity in governing the inmates of the homes, and the board of managers had the power to fine offenders and deduct those fines from the back pay and pensions of the soldiers, which penalties, as I have shown, were imposed with a view to enforcing the discipline and order necessary to be preserved in these establishments.

I think it was in 1879, or possibly in 1880, that that provision of law was repealed, and the power to punish by fines the inmates of homes for disobedience of orders, for breach of discipline, or for any sort of irregularity was forbidden. The managers of the homes now ask that that power shall be restored, that it shall be relegated back to them. They say that without any power to punish it is a gigantic work to maintain discipline in the homes, and therefore ask that the provisions of the Revised Statutes be restored, and that the law of 1879 or 1880, as the case may be, be repealed so they may have this power of enforcing discipline by fining for disobedience of the regulations and orders governing them.

I think I have stated the matter fairly and clearly to the House.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, my information is that there is no trouble whatever in enforcing discipline in the homes without pursuing the policy of taking the soldiers' pensions away under the color of fine or penalty. I do not think the boards of managers of these homes ought to have that power or authority. I do not believe it is necessary for the maintenance of discipline in the homes that they should have it; and a protest from all the crippled soldiers in all of the homes against this legislation has come in various ways before Congress.

The honorable gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. DEUSTER] can speak with reference to the home at Milwaukee, and my distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. SHULTZ] can give information with reference to the condition of affairs at Dayton. It does not require this provision of the law to allow the managers of the homes to maintain discipline. There are plenty of ways to restrain, to punish, and to keep the homes in order without taking the pension-money away from these crippled soldiers. The motion I make to concur in the Senate amendment simply leaves the matter as it is now. As it is, the law gives the managers of the homes the power to enforce order, and there is no necessity for any such provision as this.

Mr. HISCOCK. The communications and the fact that the gentleman from Ohio refers to, certainly come from the very people among whom it is desired to maintain discipline. I have on the other hand the information which I give to the House from the managers or the governing power there, who were appointed by Congress, appointed by this House.

Now I desire, as I have said before, simply to allow the managers of these homes to perform what they regard to be proper functions with reference to governing them. I have no feeling on the subject, and I suppose it is perfectly proper that both sides of the House should have a hearing in order that the House may know all about the question.

In 1879 or 1880 the gentleman from Ohio, who then represented the Dayton district, and who was upon the other side of the House and a member of the Appropriations Committee, struck down this wise provision of the law for the purpose—no, I will not say that; I will not say it was his purpose; people were ungenerous enough to insinuate that it was his purpose—to secure the votes of the soldiers at these homes. That I say was simply an insinuation. It was insinuated that it was a piece of petty demagogism, the true inwardness of which had in view the control of the votes of these homes. At all events the provision was stricken down. Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe with the managers of the soldiers' homes, that this provision ought to be restored. I am the last man in the world to insinuate or suggest, for I do not believe it, that the position taken in reference to this question on the part of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. DEUSTER] comes from any desire to make capital with the inmates of the soldiers' homes, or that the distinguished gentleman who represents the Dayton district has any such motive, for I do not believe anything of the kind.

But whatever amount of politics there may be in it, I say to the House if there is any politics in it, and I do not believe there is, I ask the House to shut its eyes to that and dispose of the question as it ought legally and justly and properly to be disposed of, regardless of political considerations. I call the previous question.

Mr. DAWES addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York calls the previous question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio two minutes.

Mr. DAWES. I want to say that the honorable gentleman who represented the Dayton district before had some excellencies if he was a Democrat; and one of the good works he did was to secure the enactment of this law, while the gentleman who defeated him got the soldiers' votes because he was a Republican—I mean my honorable colleague, Mr. SHULTZ. I wish to say also this recommendation does come from the managers of the soldiers' homes, and coupled with that other proposition, which was unanimously voted down in this House, to take away every dollar of the pensions of the soldiers at the homes except $5 a month; and one of the managers in communicating that recommendation to the Committee on Appropriations said it would "raise a howl and create a stampede from the homes." This is a recommendation coupled with that.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would say just one word in reply to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio. I almost feared that this House would, upon the appeal of gentlemen that there was politics in it, strike out the wise provision in this bill to turn over the pensions to the homes for the support of the soldiers.

Mr. DAWES. What gentleman made that appeal?

Mr. HISCOCK. Let not the gentleman from Ohio say to me that the managers of the soldiers' homes in the recommendation they made in favor of that proposition did an unwise or an improper act; because I must reply to him that those very men that made that recommendation the House by this very bill has continued in place, and that gentleman raised no voice against it. Now I call the previous question.

Mr. DAWES. I think the gentleman ought to allow me one word. He charges me with wanting to censure those gentlemen. I have no such disposition. I only quoted their official records, and I believe they are wrong in the policy they recommend, and I dislike the language in which their recommendation was made.

Mr. HISCOCK. I insist on the call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on concurrence in the amendment of the Senate.

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. DEUSTER. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 39.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I call for tellers.

On the question of ordering tellers there were ayes 18.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not a sufficient number.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Count the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There can be no necessity for counting the other side when one-fifth of a quorum is required and one-fifth have not risen in their places.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I want to ascertain whether there is a quorum in the House. A quorum did not vote on the question of concurrence.

Mr. KENNA. The gentleman did not make that point in time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ayes have it, and the amendment is concurred in.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Unless the Chair intends to decide so quickly as to rob me of the right I have under the rule, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. KENNA. On which side did the gentleman vote?

Mr. BLACKBURN. There being no record the gentleman has not the right to ask on which side I voted.

Mr. KENNA. I asked the question on which side he voted to ascertain whether he made the motion to reconsider in the manner prescribed by the rules.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman from West Virginia speaks of what he does not and cannot know anything about, for there was no record of the vote.

Mr. KENNA. I think I had a right to ask if the gentleman voted with the prevailing side.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman has no right to ask that question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. DEUSTER. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let me say just one word. I understand there is one gentleman on this side of the House, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHULTZ,] who is affected by this matter, and one gentleman on the other side, the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. DEUSTER,] who is affected by it. It is an even thing.

Mr. MCCOOK. I think it was scarcely fair for the gentleman from New York, my colleague, to make that remark, as there are many who are not influenced by any such considerations in voting upon this question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw the remark.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 327) for the relief of John W. Humphrey;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 274) to continue the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government";

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 270) for the relief of Sarah J. S. Garnet, widow of Harry H. Garnet, late minister to Liberia;

An act (H. R. No. 4443) to amend sections 3 and 4 of the act of February 21, 1879, to fix the pay of letter-carriers, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 6722) to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 220) to furnish the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each State and Territorial library;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 269) providing for additional copies of the Revised Statutes for the use of the Interior Department;

An act (H. R. No. 6677) to regulate immigration;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 122) requiring the Public Printer to publish certain decisions of the First Comptroller of the Treasury Department;

An act (H. R. No. 209) to authorize the President of the United States to call an international conference to fix on and recommend for universal adoption a common prime meridian to be used in the reckoning of longitude and in the regulation of time throughout the world;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to deliver to the One Hundred and Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry Association the blue regimental flag which belonged to said regiment and which is now in the custody of the Secretary of War;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan tents to the Washington Light Infantry Corps; and

An act (H. R. No. 4460) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for the United States district court, post-office, and other Government offices at the city of Williamsport, Pennsylvania.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the Senate amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Amendment number 136 was to insert under the head of "Mississippi River commission," after the words "for salaries," the words "at the rate of $5,000 each for three civilian members."

Mr. HISCOCK. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to concur in the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the amendment increase the present rate of compensation?

Mr. HISCOCK. My understanding is that it increases it from $3,000 to $5,000, and I think it had better be left to the committee of conference.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to say, in behalf of my motion to concur in the Senate amendment just read, that the engineers who compose this Mississippi River commission comprise the best talent of this country, and are giving their whole time to this great work. Considering the immense amount of money which has been placed in their hands to be expended for the improvement of the Mississippi River, the compensation of $5,000 a year is low enough, as any intelligent man who will think of the subject for a moment must conclude. Heretofore their compensation has been either $3,000 or $3,500 a year, I am not certain which. From all over the Mississippi Valley word has come to me, in my capacity as chairman of the committee for the improvement of the Mississippi River, that the compensation allowed to the members of this commission was insufficient; that they ought certainly to be paid a reasonable salary. And as I said before, no one can say that $5,000 a year for each of these able engineers is too much or exorbitant.

I hope, therefore, that the House will concur in this amendment of the Senate, and give these men engaged in this great work a proper and legitimate compensation.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment of the Senate was not concurred in.

Amendments numbered 137, 138, and 139 were not concurred in.

Amendment numbered 140 was to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$150,000" in the paragraph "for navy-yards and stations."

Mr. HISCOCK. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Ought not that amendment to be concurred in?

Mr. HISCOCK. If gentlemen will look through the entire clause they will see that the amount carried by the clause as it left the House is not decreased by the amendments of the Senate, but distributed in a different way.

Mr. HOLMAN. That may be so, but it seems to me that the Senate amendments leave it in a better form; it appropriates $50,000 for the care and preservation of such yards or stations as may be closed under authority of law. As the clause stood when it left the House no portion of the money might be used for the simple purpose of taking care of the yards.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman will look at the clause he will discover that the amendments of the Senate are in the line of the position taken by the Senate in its struggle with the House over the naval appropriation bill. As the clause left the House it appropriated $200,000 for navy-yards and stations; "$50,000 of which may be used in the care and preservation of such yards or stations as the Secretary of the Navy may deem expedient to close." The amendments of the Senate simply change the clause as it left the House by directing that $50,000 "shall be used only in the care and preservation of such yards or stations as may be closed under authority of law." That is all the change made by the Senate amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not insist upon any vote; but it seems to me that taking the three amendments of the Senate together they are perfectly in harmony with the principles of this bill as it left the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not press the matter.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] this question: If the yards are to be closed, is not $150,000 sufficient for taking care of those which are closed and for expenditures in the yards not closed?

Mr. HISCOCK. The only change which the Senate amendments make in this provision of the House bill is to appropriate $150,000 for navy-yards and stations, and then to appropriate $50,000 in addition for the care and preservation of such yards as may be closed under authority of law. The House bill appropriated $200,000 and directed that $50,000 of that sum should be used for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. I expect the gentleman will finally yield to the Senate, for their amendments are perfectly in harmony with this bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think the amendments had better be non-concurred in.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the gentleman from New York is mistaken in regard to the effect of the Senate amendments. According to the provision in the House bill the Secretary of the Navy might close any of the navy-yards; according to the Senate amendments no navy-yard can be closed except by authority of law.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman had listened attentively to me he would have understood me to state that the difference between the provision in the House bill and the Senate amendments, up to the one hundred and forty-second amendment—

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, the one hundred and forty-second amendment is a part of the amendments of the Senate to this clause.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, no.

Mr. SPRINGER. The whole paragraph must be taken together.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is perfectly clear that the one hundred and fortieth and one hundred and forty-first amendments make just this change in the House provision: the provision as it left the House appropriated $200,000 for the care of navy-yards and stations, and then provided that $50,000 of that sum might be taken for the purpose of caring for such yards as might be closed. The Senate amendments provide for appropriating $150,000 for navy-yards and stations, and $50,000 in addition to that sum for the purpose of taking care of such yards and stations as may be closed. There is no difference except a change of phraseology.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no difference in the amount either way.

Mr. HISCOCK. Nor in the intent or purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. But if all the yards except three are to be closed a less sum than $200,000 might be enough.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 141 to 144, inclusive, were read and non-concurred in.

The one hundred and forty-fifth amendment was read, as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph the following:
"For establishing and completing a coaling-dock and naval storehouse at Port Royal Harbor, South Carolina, $30,000, the site for said coaling-dock and naval storehouse to be located by a board of naval officers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy for that purpose."

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to non-concur.

Mr. SMALLS. I move concurrence in this amendment. It is in accordance with the recommendations of the Navy Department in this and preceding Congresses. Port Royal is a point at which a coaling station is very much needed, and the establishment of such a station there will be a matter of economy as well as convenience to the Government, as its vessels can frequently receive valuable assistance there and great loss be avoided. I hope the House will concur.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 146 to 149, inclusive, were read and non-concurred in.

Amendment numbered 150 was read, as follows.

Insert as a new paragraph the following:
"For repairing bridge over College Creek, on the Government farm at Annapolis, Maryland, to be expended under the supervision of the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, $3,000."

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to non-concur.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I move that the House concur in this amendment for the simple reason that we have this session passed a law transferring this bridge to the county authorities, with a proviso that the United States, before the transfer, shall put the bridge in good order. The sum named in this appropriation is the amount which the Superintendent of the Naval Academy and the Secretary of the Navy have determined would be sufficient for the purpose. In order to carry out the law already passed, I move that the amendment be concurred in.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 151 and 152 were read and non-concurred in.

Amendment 153 was read, as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph the following:
"To defray the expenses of removing and transporting to the United States from their present place of burial the remains of Lieutenant-Commander George W. De Long, United States Navy, and his companions, eleven in all, and for their proper burial within the United States, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under direction of the Secretary of the Navy."

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to non-concur.

Mr. MCCOOK. I move to concur.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 154 and 155 were read and non-concurred in.

Amendment numbered 156 was read and concurred in.

Amendments numbered 157 to 162, inclusive, were read and non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 163 to 165, inclusive, were read and concurred in.

Amendment numbered 166 was read and non-concurred in.

Amendment numbered 167 was read and concurred in.

Amendment numbered 168 was read, as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph the following:

"The Secretary of the Interior shall investigate and report to Congress what in his opinion would be an equitable settlement of all matters of dispute between the Eastern band of Cherokee Indians (including all the Cherokees residing east of the Mississippi River) and the Cherokee tribe or nation west; also all matters of dispute between other bands or parts of the Cherokee Nation; also all matters between any of said bands, or parts thereof and the United States arising from or growing out of treaty stipulations or the laws of Congress relating thereto; and what sum or sums of money, if any, should in his opinion be paid under such settlement; and the sum of $2,500 is hereby appropriated for such investigation."

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that this amendment be concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope it will not be concurred in. It seems to me this is a matter in which there is no reason for the Government to interfere. This is a controversy between a portion of the Cherokee Indians residing in the Indian Territory and a portion residing in North Carolina. I think the question ought to be left just where it is.

The amendment was concurred in, there being ayes 43, noes 14.

Amendment numbered 169 was read, as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph the following:

"For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay expenses of the delegates representing the eastern band of Cherokee Indians while in the city of Washington, during the months of May, June, and July, 1882, including traveling expenses in coming to and returning home from said city, $600, to be paid out of any funds belonging to said tribe."

Mr. HISCOCK. I move non-concurrence.

Mr. ATKINS. Should not this amendment be concurred in?

Mr. HISCOCK. I think there is a mistake. We should not concur.

Mr. VANCE. The amendment should be concurred in, as I understand.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the question will go to the conference committee. The Committee on Appropriations this morning agreed to recommend concurrence; but on looking at the matter since, I prefer it should go to the conference committee.

Mr. ATKINS. Why does the gentleman prefer it?

Mr. RYAN. I will state one reason why it should go to the conference committee. I am advised that the amendment as printed here does not correctly represent the action of the Senate. There is a mistake. The question ought to go to the committee of conference.

Mr. VANCE. I think the gentleman is probably correct. The amount ought not to be charged to the Eastern or North Carolina Cherokees, because if so charged it would be taken out of the school fund. The appropriation ought to be made without being charged to the school fund of the North Carolina Cherokees.

Mr. RYAN. There will be no difficulty about fixing it in the conference committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to suggest that if this should be amended in conference to take the money out of the public Treasury it would be a complete violation of the rules governing committees of conference.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask unanimous consent that the order of the House providing for a recess to-day and an evening session be dispensed with. If this be not done the hour for the recess may arrive before the consideration of these amendments is finished.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the order requested by the gentleman from New Jersey will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Amendments numbered 170, 171, 172, and 173 were read and non-concurred in.

One hundred and seventy-fourth amendment:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the amount found due R. H. Taylor, June 9, 1869, for herding cattle, the sum of $331.97, appropriated by the act of July 15, 1870, is hereby reappropriated and made available for this purpose.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that amendment be non-concurred in.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope not, as it is a matter which has been ascertained and adjusted at the Department.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman from Texas knows it is all right I shall not object to concurrence.

Mr. REAGAN. It is all right.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas whether it is an audited claim?

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know whether in the technical sense it is an audited claim, but I do know that it is a claim which is ascertained and meets with the approval of the Department.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think, under the circumstances, it is better to non-concur, and let it go to a committee of conference.

Mr. REAGAN. It is all right, and ought to be concurred in.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman knows it is all right, then I do not object.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment numbered 175 was read and concurred in, and amendment 176 non-concurred in.

One hundred and seventy-seventh amendment:

After the words "geological map," strike out the words "of the national domain;" so it will read:

"For the United States Geological Survey: For the Geological Survey, and the classification of the public lands, and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain, and to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $222,000; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to organize the force for which this appropriation is to be expended, and to fix the salaries and compensation to be paid to the members thereof, and to make his estimate for the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1884, in detail, in reference to the force to be employed, with its grades, and compensation to the respective grades, and specifying the branches of work in which it should be employed and the amount to be expended on each branch."

Mr. HISCOCK. I move the House non-concur in that amendment.

Mr. KENNA. I move the House concur.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will take the floor for an hour for the purpose of distributing the time.

Mr. KENNA. The whole matter was discussed before, and we do not want to discuss it any further unless gentlemen who are opposed to concurrence desire to do so.

Mr. ROBESON. The whole matter was not discussed. This provision of the Senate changes the paragraph of the House materially. The provision of the House confined the geological map to the national domain, while the Senate, by striking out the words "of the national domain," throws open the whole boundless continent to it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let the amendment be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment of the Senate is to strike out the words "of the national domain" in the paragraph as it went from the House.

Mr. KENNA. I wish to correct the gentleman from New Jersey. By concurrence in the amendment of the Senate we leave it as it was offered originally in the House. But, sir, the whole matter has been discussed and every member thoroughly understands it. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to call the attention of the House to one single point before the vote is taken. The amendment of the Senate proposes to strike out the words "of the national domain." The clause itself to which the amendment is proposed is to continue the appropriation for a geological map of the United States to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, &c. The question here is whether this amendment authorizes the survey in the States of private property. I ask for order as well as for the attention of the House on this point. The question is whether the amendment of the Senate authorizes the survey of territory which does not belong to the United States simply because it provides for the making of a map of the United States.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, from the highest authority, that the construction will not be put on this clause that it authorizes the survey of land outside of the Government domain, and that under the appropriation here made for this geological map maps made by the States will be utilized. The legal construction put upon it will be, as I have said, that it does not authorize the survey of private property in the States. Therefore, if I am right in this, and the House desires to authorize the compilation of maps depending on geological surveys other than of the national domain, it will concur in the Senate amendment; if it does not desire survey of private property, it will non-concur.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to say in answer to the gentleman from New York that I think the friends of this measure know what they intended it to mean and what it does mean, and that is all I have to say about it further than I hope they will support it. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore put the question to the House, and declared the ayes had it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I demand a division.

The House divided.

Mr. HISCOCK. No further count is demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No further count being demanded, the amendment is concurred in.

One hundred and seventy-eighth amendment:

And not to exceed $20,000 of the amount appropriated in this paragraph may be applied under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior to the procuring of statistics in relation to mines and mining, and in making chemical analyses of iron, coal, and oil.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move non-concurrence.

Mr. BAYNE and Mr. KENNA moved to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to be recognized for a minute or two on that proposition.

Mr. HISCOCK. Very well; I will take the floor and yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KENNA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I do not suppose when a gentleman rises and moves concurrence in an amendment he can be taken off the floor by any other gentleman without his consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] who moved concurrence to claim the floor.

Mr. BAYNE. Of course, if there is to be no discussion of the question I do not care to proceed; but if there is to be, I want to be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot make any agreement with the gentleman in that respect.

Mr. BAYNE. Of course not, but I can be heard after the gentleman from Illinois has finished.

Mr. CANNON. I only want to say a word in reference to this matter. I am for this geological survey; have been for it all along; was for it when it was considered in the House before, and voted with the gentleman from West Virginia on the motion to concur in the Senate amendment striking out the words "public domain." But I am not in sympathy with the motion to concur in this amendment, and I can give in a moment the reason for my opposition to it. This amendment reads as follows:

(178) And not to exceed $20,000 of the amount appropriated in this paragraph may be applied under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior to the procuring of statistics in relation to mines and mining, and in making chemical analyses of iron, coal, and oil.

Now, then, there is a provision in the legislative bill, and has been for two years past, enabling the Director of the Mint to get up mines and mining statistics, and he has his whole force organized, has published two very valuable volumes of statistics, and it is totally and wholly useless to duplicate the work under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. Therefore, as we are doing the work well now under the direction of the Mint Bureau, and as it is being satisfactorily done, I think we ought to leave it as it is and non-concur in this amendment of the Senate.

Mr. BAYNE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. Is the Director of the Mint pursuing an investigation of the mining operations of coal and iron and oil and such industries as that, or is his investigation simply confined to the production of the precious metals, gold and silver?

Mr. CANNON. He gathers his statistics, if the gentleman is familiar with the reports, touching the mines and mining only; but he is broadening his work from year to year, and I think we had better leave it as it is and allow him to go on in the manner which has been pursued heretofore.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very important provision, and if the Director of the Mint is making these investigations it is perfectly plain that his investigations relate only to the mining of gold and silver and possibly copper, although I do not think that falls within the purview of an investigation made by him under the authority of law. The immensity of the coal and iron interests of this country are not sufficiently considered in that direction; and so far as they are concerned are more valuable than any other mining operations, and so far transcend in importance gold and silver that no comparison is to be made. But when a duty of this sort is imposed upon somebody, it ought to be upon somebody whose investigations lead logically in that direction; and, as I understand it, the investigations of the Mint Department do not extend there. These relate entirely to the geological survey. These are elements of geology; they form part of the system of geological investigation, and have nothing whatever to do with the investigations made by the Director of the Mint.

It was a strange thing when such investigations were placed in the hands of the Director of the Mint at all, because they are not cognate to his official duties and have no pertinency whatever to his functions, while it is perfectly cognate and within the purview of geological investigation. They should be investigated and the statistics properly prepared at once. I regret, Mr. Speaker, to see a gentleman of the wide experience, ability, and information of my friend from Illinois planting himself upon a position so illogical as that which he assumes with reference to this important subject.

Mr. CANNON. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to a fact right here in the line of his own remark. The proposition which this amendment presents is the procuring of statistics in relation to mines and mining; but it goes further and provides for making chemical analyses of iron, coal, and oil. I have no objection to that part of it; but what I object to is the statistics of mines and mining, and we want to non-concur in that part of the amendment certainly, or non-concur in the whole amendment with an amendment striking out that portion with reference to mines and mining.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to insert after the word "mining," in line 2121, the words "other than gold and silver," which I think will meet the objection of my friend from Illinois, and also meet the object that the Senate had in view. Now the investigation and compilation of statistics in relation to gold and silver is already covered by the Treasury Department; therefore I move to concur in this amendment with the amendment which I have suggested.

Mr. BAYNE. But we do not want the operations confined to gold and silver.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; and I propose to except them. If my amendment is adopted the amendment of the Senate will read as follows:

To the procuring of statistics in relation to mines and mining, other than gold and silver, and in making chemical analyses of iron, coal, and oil.

Mr. BAYNE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. THOMAS. That is right.

Mr. WILSON. Why strike out gold and silver?

Mr. SPRINGER. Because that is already provided for under the Treasury Department, and I do not want to double it up.

Mr. BAYNE. So far as I am concerned I am willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. HASKELL. Before the question is taken I desire to say a word. The gentleman from Illinois understands perfectly well that silver, as it is in the mine, is mixed with other metals, and to undertake to make a report simply excluding from the list of mines gold and silver does not cover the ground at all.

If this matter has to be adjusted it had better be all adjusted in the committee of conference. The House certainly does not want to exclude from investigation merely gold and silver, because when you exclude them you exclude the investigation of any other metal that might be mined when mining gold and silver.

Mr. ATKINS. The whole thing is left to the conference.

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to say I also am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] with regard to excluding gold and silver. If you are now collecting statistics through the Mint or the Treasury Department it certainly will do no harm to collect the statistics from the broader standpoint of the resources of the national domain. I understand that the Director of the Mint has in view the specific yield of the precious metals as bearing on the question of supply. Now this, as I take it, is intended to look at the matter from a different and still broader standpoint; that it is an investigation not simply as to that which has been produced, but that it is a survey with statistics with reference to that which may be produced. For that reason it seems to me it would be a good deal better to let the whole question stand as it is now.

There is just one other remark I want to make about that. When the Appropriations Committee brought in this bill they recommended, I think, $120,000 for this geological survey. That amount was increased by the House to $220,000. There was an increase of $100,000 put upon the bill. Now, the purport of the whole thing is to create a geological survey. When you come to analyze it you will find there is wrapped about the idea of geology a vast amount of awe and reverence for what is supposed to be the immense value of that science. Gentlemen are disposed to vote for the survey on that ground, that geology is one of your high sciences, and that when you can get a geological survey of the domain of the country or of the States that then you have obtained some very important advantage in the interest of industrial development.

Now I wish to express the opinion there is just as much nonsense talked respecting the practical value of this science of geology as there is about any one thing I know of. You propose to expend $220,000 for high science when you will not make provision for obtaining practical information, information that may be of practical value with reference to your mineral resources. For my own part I would a good deal rather that there should come at least one grain of wheat out of this thing than to have only slosh, for slosh it is when you come down to the practical value of this geological survey in furnishing you the data which will be of value to your miner, to your prospector, to your homesteader, to the men that settle up your country.

You will find, gentlemen, that this survey looks to your practical man for its information. I risk the statement that any report from this commission as to Leadville, for instance, is based upon the knowledge which your practical men have already obtained.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is very necessary to get this bill through, and I must call for a vote.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is all I want to say.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment with the amendment which has been read.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. BAYNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in with an amendment; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to move to reconsider the vote by which amendment 177 was concurred in; and I also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest that as it is of importance to get through with the bill as quickly as possible the remaining amendments be not read, but merely indicated by numbers, unless some gentleman calls for the reading.

There was no objection.

Amendments 179 and 180 were non-concurred in.

Amendment 181 was concurred in.

Amendments 182 to 189, inclusive, were non-concurred in.

Amendments 190 and 191 were concurred in.

Amendments 192, 193, and 194 were non-concurred in.

Amendment 195 was concurred in.

Amendments 196, 197, and 198 were non-concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must object to this method of merely having the numbers indicated, without the Clerk reading the amendments. I call for the reading of the amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the amendments.

Amendment 199 was read and non-concurred in.

Amendment 200 was read and concurred in.

Amendments 201 and 202 were read and non-concurred in.

Amendment 203, to the paragraph appropriating for the public printing and binding, was read, as follows:

In line 244, strike out "2,400,000" and insert "2,377,650."

Mr. HISCOCK. The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why should we not concur in that amendment?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana there has been a readjustment by the Senate in this clause of the sums that can be expended for the benefit of the different bureaus and departments. It is necessary for us, in order to have a proper understanding of what should be done, to let the whole subject go to the committee of conference. And I will say further in that connection that the Senate has reduced the aggregate amount which the House appropriated for the Printing Bureau, and has also sent over to the House to-day an amendment to a joint resolution to print the Agricultural Reports, an amendment appropriating $219,000. We have non-concurred in that, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] in order that the whole subject might be left open. I therefore suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that we had better non-concur in all these amendments, and let them go to the conference along with the conference upon the joint resolution that I have referred to.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 204 to 209 were non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 210 was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to John J. Key the sum of $10,000, and to W. G. M. Davis the sum of $10,000, for their services, respectively, as attorneys at law, employed by the United States Attorney-General to aid in the case of John Young, assignee of Alexander Collier, against The United States, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which said sum shall be the balance in full of the compensation of the said John J. Key and W. G. M. Davis, respectively, for their services in said cause under said employment; and that said amount shall be charged to the fund now in the Treasury of the United States known as proceeds of captured and abandoned property, under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property, and for the prosecution of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States," approved March 12, 1863, (Statutes at Large, volume 12, page 820.)

Mr. HISCOCK. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. ROBESON. I wish to say that this is a private claim taken off the Calendar, and I hope that the House and our committee of conference will see to it that this claim is not allowed any more than others. It is simply a claim in which two lawyers are interested, and they ought not to stand any better than the great body of the people who do not happen to belong to that profession. It is a claim which the House can properly consider at the right time, but not here.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The amendments numbered 211 to 219 were non-concurred in, and amendment No. 220 was concurred in.

Mr. HISCOCK. All the amendments on pages 110, 111, 112, and to and including line 2770, on page 213, are in reference mainly to the employes of the Senate, and I move non-concurrence in them all.

Mr. MCCOOK. There are two very important amendments there in relation to the purchase of the Franklin papers and the Rochambeau papers, which I hope the gentleman will move to concur in.

Amendments numbered 221 and 222 were non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 223 was read, as follows:

To enable the Acting Secretary of the Senate to pay the employes of the Senate (including the Capitol police) receiving an annual compensation, who were employed on the 4th day of March, 1881, or on the 29th day of October, 1881, a sum equal to one month's pay, at the rate per annum they were receiving at the dates herein specified; and that a sum equal to one month's pay shall be allowed and paid to the session employes of the Senate who shall be so employed at the adjournment of the present session.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think we should concur in that amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no doubt that it will be concurred in. It is a matter that doubtless will be left to the Senate; but it is entirely proper that we should understand the basis upon which they make their calculations.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the conference committee does concur in that amendment it will present a very extraordinary case. There was a pretense that the thirty-odd thousand dollars appropriated for the employes of the House was intended for the purpose of equalizing the pay of employes of the House with those of the Senate, and now it is proposed, if I understand the gentleman from New York—

Mr. HISCOCK. If I may interrupt the gentleman, I will say to him that I was speaking in reference to amendment No. 222, in relation to the sister of the late Senator Burnside. So far as amendment No. 223 is concerned, I am entirely opposed to concurring in it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I thought the remark of the gentleman was addressed to that amendment, as it is the one now pending.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to non-concur in that amendment.

Mr. TALBOTT. I move to concur in the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I made that motion some time ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is entirely correct, but in the confusion the Chair failed to remember who submitted the motion.

Mr. ALDRICH. On the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I will withdraw the motion to concur.

Mr. TALBOTT. I renew it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] to concur in amendment No. 223 of the Senate.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, and 230 were non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 231 was to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of State to purchase the manuscript papers of Benjamin Franklin, and the collection of books, &c., known as the Franklin collection, belonging to Henry Stevens, of London, $35,000; the printed books, pamphlets, and newspapers, and one set of the type-writer copies of the manuscripts, to be deposited in the Library of Congress, and the residue to be preserved in the Department of State.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. MCCOOK. I am not going to antagonize the Committee on Appropriations, for I have had too much experience in that line. But I want to call the attention of the gentlemen who will be on the committee of conference to the importance of this amendment, as well as to the one immediately following, in regard to the purchase of the papers of the Marquis de Rochambeau. I would refer them to the Senate report on that subject, which is indorsed unanimously by the Joint Committee on the Library.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 232 was non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 233 was to insert the following:

To Jerre Haralson, the sum of $5,000, to compensate him for expenses incurred in his contest with Hon. C. M. Shelley, from the fourth Congressional district of Alabama, in the Forty-fifth Congress, and to be in full for all claim for salary and mileage, and for everything else which he would have been entitled to had he been admitted to his seat in that Congress.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HISCOCK] to the fact that two members of the Committee on Elections of the Forty-fifth Congress stated that the sub-committee had decided to report to the full committee in favor of seating Mr. Haralson. On that account several members of the Committee on Elections, I do not know how many, signed a report asking the Senate to put on this amendment. It was stated by one member of the Committee on Elections of the Forty-fifth Congress orally and by another in writing, as I understand the case, that the sub-committee had decided to report in favor of Mr. Haralson. This is paying Mr. Haralson only one-half the amount he would have received had the sub-committee reported to the full committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make an explanation in reference to this item. If my recollection is right, and I think it is, the sub-committee of the Committee on Elections of the Forty-fifth Congress never reported to the full committee in reference to this Haralson contest, and of course the full committee never reported to the House. Now the question is whether this Congress will undertake to pay a salary to a man who might have been entitled to his seat, and who I believe was entitled to his seat—

A MEMBER. That settles it.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is, I believe so; but who never had a seat upon the floor and in whose favor no report was ever made. I will say to my Republican friends on this side of the House that I think they are venturing upon very uncertain and untenable ground when they consent to such a proposition as this.

I have stated the facts in reference to the standing of Mr. Haralson in the Forty-fifth Congress; I have stated my belief in reference to his title to a seat. I think I am justified in adding that the Committee on Elections of the Forty-seventh Congress has never investigated the question of his title.

Mr. CALKINS. On that point I desire to correct the gentleman by saying that a sub-committee of the Committee on Elections did investigate it, and did report, as I understand, to the full committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to see the report made by a sub-committee of the Elections Committee of the Forty-seventh Congress upon the question of Mr. Haralson's title to a seat in the Forty-fifth Congress, reviewing the evidence after hearing counsel on both sides, and then passing judgment upon it.

Mr. CALKINS. I wish to say with reference to this claim that personally I know very little of the matter, except it was stated, as has been said by my colleague on the committee, [Mr. MILLER,] that there was a favorable report in the Forty-fifth Congress by some part of the committee in favor of Mr. Haralson. The gentleman who is now chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HISCOCK] was then a member of the Committee on Elections, and he ought to know what were the facts in that Congress. I do not want to dispute with him upon that question. But I do know that this matter was referred to a sub-committee of the Committee on Elections at this session, and the committee did agree that Mr. Haralson ought to have this allowance for the Forty-fifth Congress. The Senate, I believe, is in possession of that paper now.

I wish the House to understand, however, that this report of the sub-committee and the committee was informal; but I think it bore the signatures of a majority of the committee.

I will add that when the matter was presented to the Senate I was asked what I thought about it. I frankly and freely said that under the circumstances I believed Mr. Haralson ought to have something to compensate him for his failure to obtain the seat to which, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations concedes, he was entitled; and I said that I thought the amount ought to be at least $5,000. I say so now.

Mr. ATKINS. If Mr. Haralson was entitled to the seat why was he not seated?

Mr. CALKINS. Because, as I understand, before the matter was ever reached to be determined finally Congress adjourned, as has been the fact in several other instances.

Mr. ATKINS. Then he was not seated?

Mr. CALKINS. No, sir.

Mr. ATKINS. Then here is a proposition to pay him his salary as though he had been a seated member on this floor, and a proposition, too, originating in the Senate.

Mr. CALKINS. This is not a proposition to pay him his salary, but to pay him a sum in gross for all demands with reference to that Congress. I think it ought to be paid.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to reports of committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 1255) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. No. 126) to reimburse the Creek orphan fund.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; had insisted on its amendments to said bill numbered 35 and 36, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HALE, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. One word more. I may be allowed, I hope, to appeal to this side of the House upon this question. I believe, as I have stated, that we are treading upon dangerous ground when we seek to review the action of a preceding Congress with reference to its election cases. If at some time in the far future the Democracy should happen to have control of this House—I say in the far future—

Mr. ATKINS. We could go to work and take up five hundred cases from the beginning of the Government, and provide for payments of this sort in all of them.

Mr. HISCOCK. If that should be done I do not want it to be said that a Republican House of Representatives set the example of reviewing the action of preceding Congresses upon contested-election cases and paying a salary to men it thought were entitled to seats.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to yield to me for one moment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] and then two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MILLER.] I want to balance this matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was a member of the Committee on Elections in the Forty-fifth Congress during which this case arose. It was referred to a sub-committee, which did not report to the general committee for its action; but a report was prepared by the sub-committee in favor of Mr. Shelley. As leave was given to Mr. Haralson at the first session to take evidence during the recess between the first and second sessions, the case was not ready for final action until late in the Congress; and when it was not practicable to have a further meeting of the Committee on Elections, the report of the sub-committee in favor of seating Mr. Shelley was taken to individual members of the committee—Democratic members—and signed by all of them, I believe. We then recommended that Mr. Haralson be allowed $2,500 for his expenses in the case, and that sum was voted to him in the sundry civil appropriation bill, approved March 3, 1879. I understood that he was perfectly satisfied with the result at that time.

Mr. HISCOCK. Before yielding to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.]

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask a question, and hope to have it answered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania or the gentleman from Indiana, and it is how the Committee on Elections of the Forty-seventh Congress obtained jurisdiction of an election case in the Forty-fifth Congress? Who then constituted that committee a committee on claims?

Mr. CALKINS. Will the gentleman yield for an answer?

Mr. CANNON. I will.

Mr. CALKINS. I do think, as I have already reported to the House, that the proper place for all such matters originating in preceding Congresses is the Committee on Claims. That is what I believe; but nevertheless it has been the usage for the Committee on Elections, when memorials have been referred to them, to take action and report to the House.

Mr. CANNON. I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not know of a single precedent, and if there is one it is time we should go back on it, when one Congress assumed to say somebody else was elected to a former Congress which is dead and then to pay him his salary.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, as one of the members of the Committee on Elections I signed the report asking the Senate committee to put on this amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Why did you not recommend it to this House?

Mr. MILLER. From the fact that the bill had gone from the House and was before the Senate when our committee took action on the matter. I did it for the reason I was informed that Mr. Harris, who was a member of the Committee on Elections, stated to a member of the sub-committee that investigated this that the sub-committee of Elections of the Forty-fifth Congress agreed to report in favor of seating Mr. Haralson.

Mr. DUNN. Was not Mr. Harrison Mr. Haralson's attorney?

Mr. MILLER. I know nothing of this except as I have stated.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Harrison was the attorney in the contest.

Mr. MILLER. The Mr. Harris I speak of was a member of the Committee on Elections in the Forty-fifth Congress, and I was told that he stated to our sub-committee that Mr. Haralson, legally and technically, should have had his seat.

I was informed by Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, that Mr. Candler, of Georgia, also a member of the Committee on Elections of the Forty-fifth Congress, wrote a letter to him stating substantially the same facts. I signed that report for the reason if that sub-committee decided Mr. Haralson should be seated then he ought to receive his full pay. Because a former Congress did him injustice and deprived him of his whole salary that is no reason why this Congress should follow that up by doing him another injustice and refusing him any salary at all.

If the facts are as I understand them, then in my judgment, instead of giving him $5,000 he ought to be paid his full salary. If, on the other hand, the facts are as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] then this amendment should fall.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman will give me the names of the sub-committee on elections, which heard argument on the question of the right of Mr. Haralson to a seat in the Forty-fifth Congress—

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The easiest way is to seat the man in this Congress. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask for a vote.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Senate amendments numbered 234, 240, 245, and 247, were read, and concurred in.

Amendments numbered 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 241, 242, 243, 244, and 246 were read, and non-concurred in.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the various votes taken on the Senate amendments; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now move the House adjourn, and I desire to explain my reason for making that motion. Gentlemen on the other side of the House—

Mr. ROBERTSON. I object to the gentleman debating the motion to adjourn. If he makes the motion to adjourn he has no right to debate it. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. HISCOCK. Very well; then I insist on my motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised by the Committee on Enrolled Bills that the legislative, &c., appropriation bill will be enrolled within the next ten minutes. It is important it should be received and sent to the Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I insist on my motion to adjourn, and we can filibuster for ten minutes or until that report has been received from the Committee on Enrolled Bills. I wish to carry out the agreement with gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. HATCH. Let me introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House take a recess for ten minutes. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is better for gentlemen to resume their seats, and they can then understand each other.

Mr. HATCH. I understood the gentleman from New York to make a motion to adjourn, then to take a recess, and that he is going to filibuster against the introduction of any other bills.

Mr. HISCOCK. I insist on the motion that the House take a recess for ten minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. During that time we could take advantage of the opportunity of introducing and passing some very important bills on which the Senate have made some amendments, instead of taking a recess.

Mr. HOLMAN. Regular order.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 6399) granting an increase of pension to Stephen D. Smith;

A bill (H. R. No. 6521) granting a pension to Mrs. Adeline A. Turner;

A bill (H. R. No. 5985) granting a pension to Martha Jane Douglass;

A bill (H. R. No. 2317) for the relief of Mary Bullard;

A bill (H. R. No. 219) for the relief of Elizabeth Leebrick;

A bill (H. R. No. 2966) granting a pension to Annie W. Osborne;

A bill (H. R. No. 3601) for the relief of Martha A. Jones;

A bill (H. R. No. 6317) granting an increase of pension to James Bennett;

A bill (H. R. No. 5018) granting a pension to Elizabeth F. Rice;

A bill (H. R. No. 3733) granting a pension to Mary E. Taylor;

A bill (H. R. No. 2524) for the relief of Alice J. Bennit;

A bill (H. R. No. 3717) granting a pension to Alvin Walker; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6624) granting an increase of pension to Eliza F. Porter.

MEMBERSHIP OF COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Committee on Enrolled Bills state that it is now very much overworked and would like assistance. The Chair suggests that he be allowed to add two members to that committee.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to that; it is the usual practice.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as additional members of that committee Mr. LYNCH, of Mississippi, and Mr. LATHAM, of North Carolina.

PRINTING AGRICULTURAL REPORTS.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the concurrent resolution of the Senate for printing and distributing the Agricultural Reports, Messrs. MCCLURE, VALENTINE, and SPRINGER.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. VAN AERNAM, indefinitely, on account of important business; and

To Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, for the remainder of the session, on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave to withdraw papers from the files of the House was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. UPSON, papers on file in the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads in the case of S. P. Gambia; no adverse report.

To Mr. RYAN in the case of House bill No. 464, Thirty-eighth Congress, for the relief of J. D. Turner and W. S. Raymond.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave to print remarks on general subjects was granted to Mr. MURCH. [See Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now renew the motion that the House take a recess for ten minutes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish to correct an error as to the time required for enrolling the legislative appropriation bill. I thought the bill would be ready in ten minutes, but find it will take at least half an hour if not longer to complete it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I move that the House take a recess for thirty minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. Why not adjourn?

Mr. HISCOCK. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania not to insist upon the motion, for the reason that action will be taken within that time to enable us to have a conference with the Senate on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection whatever to that provided the gentleman will not consent to any other business.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will not.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 22.

Mr. ROBERTSON. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. ROBERTSON and Mr. HISCOCK as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 107, noes 6.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I withdraw the point of order as to the presence of a quorum.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I renew the point that no quorum has voted. We might just as well be engaged in voting upon this subject as in taking the recess.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the motion.

Mr. PRESCOTT. At the request of several gentlemen, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. The recess will extend for thirty minutes from this time.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it understood that no other business is to be transacted after the recess?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will ask further unanimous consent that the session after the recess shall be devoted exclusively to receiving communications from the Senate, and to the appointment of committees of conference.

Mr. PRESCOTT. And the introduction of bills for reference.

Mr. DAWES and Mr. ELLIS objected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York does not mean to exclude reports from the Committee on Enrolled Bills?

Mr. HISCOCK. By no means. I will state again my proposition, that there shall be no business transacted except receiving messages from the Senate; the appointment of conference committees, and reports from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman should also include messages from the President.

Mr. HISCOCK. And messages from the President.

Mr. ELLIS. And unanimous consents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the point of order as having been withdrawn with reference to the vote just taken?

Mr. PRESCOTT. I withdraw it.

So (no further count being demanded) the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House took a recess for thirty minutes.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 5.40 p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, disagreed to the amendments of the House to other amendments of the Senate to said bill, asked for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BECK as conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and also on its amendments to other amendments of the Senate, and agree to the committee of conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HISCOCK of New York, Mr. BUTTERWORTH of Ohio, and Mr. BLACKBURN of Kentucky.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. TALBOTT, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, August 5, 1882.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the Journal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PLATT. I object until I can have an opportunity to say something on the subject. I want to inquire of older Senators than myself whether in the Senate we have ever dispensed with the reading of the Journal?

Mr. INGALLS. A thousand times.

Mr. PLATT. Then I do not make any further objection.

Mr. HALE. It has been done for the last few days on my motion.

Mr. PLATT. I simply wanted information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection the further reading of the Journal will be dispensed with.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LOGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2176) granting a pension to Catharine Lanigan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2177) for the relief of Redfield Duryee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I submit the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 35 and 36 to the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment, amended as follows: Insert after the word "on," in line 2, page 13 of the bill, the words "during the current fiscal year," and strike out, in line 8, page 13 of the bill, the words "stores and" and insert after the word "property," in line 8, page 13 of the bill, the words "and stores;" and the Senate agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,

JOHN A. LOGAN,

H. G. DAVIS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

GEO. M. ROBESON,

J. H. KETCHAM,

JNO. D. C. ATKINS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HALE. This agreement is in accordance with what was suggested yesterday in the debate. Upon the navy-yard question a clause is put in that limits it to the current year; and the word "perishable" is inserted so as to apply to both property and stores, and it does not disturb the plant of the navy-yards. Amendment No. 36 is the proposition that was put in by the Senate providing that the Secretary of the Navy shall make a report as to the Norfolk navy-yard.

I am very glad to say that the conferees came to an agreement very readily and very easily, and I think it is now in a condition where it satisfies both Houses.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am sorry that I misunderstood the Senator yesterday as to the number of the reduction in the line of the Navy. I find that it is greater than was made by either House separately. I am now correctly informed; but it is too late to remedy that. I exceedingly regret that there is a reduction of one hundred and fifteen in the line of the Navy, when the House did not agree to as much reduction in the first place, nor did the Senate. The result of the conference is to increase the reductions, and I think increase them too much; but that is past now.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the Senator if the reduction is in the staff or in the line?

Mr. HAWLEY. In the line. The reduction in the line is greater than was voted by either body.

The report was concurred in.

TARIFF-COMMISSION TESTIMONY.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred a resolution for printing additional copies of the testimony taken before the tariff commission, have instructed me to report it without amendment, and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted yesterday by Mr. ANTHONY:

Resolved, That 350 additional copies of the testimony taken before the tariff commission be printed for the use of the commission.

Mr. ANTHONY. In the tariff-commission act it was provided that the testimony taken before the commission should be published from time to time, and the mode of distribution was directed in the act, but there were no copies provided for the tariff commission itself. The Public Printer, who is a very law-abiding man, thought that he would not be authorized to make that distribution without this action.

The resolution was agreed to.

LABORERS ON FOX RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. CONGER. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report favorably the bill (H. R. No. 3489) for the relief of certain laborers employed upon Government works; and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Acting Secretary read the bill.

Mr. CONGER. The object of the bill is to pay the workmen employed under the contract on public works on the Fox River by distributing the 10 per cent. withheld from the contractor under the law until the completion of the work to those who performed the labor upon this river. The 10 per cent. withheld from the contractor until the completion of the work provided by law, under the regulations, amounts to about $7,000. The contractor of the work after employing the men for some time failed in his contract, broke down entirely, and left the workmen unpaid to a large extent.

Mr. INGALLS. How much is due the laborers? What is the amount in the aggregate?

Mr. CONGER. As I understand, it is somewhere near the amount of the 10 per cent. The bill provides that that reserve of 10 per cent., which would be due from the Government to the contractor if the Government work had gone on and been completed, may be paid by the Engineer Department or by the Secretary of War, upon proper proof, to the laborers for their wages, and that no more shall be paid than the amount reserved by the Government in any event.

Mr. DAWES. Have the workmen shown that they are entitled to the 10 per cent.?

Mr. CONGER. They were entitled to the 10 per cent. withheld at the time. They have done the work and earned it.

Mr. DAWES. They could not be entitled to the 10 per cent. otherwise, if the contractors had paid their hands.

Mr. CONGER. They have done the work that would entitle them to the 10 per cent. The bill provides that that balance which would have been due the contractor if the work had been performed and which has been earned, the 10 per cent. withheld, shall be paid to these laborers, if there is enough to pay them, and if there is not enough, then to pay them pro rata. There is a full report and examination of the case. They are, as I understand, laboring-men who worked on this canal and on the improvement of the Fox River, and there is somewhere about $7,000, perhaps more than that, which has been due these men for three or four years. The contractors have gone into bankruptcy.

I do not know anybody who is more entitled to the pay that these men earned themselves than these laborers. It is in that view that the committee recommend that this money should be paid to those who earned it, unless it shall appear that the assignees in bankruptcy or somebody else have a legal right which would make it improper; but the bill provides for that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to ascertain from the Senator if I understand the bill. It is an old bill. My recollection is that it has been here for years in Congress. The contractors made a contract with the Government for the construction of certain public works. The Government reserved 10 per cent. upon the amount of their contract, the price of the work performed, retaining that out of the payments that were made from time to time. The contractors then became insolvent, and it was alleged that they were owing these workmen. The Government retained that amount, and it retained it not for the benefit of the laborers, but for its own protection in the completion of the work. The Government had to relet the work and have it completed by other contractors, and in the reletting of that work, the completion of it cost the Government more in addition to the amount of the 10 per cent. retained on the prior contract.

The fact, as I understand it, is that the Government retained the 10 per cent. for its own protection to enable it to get the work completed at the contract price, and that amount was more than exhausted in the excessive price that had to be paid for the completion of the work after the failure of the contractor. We set the precedent here that in every contract the Government makes where it reserves 10 per cent. to indemnify itself, if the contractor fail, we are to pay that over to the laborers. Why, then, should the Government retain it at all? The Government never assumes any responsibility to the laborers under the contractors.

It is a very dangerous precedent, an exceedingly dangerous one. If you do it in this case you have got to go back and do it in all other cases. You do not know how many contractors have failed owing their laborers. It makes the Government an insurer of the wages of all laborers under Government contractors.

Mr. CONGER. These laborers earned by their labor whatever the contractors earned. The Government has a right to keep that for the forfeiture of the contract unquestionably. I do not know whether the Government relet the contract more favorably for the Government or less favorably. I did not think this question entered into that. Of course the Government has the right to keep its money and keep it in the Treasury to make good anything it may see fit, or else we should not need to come to Congress for a law on the subject.

It seemed to me that, as a matter of equity, the men whose hard labor earned this 10 per cent., which was not paid and who are unpaid through the bankruptcy and failure of their contractors, had a right to come and ask for that money, the result of their labor and their earnings. But if Congress thinks it is better that the Government should retain it, that is the other side of the question. It appeared to me that it would be better for the Government to pay these poor men this balance that they earned rather than to keep it in the Treasury. That is my view. If other gentlemen think differently, they will vote accordingly.

Mr. ANTHONY. I quite agree with the Senator from Michigan. Although legally the case may be as the Senator from Missouri has represented it, if these poor people have no technical, legal claim upon the Government it seems to me that the 10 per cent. reserved could not be better applied than to pay them their wages.

Mr. SAWYER. That is the state of the case exactly. The Government has the money and it is just that these men should have the amount of money that they earned. It is in the hands of the Government. If any individual in my State had let a contract and the contractor failed, and his employer had money in his hands and refused to pay that over to the laborers, do you suppose he would stand well in that community? Not at all. We do not ask the Government to pay anything the laborers have not already earned. So far as I am concerned, whether the Government afterward relet the contract for more or less would make no difference. It got the work done and retained this money, and there is no reason, in my judgment, why these laborers should not have what they earned.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me put a question to the Senator. The Senator is a practical business man. Suppose I take a contract from the Senator to construct a building. We enter into a written contract. He agrees to pay me $100,000 for the completion of a certain building. I am to furnish all the materials and the labor, and in order to indemnify himself he is to reserve 10 per cent. upon the amount of the payments, the payments to be made as the work progresses. I go on and expend $30,000; I do $30,000 worth of work upon that building; I have employed Tom, Dick, and Harry to do the work. I have been paid $27,000 and the Senator has in his hands $3,000. I fail, owing my day laborers and the men who have furnished material, and so on, a great deal more than the $3,000. The Senator has not got his building completed and he has to hire some one else to complete it. He hires another party to continue the work and it costs the Senator $80,000 to complete it. He has already paid out $27,000. Now, I ask the Senator if he as an individual would take that $3,000 and pay it over to my day laborers?

Mr. SAWYER. Most certainly I would, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. When you have lost $7,000 by my failure to complete the work?

Mr. SAWYER. I have done that same thing hundreds of times.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator is a remarkable man.

Mr. SAWYER. I would most certainly pay over what had been earned by the workmen; and no man in our country, if it was anybody else but the Government, could avoid paying the laborers. He would have to pay them in full; there would be a lien upon the work.

Mr. COCKRELL. We are not talking about liens now. That is not the question.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. My colleague will allow me to state that under the lien law of our State the laborers would have a lien.

Mr. COCKRELL. We all understand that.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It may be that the Senator understands that. Still I can state it, although the Senator does understand it. I say under the lien law of our State the laborers would have a lien upon that property to the extent of the amount of the $3,000 in the case the Senator has supposed, and they could enforce that lien against the property. All that is asked in this case is that the 10 per cent. shall be paid to the laborers.

Mr. SAWYER. And if there is not enough to pay them all, to pay them that amount pro rata. It seems to me nothing can be fairer. I think the Government should not do what an individual would not do.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am satisfied there is not one man in a thousand in the United States, taking all the honest men and putting them together, who would do anything of that kind under a contract precisely similar to this. The Senator is a very exceptional man.

Mr. SAWYER. There is scarcely a business man in our country who would not do it.

Mr. COCKRELL. This bill is not pressing; it has been in two or three Congresses before, and I think we had better have a little longer time than we can have in the morning hour for its discussion. I hope the bill will be placed on the Calendar in order that it may be discussed more fully.

Mr. SAWYER. I hope not. It will take but little time. Let it come to a vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know the Senator is a business man. If this were a pressing matter, if it had not been pending here for three Congresses, there would be some reason for pressing it to a vote at this time.

Mr. SAWYER. The very fact that it has been pending for a long time is the reason why it should be considered now.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not right to bring in here a matter of this kind at the heel of the session and force a limited discussion of it. Some reports have heretofore been made on the subject, and we should have an opportunity to consult them.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The object of discussion is that the case may be understood. We will take the case just as the Senator from Missouri puts it, and allow the Senate to vote upon it on his own statement. What further discussion is necessary?

Mr. SAWYER. We will not discuss it if the Senator will allow it to come to a vote; and if the bill is voted down we shall submit without a word.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. We will concede for the purposes of the argument that the facts are exactly as the Senator from Missouri states them.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no question, I think, about the facts. The matter has been investigated.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Then what necessity is there for further discussion?

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the bill lie on the table. That will test the question.

Mr. CONGER. I have already made a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was read for information, and the Senator from Missouri objects to its present consideration.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. He does not object. He has moved to lay the bill on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. CONGER. Does that take precedence of a motion to lay aside the regular order in order to proceed with the consideration of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the bill is not laid on the table it will be proceeded with. The question is on the motion to lay on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and it was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Take a division.

Mr. COCKRELL. If we cannot have a record upon the bill I shall still object to its consideration.

Mr. SAWYER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. Let the bill be read.

The Acting Secretary read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3489) for the relief of certain laborers employed upon Government works.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the laborers who worked upon the Government improvements upon the Fox River, in the State of Wisconsin, under or employed by Day, Call & Co., (or subcontractors under them,) late contractors with the Government in the improvement of the Lower Fox River, in the State of Wisconsin, the amount due each of such laborers, respectively, for work, labor, and services by them done and performed, respectively, upon and about said improvements as aforesaid, out of and from any moneys actually earned by said Day, Call & Co. (or subcontractors under them) under their said contract with the Government, or for work done and materials furnished by said Day, Call & Co., (or subcontractors under them,) and which have not been paid for by the Government, and which may be withheld by the Government from the said Day, Call & Co. on their said contract as a forfeiture or otherwise: Provided, however, That if the amount thereof is not sufficient to pay in full the amount due to such laborers, respectively, then to pay said laborers pro rata. Such payments may be made after giving notice four weeks successively in some newspaper published in the county of Outagamie, Wisconsin, for such laborers to present and prove their claims: Provided further, That such payments be made in the State of Wisconsin, by and through some engineer officer of the United States designated by the Secretary of War: And provided further, That no money shall be paid by virtue of the authority of this act except out of such sum or sums as in the opinion of the Secretary of War may be lawfully withheld from the assignee in bankruptcy of said Day, Call & Co. as a forfeiture under the terms and conditions of their said contract.

Mr. SAWYER. I will state that the full amount is $7,135.01.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 41, nays 4; as follows:

JOHN G. ABERCROMBIE.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 28) for the relief of John G. Abercrombie, received yesterday from the House of Representatives. It is identical with Senate bill No. 1775, and I ask that it be put on its passage. I make the request by instruction of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill (H. R. No. 28) for the relief of John G. Abercrombie was read twice by its title.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have reported exactly the same bill, identical in words, unanimously, and it is on the Calendar. The report is in print. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to John G. Abercrombie, of Benton County, Arkansas, $110, the amount collected of him by the Government of the United States as a failing bidder on mail-route No. 21584, in the State of Missouri.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MAXEY. I move that the bill (S. No. 1775) for the relief of John G. Abercrombie be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT LANDS IN BURLINGTON, IOWA.

The bill (H. R. No. 2299) relinquishing the title which still remains in the United States to all lots or portions of ground which lie within the limits of the present city of Burlington, State of Iowa, to the said city of Burlington was read twice by its title.

Mr. McDILL. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much property is there?

Mr. McDILL. A few remnants or outlots. The city of Burlington was laid out in 1836. There is a very small remnant of property left in the Government. The bill has the concurrence of the Land Office and was reported favorably by the House Committee on Public Lands, and the Committee on Public Lands of this body have authorized me to ask for its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 6103) authorizing the deputy collector of customs stationed at San Juan Island, in the Puget Sound district, to enter and clear vessels and collect duties was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ALABAMA MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask to call up Senate bill No. 2002. It will take but a moment.

Mr. PLUMB. Has the morning business been concluded?

Mr. VEST. Let us get through with the morning business.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not want to interfere with the Senator from Illinois, but I have some morning business to present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive it.

Mr. PLUMB. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4757) to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands, to report it without amendment; and I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if the bill affects in any way the question as to title in regard to mineral lands.

Mr. PLUMB. It only provides for those which are bona fide, that is to say, in which the law has not been practically and technically complied with. It takes those out of the domain of the laws relating to mineral lands.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that it only applies to bona fide entries.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not catch the title of the bill. Is this the bill relating to public lands in Alabama?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to say a few words upon it. I have no objection to its being called up, but I think the bill is an error. Before the war the public lands in Alabama were open to pre-emption and sale. All the land laws were suspended during the war. In 1865, June 13, the proclamation of the President opened the land offices; June 31, 1866, a law of Congress extended the homestead act, which applied before that only to Territories, over the five Southern States that had public lands in them, and then lands could be taken by the homestead act, but no mineral lands were liable to entry and settlement. In 1876, on the 22d of June, an act was passed—

That section 2263 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, confining the disposal of the public lands in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida to the provisions of the homestead law, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, That the repeal of said section shall not have the effect to impair the right, complete or inchoate, of any homestead settler, and no land occupied by such settler at the time this act shall take effect shall be subject to entry, pre-emption, or sale: And provided, That the public lands affected by this act shall be offered at public sale as soon as practicable from time to time, and according to the provisions of existing law, and shall not be subject to private entry until they are so offered.

This repeals the act confining the disposition to homesteads and adds the right of private purchase which prevails nowhere save in the five Southern States, except perhaps as to some very limited extent. At present in Alabama agricultural lands can be obtained under the homestead law and by private purchase to any extent: in lots of one hundred and sixty acres or less under the homestead law; other, or mineral lands, can be obtained under the provisions relating to coal and iron lands in lots of one hundred and sixty acres by individuals and by corporations in lots as large as six hundred and forty acres—iron lands at $2.50 to $5 an acre according to their vicinity to a railroad and coal lands at $10 and $20 according to their vicinity to a railroad. The homestead act from 1866 to 1880 gave Alabama 23,850 homesteads and worked a very great benefit to the State beyond any doubt. Under the proposed law (this is the point I wish the Senate to mind) every acre in Alabama will be open for sale to everybody, citizen or alien, in unlimited quantities. The homestead act will nominally prevail there, but it will be of no mortal use under this power of wealthy individuals or great corporations to sweep all the coal and iron lands into their possession, in no matter how large tracts.

I think this is against the policy of the Government. It does not prevail, as I understand it, anywhere else. There has been some similar legislation with regard to Kansas and Missouri, but the coal lands in Kansas amount to nothing in comparison with the coal and iron lands in Alabama. Those iron lands are of inestimable value. This is to make an exception to the public policy, and to put the lands of Alabama as no other State lands are, where they can all be swept up at the shortest notice by rich men.

There was no report made upon this bill in the House that I can find, and the brief report made in the Senate contains a letter, to be sure, from the Land Office, which declines to make any recommendation concerning the measure. Secretary Schurz, as I understand it, was opposed to it, and the present Commissioner of the General Land Office says:

The policy of the proposed law is one which it is the peculiar province of Congress to determine, and concerning which I prefer to make no recommendation.

The policy of so disposing of the public lands that large areas will be owned by single individuals or corporations may well be doubted, or at least merits careful consideration. It is also to be borne in mind that a too restrictive policy is a substantial inducement to fraud, and at the best may postpone but briefly the acquisition of large titles by individuals who command the necessary capital and enterprise.

So he gives the considerations on each side and declines to make a recommendation.

There are various other facts. I have been unable to give this matter the inquiry that I ought to give it, but I am very confident from what I have heard from gentlemen informed on the subject that the bill ought not to pass without further consideration. I have in my hands a copy of a letter, not addressed to me, but sent to the Secretary of the Interior, from the special counsel of the Government in Alabama. I feel bound to read it, for I think this legislation will be a very serious mistake. He states the case clearly and emphatically. I fear the Senate is not caring much about it, though I am satisfied I am simply doing my duty in bringing it to their notice. Before Senators vote upon this bill I should be glad to have them hear this brief letter.

Mr. SHERMAN. A single objection puts the bill over.

Mr. HAWLEY. I said I did not feel inclined under the urgency of the Senator from Alabama to make that technical point.

You ought to see the Secretary of the Interior—

Says this gentleman, the special counsel of the Government—and the Attorney General and interest them in defeating the bill that lately passed the House putting all mineral lands in Alabama upon the market as agricultural lands.

Let me just there say that a geological survey of Alabama was ordered about four or five years ago, and though it was very imperfect it showed an enormous quantity of exceedingly valuable iron and coal land. It was by no means perfect, because there is a tract of 15,000 acres in the hands of a great corporation there that was not included in that survey at all. It was then in process of acquiring it.

The bill makes all land in Alabama, mineral or otherwise, subject to disposal as agricultural lands, provided that all lands which have been reported to the General Land Office as containing coal or iron shall first be offered at public sale, and provided that homestead entries may be patented without regard to the mineral character of the land—where the parties have in other respects complied with the requirements of the homestead law.

That is an invitation to wrong-doing—

I have yet to hear a rational and sensible defense of the bill from any quarter. It is said it ought to be passed because a similar bill passed as to Kansas and one or two other States, but the fact that the interests of the Government were sacrificed in Kansas for the benefit of a ring of land sharks does not make the thing justifiable in Alabama. If it does it would justify it in every State, and this bill, instead of being confined to Alabama, should be made to apply to every State in which there are mineral lands. A person would suppose, to read the provisions of this bill, that its authors were filled with a most determined purpose to protect the Government in its rights, tempered only with a mild regard for the honest homesteaders. Doubtless they were, but they have been terribly imposed on in that case. Only such lands as have been reported to the General Land Office as containing coal and iron are required to be offered before the same are subject to entry as agricultural land. It is a well-known fact in Alabama that the lands reported by the mineralogist as containing coal and iron are but a small proportion of the lands that really contain those minerals. None of the lands belonging to the Pratt Coal and Coke Company (some 15,000 acres) were reported by that officer as containing coal, although those lands were then in process of acquisition from the Government by means of homestead entries, and coal was then being mined thereon. As an indication of the extent of the frauds which this bill proposes to legalize, I will add that the lands of that company were lately sold for $1,000,000, the purchaser taking the land with notice given by the special agent of the fraud in the original entry.

It would appear as if the second proviso of the bill were inserted for the benefit of this purchaser, because if the universal character of the lands be eliminated from the inquiry as to the character of the entries it will be impossible for the Government to break down their bona fide. The parties procuring these entries to be made were always careful to see that the requirements of the law as to residence, improvement, and cultivation were complied with.

What the bill does for the Pratt Coal and Coke Company it does for thousands of others, but not to the same extent. Five million dollars would be a low estimate of the value of the lands, the wrongful acquisition of which it proposes to legalize.

There is another class of entries which this bill legalizes, and which it was evidently intended to legalize. I refer to the soldiers' and sailors' additional homestead entries. Where a soldier or sailor has homesteaded a less quantity of land than the maximum to which he is entitled, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon proof of compliance with the law as to the original entry, will issue him a certificate authorizing him to locate, by himself or by an agent, in any part of the country, a quantity of land sufficient with that already homesteaded to make one hundred and sixty acres. These certificates are put on the market like land warrants or agricultural college scrip, and are sold to the man that will pay most for them. Many of the most valuable coal lands in this State have been entered by the land sharks upon these certificates, and all such entries will be legalized by this bill because they are in every respect bona fide homestead entries, except that they are located on mineral land. I know of a case where a strip of land eighteen miles long and not half a section wide, extending through the center of the Cahaba coal field from its northeast to its southwest extremity, was entered in one day by one man upon these soldiers' and sailors' certificates. A non-mineral affidavit was made as to each piece of land so entered.

The Government cannot afford to pass this bill; public morality forbids it, even if the Government were able and willing to give away its lands.

Mr. FORNEY, in his speech on this bill in the House, would have it appear as if the mineral lands in this State were an insignificant part of the public domain. He says that "the mineralogist reported that there were some valuable coal lands among them." (the public lands.) I am not myself acquainted with the extent of the coal lands in this State, but I have been told by those in whom I have confidence that for extent and value the lands embraced in the Warrior, the Coosa, and the Cahaba coal fields of Alabama are not to be equaled anywhere else on the face of the globe. My employment as special counsel of the Government in the investigation and prosecution of the fraudulent land entries in this State enables me to speak knowingly of the character of the entries to be legalized by this bill, and also as to the value of the lands embraced in the said entries.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE TURNER.

I know nothing of this gentleman except his legal capacity, but I have heard these identical statements commended as just by a man thoroughly familiar with the land laws of the United States. I do not say that anybody in the world has an unjust, unlawful, or dishonorable motive in connection with the bill, but it is a reversal of the wise policy of this Government, and the matter ought to be inquired into further before the bill shall be passed.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of twelve o'clock will arrive in a minute.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Chair hold—

Mr. ROLLINS. Regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the hour of twelve o'clock arrives the Chair has to announce that the morning hour is through and that the Calendar is in order.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for a few moments to reply to the remarks made by the Senator from Connecticut. It is due to myself personally that I should have that opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MORRILL. I must move to postpone all present and prior orders in order to take up the tax bill.

Mr. FERRY. I hope the Senator from Vermont will allow me to call up the post-route bill. It is very important that it should pass so as to go to the House and have our amendments acted on there. Every Senator is interested in it, and as the bill has been printed and laid on the desks of Senators, I think it will take but very little time to pass it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks consent of the Senate to reply to the Senator from Connecticut. Is there objection to his replying to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope there will be no objection; but I wish to say before the Senator begins that I have read this letter of the special counsel of the United States simply as a matter of public duty, without the slightest idea that it is possible to reproach the Senator from Alabama with any unworthy motive in his views.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Alabama proceeding?

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose the Senator from Alabama does not require much time?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir; I will not impose upon the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I will not object.

Mr. MORGAN. Whenever the Senate desires me to stop, of course I will do it.

The person who signs himself as special counsel for the United States, Mr. George Turner, has taken that letter or the substance of it, if not the identical letter, before two Secretaries of the Interior, Mr. Kirkwood and Mr. Teller, and he has asked for employment to resist what he calls illegal entries of coal lands in Alabama, and also to file bills in equity to the amount of hundreds at the expense of the Government of the United States to tear up patents that have been issued there for a great many years. Both these Secretaries refused him that job. He then found himself a convenient tool for two railway companies, land-grant railway companies, whose grants border this coal-land region and take in a very considerable part of it. These railway companies have established their headquarters in Washington City for the purpose of preventing the passage of this bill. They have got from the Government of the United States large land grants. They desire that the lands of the United States shall not be brought into competition with the coal lands in their grants. They border this coal field and cut it off entirely from access to the outside world. This land has been in market as coal land now for a number of years, not less than ten or twelve, at the Government prices, which are $20 per acre within fifteen miles of the line of a railway, and $15 an acre for the other coal lands.

During that period of time not one acre of this land has ever been sold; and the Government of the United States may keep the land there for fifty years and it will never sell an acre of it at either $15 or $20, and the law as it stands enables the land-grant railway companies to open their lands to market at prices just below $15, and just below $20, and while we are choking down all enterprise and all industry relating to iron manufacture and coal mining in the great body of the coal belt of that State, we are merely conferring these privileges on these land-grant roads, and they are here to obstruct the Congress of the United States, to cast imputation upon the Interior Department, and upon Senators and members of the House of Representatives for their desire to open these lands to market.

This bill does not even claim what the Congress of the United States did not hesitate to grant to Kansas, to Missouri, to Michigan, and to Minnesota, for this bill provides that every foot of this land that has been segregated and called coal land shall first be put up in the regular manner that all public lands are set for sale at public auction. They cannot sell for less than a dollar and a quarter an acre; they can sell for as much more as the private buyers choose to bid for them. We desire to invite the capital of other sections of the world into our country; we desire that this great body of coal lands shall not be locked up, and that men who own capital and who are able to buy land shall not be denied the privilege of going there unless they pay fortunes for tracts of land that are mere experiments.

The Senator from Connecticut said that a geological survey had been made of this land. That is not a correct statement of the fact. Certain geological explorations have been made by interested parties; some by railway employes, some by State geologists, and Mr. Winter, one of the geologists of the Interior Department, went to work for the purpose of ascertaining what land should be segregated. I have his report here. He says there is a large body of lands which are claimed to be coal lands because they fall within the coal measure. It is impossible without test and experiment to tell which of these lands might be or might not be valuable for mining. The fact is that there is probably not more than one-twentieth part of these lands that will ever be available for mining purposes owing to the situation, the topography of the country. Persons who are interested, who make experiments, can go there and ascertain, if they wish to do so, what lands are valuable for mining and what are not. Mr. Schurz, acting upon Mr. Winter's report, drew very large lines around this body of country and called it all coal land, when perhaps there was not more than one-tenth part of it that could ever be valuable as a mining country. Then Mr. Schurz, in order to do justice to the people who wanted to go in there and make agricultural settlements, invented an affidavit called a non-mineral affidavit, by which a man could swear that he was not informed and did not believe that the land that he was entering for a homestead was mineral. There may have been some frauds perpetrated in this matter; I dare say there have been, as there have been in every class of entries of public land. There is not a mineral reservation in the United States which has not given rise to some frauds in entries; but Governor Smith, who is now the district attorney of the United States for that district, made an investigation of this subject and made a number of reports. I think there are about three hundred and forty or three hundred and fifty cases where he has made objections to the confirmation of the title.

These cases stand suspended in the Land Department now, the Secretary of the Interior having gone to the full extent that he thought was at all necessary to protect the Government against any fraudulent entries, if there be any there, and every one of these cases is suspended. This bill does not ratify or confirm anything except an honest, bona fide entry of land; and these suspended cases, when they come to be heard and decided upon by the Secretary, will either result in being thrown out of the Department or in the confirmation of the entries by the Secretary of the Interior. The Government has taken the most exact care to protect itself and to protect everybody else by its orders in this matter.

When Mr. Teller came into office this subject was drawn to his attention; all of these demands, all of these reports, all of these complaints were laid before him. He made a thorough investigation of the whole matter, and he writes this letter addressed to me:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 10, 1882.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 7th instant, and the inclosed copy of Senate bill 140—

A precise copy of this bill—to regulate the disposal of coal lands in the State of Alabama, with the report of the Senate committee thereon. The report contains a letter from my immediate predecessor, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who submitted draft of bill on the subject, which you state is embodied in Senate bill 140.

The bill meets my entire approval, and will, I hope, become a law.
Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN, United States Senate.

I do not know how much further I need go to vindicate my action in this matter. This bill originated in the House. It went through the committee of the House and through the House of Representatives, and they made a most searching examination into the whole case.

All I ask is that men who have received monopolies under Congressional action in the United States shall not shut out the capital of the country in all its borders from coming to our State and investing in these public lands. We never have sold an acre of that coal land yet under the existing law. The Congress of the United States made no sort of hesitancy in wiping these laws out so far as Kansas, Missouri, Minnesota, and Michigan are concerned.

I drew this subject to the attention of the Senate nearly two years ago, and the Senate passed a bill in the language of the Kansas bill as an amendment to another bill that was in this body at that time, and that without objection; but these men who want to keep up lawsuits and who want to make money by keeping this coal land in litigation swarm this capital for the purpose of casting imputation on the conduct of Senators here who are representing their States and trying to get their States open to settlement, to enterprise, and to industry. The State of Alabama no doubt has valuable minerals in it.

Mr. LOGAN. Do you say the same law was passed in reference to coal lands in Kansas?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir; and Missouri; only a law without any restriction at all, a perfectly broad law. Michigan and Minnesota too have had the same law. There never was any sound policy in the laws locking up coal and iron lands against settlement. They ought not to be put on the ground of being mineral lands that contain the precious metals. They ought to be thrown open to settlement, and capital and industry ought to be invited into such lands as these for the benefit of the country at large. It is just as important to have coal and iron as it is to have corn and cotton.

That is all I desire to say this morning about it. I suppose, of course, the Senate will not indulge me far enough to pass the bill; I shall have to let it go over, though I regret it very much, for it is retarding settlement in that State. The gentleman who is assaulted here as being at the head of a company who went into Alabama and paid a million of dollars (for he did so) for a coal bed that had been entered there for many years is one of the most distinguished Republicans of the State of Tennessee, and a thoroughly honorable man, a man of very high character. He is the man who is assailed here by a person who represents interests that do not appear and come to the front and show themselves, though I know perfectly well what they are.

Mr. HALE. I wish to submit a conference report.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the House concurrent resolution for the printing of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. A. S. McCLURE of Ohio, Mr. E. K. VALENTINE of Nebraska, and Mr. W. M. SPRINGER of Illinois the conferees on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2997) granting right of way to the Fremont, Elk Horn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company across the Niobrara military reservation, in the State of Nebraska, and authorizing the sale of a portion of said reservation, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. G. R. DAVIS of Illinois, Mr. H. J. SPOONER of Rhode Island, and Mr. COLUMBUS UPSON of Texas the conferees on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution granting the use of the Rotunda and adjacent rooms to the Garfield monument committee, Society of the Army of the Cumberland, from the 25th of November to the 3d of December, 1882, to hold a bazaar and reception, the object being to raise a fund to aid in the erection of a statue at Washington to the memory of the late President Garfield.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I submit a conference report.

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 47 to the bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purpose, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

EUGENE HALE,

W. B. ALLISON,

F. M. COCKRELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

FRANK HISCOCK,

GEO. M. ROBESON,

S. S. COX,

Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of this conference report?

The question being put, it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. HALE. This is the third report upon the deficiency bill. There has been nothing between the conferees excepting the question of Senatorial mileage. It has been submitted to the House three times, and the vote in favor of the House maintaining its position has increased each time. While the report has been made that we are unable to agree, I feel constrained to say to the Senate that my belief is that this is a proposition on which the House will not recede from its position. The Senate is in the position of seeking to put this proposition on the bill and sending it to the House. We are the moving party. I do not suppose we are in a position where we can drive the House after it has established its position, as I think it has, firmly. I do not see any use in prolonging the contest, being fully convinced that it will only end in one way, and that is in the Senate receding; and, therefore, I make the motion now and submit it to the decision of the Senate, that the Senate recede from this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope we shall do it. I do not think it is a proposition that we ought to have made originally. The amount of mileage we receive is enough compensation, and I trust we shall recede.

Mr. SLATER. I trust the Senate will not recede from its position. To do so would be a matter of great injustice to those Senators who live at a long distance from the capital and who came here at great inconvenience to attend the called session last fall. It is but just to those who live at great distances that they should be protected in this matter. Some Senators came here at severe inconvenience.

Mr. HALE. I realize the force of the position of the Senator from Oregon. I believe as much as he does that the Senate had the right to have this mileage, that it is only just on account of the unusual expense that Senators were subjected to last summer; but let me ask the Senator, does he believe that we can drive the House on this proposition? That is the question. Does he believe that we can do any more than we have done? We have had three conferences; the question has been put three times to the House, and that body grows stronger and stronger. Now, what will be gained? Would the Senator, for instance, on this issue lose the deficiency bill?

Mr. SLATER. The Senate has well taken its position and considerably taken it; and it ought to stand by it and adhere to it.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think we could stand before the country if we were to lose this bill on this issue?

Mr. SLATER. I have no doubt about it at all.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator in the justice of the claim; but I cannot go as far as that.

Mr. SLATER. I believe the country will sustain the Senate in its position.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to say as one of the conference committee of the Senate, that I do not concur with the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. The Senator understands that I make the motion myself.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the Senator does not make this motion from the conference committee, but simply as an individual Senator. I think the Senate ought not to recede. I do not think the Senate can honorably recede.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe that this mileage is just and right, that the Senate is fairly entitled to it in the forum of justice because Senators were compelled to come here from great distances and to incur expense; but the law, which we are all bound to obey, allows mileage only for regular sessions of Congress. The Senate proposed to change the law. Now the Senate cannot stand upon a proposition to defeat one of the regular appropriation bills in order to secure a change of the law. The uniform rule, never contested until recently, was that where either House proposed to change the law and the other declined, even less determinedly than has been done in this case, the House proposing the change of the law must recede; otherwise you could not pass the appropriation bills.

Therefore, although I think it very hard and unjust, especially to Senators from remote States, to be compelled to pay their own expenses here, I feel bound to vote to recede on the ground that we have no right to compel the House to agree to a change in existing law by an amendment to an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I hope never to hear again in my life a discussion of the question of our own pay. I would rather let almost any rate of compensation be fixed than have this question perpetually coming before us as it has for the last few years. While we may agree with the Senator from Ohio in his opinion as to the justice of this appropriation, we should remember that from the necessity of the case members of legislative bodies are the only class of public officers who are trusted by the people with the privilege of fixing their compensation. We being the law-making power fixing the compensation for everybody else, trusting no other public officer to determine his own, the people trust us with the great confidence of permitting us to fix our own.

Under these circumstances it seems to me that where there is any fair and reasonable difference of opinion about the justice of compensation we should yield the point, rather err on the side of making it too little than too much. Now, the House of Representatives, the co-ordinate body in the Government, thinks that it is wise to adhere to the existing law on the subject of mileage; and whatever inequalities may exist in that should be borne rather than to multiply the allowances. I hope, therefore, the Senate will recede.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I fear that the issue raised between the two Houses on this subject may be considered almost too personal an issue to the members of this body to justify their risking the passage of one of the general appropriation bills of the Government. At the same time there ought to be an expression, emphatic and positive, on the part of the Senate, and they ought to do all that they can do to place before the country their opinion of the justice and propriety of the measure that they propose. Therefore I shall be willing to vote that the Senate recede from this proposition, but I suggest that a resolution be introduced by the gentleman in charge of this bill, the chairman of the conference committee, proposing to pay the mileage due to Senators for the extra session, and that it be adopted unanimously by unanimous consent without the formality of reference or lying over for a day. I think it then will present, as a Senate resolution, two things: our clear and unanimous opinion in regard to the propriety of this measure, and our unwillingness for personal reasons that affect the individual interests of members of this body, however much based on justice and reason, to stand in the way of the passage of an appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will prepare that resolution and introduce it as soon as this matter has passed from the consideration of the Senate. I for one will be very glad to vote for and support it.

Mr. BAYARD. I should rather that the Senator from Maine, he having been indicated by the Senate as its representative, he having been the negotiator on every part of this proposition—I should rather that he having full knowledge of the proceedings in conference should introduce the resolution; but that is a very unimportant question.

Mr. HALE. I have no sensitiveness about it one way or the other. If the Senator will draft the resolution, either he or I will introduce it.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to offer the resolution in the precise terms of the amendment.

Mr. PENDLETON. I trust that the motion of the Senator from Maine will prevail. Concurring exactly in what has been said by the Senator from Maine as to the justice of this demand, as to the propriety of enforcing it in the strongest possible manner that the Senate can, I am made painfully aware that there are many people in Washington suffering to-day from the non-passage of this bill. The clerks of the Census Bureau have been three months without pay, and the passage of this deficiency bill is the only method by which they can be relieved from actual want at this moment.

Mr. HALE. And the teachers in the city.

Mr. PENDLETON. And the teachers. I happen to know a number of persons who come within the category of census clerks, and therefore my attention was directed to that fact. I cannot with any sense of justice continue this struggle with the House for the purpose of giving Senators mileage, however much I may think it their due, while these poor people have been kept out of their money for months, and for one month at least by this struggle. I trust the motion of the Senator from Maine will prevail.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, some things have been said in the House of Representatives that I think call for a statement of the real condition of this question so far as the Senate is concerned.

I do not believe that members of the Senate or the House of Representatives ought to have mileage if they are called here in extra session because of any neglect of legislation, any neglect of public duties, any failure to pass all the necessary bills. That would be an occasion of their own making, and they ought not to lay claim to mileage for a session thus occasioned. The occasion of the session named in this amendment was far different. It was caused by a great public calamity, caused by the death of the late President of the United States and the accession of the present Executive to that position, and it found the members of the Senate scattered all over the country, some perhaps in Europe, some in the most distant parts of this continent, some engaged in professional business in court who had to give up their engagements and come here to perform the superior duty that was imposed upon them by their position.

Under these circumstances many Senators came here at far heavier expense and far greater sacrifice than they would be compensated in by the small and trifling sum that is involved in this proposition. A higher equity never supported a claim than supports this. But I bow to the superior wisdom of the House of Representatives, who know of course what we ought to have better than we know ourselves. I concede that they judge of not only their own perquisites, privileges, and pay, but of ours also; and I have not the slightest reluctance so far as I am concerned in concurring in the suggestion, which I have long been prepared for, on the part of the Senator from Maine, and letting this matter go, but I was not willing to let it go without a square statement of the high and powerful equities that are overruled by the decision of the House on this subject.

Mr. SLATER. I desire to state, in addition to what I have already said, that it seems to me, after what has been said in the House, that the Senate can hardly recede from its position. While I am not perhaps entitled to quote here directly what has been said, it seems to me the debate there has been disrespectful and personal to the Senate, and that the Senate might justly and properly take umbrage at the manner in which this question has been treated.

In the three years I have served here I have been twice summoned, I may say summarily, from the extreme verge of the continent, so that the most expeditious haste had to be made, to reach the sessions of the Senate, and under most embarrassing circumstances the last time to attend the session which is now in controversy. I was only able to reach here in time by receiving information of the call by telegraph; and I remember distinctly well that as I stepped into the stage at my door I received a telegram from the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON,] urging my presence in this city. I made one of the shortest trips ever made across the continent and reached here only in time to be present when the session opened, at great expense and great discomfort personally, and at great disadvantage to my private affairs.

It seems to me that these things ought to be considered. While I am willing to bow to the majority of the Senate and to the suggestions of older members, it seems to me that if we do recede from our position we are practically receding from everything, and we have no right to expect from the tone and temper exhibited in the House any better or more respectable consideration of the resolution proposed and suggested by the Senator from Delaware than the amendment has received. I think it will only be laughed out of the House.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I fully concur with the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Ohio. I believe it will be best for the public interests to accept the suggestion made by the Senator from Delaware, and I shall vote with him on the question.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, this question ought not to be connected with the necessities of any public employé of the Government, the necessities of anybody in the civil service, the Census Bureau, who may be deprived of his compensation by reason of the action of the House. It ought to be considered in the light of a constitutional obligation, that there cannot be a performance of the duty of assembling here under a proclamation of the President of the persons designated by the States unless the means for their transportation is furnished, and it is not in the power of the House of Representatives to say when the President of the United States commands the assembling of the Senators here for the performance of a constitutional duty, "You shall not have the means to come, and we will decide whether or not the public money shall be expended for that purpose." If we concede this, we put it in the power of a majority of the House of Representatives to stop the continual discharge of the constitutional duties of Senators.

This might well be remedied and ought to be remedied by a practice of providing the compensation of Senators and Representatives and appropriating for it and for their expenses upon a separate bill. It ought never to be allowed that the Senate should concede its constitutional right and duty to require an appropriation to be made for the performance of its constitutional duty, because of the necessities of the public service to their dependents. I would insist, if I had the power, upon this constitutional duty and right to the uttermost; not because I am not willing to give up this sum of money, for I am willing that my salary shall go unpaid and every Senator here of every party would prefer to-day to deprive himself of every dollar of compensation for service in the Senate to conceding this right on the part of the House of Representatives, unsustained as it is by any provision of the Constitution, by any rational argument, or by any sound interpretation of public duty.

Mr. HALE. I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. SLATER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate recede from its position on the deficiency bill on the mileage question. On that motion the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. SLATER. I desire to say just one word more. I am perfectly satisfied from communication I have had with various members of the House that if the Senate adheres to its position the House will recede.

Mr. HALE. I am perfectly satisfied they will not.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS, (when Mr. JACKSON's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. JACKSON] is absent from the city. If present, he would vote "yea." Upon political questions he is paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB,] but not on a question like this.

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—47.

MILEAGE TO SENATORS.

Mr. BAYARD. I now offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 106) providing for the payment of mileage to Senators; and it was read at length, as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That for the payment of mileage to Senators who attended the special session of the Senate convened on the 10th day of October, 1881, by proclamation of the President, the sum of $33,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was read three times.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the yeas and nays on its passage.

Mr. MORGAN. The vote is unanimous. It is not necessary to record our names.

Mr. BROWN. Let it be recorded that the vote is unanimous.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the passage of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and it is passed unanimously.

PRINTING OF AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the House concurrent resolution to print the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore being authorized to appoint the committee, Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. VEST were appointed the conferees on the part of the Senate.

NIOBRARA MILITARY RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2997) granting right of way to the Fremont, Elk Horn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company across the Niobrara military reservation, in the State of Nebraska, and authorizing the sale of a portion of said reservation, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore being authorized to appoint the committee, Mr. LOGAN, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. HARRISON were appointed the conferees on the part of the Senate.

USE OF ROTUNDA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following House concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the use of the Rotunda and adjacent rooms be granted to the Garfield monument committee Society of the Army of the Cumberland, from the 25th of November to the 3d of December, 1882, to hold a bazaar and reception, the object being to raise a fund to aid in the erection of a statue at Washington to the memory of the late President Garfield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table unless some Senator asks to have it considered.

Mr. MORRILL. It may as well be considered now.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will let the resolution be acted on without a reference.

Mr. ANTHONY. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

The resolution was concurred in.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States:

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Washington, August 4, 1882.

To the Senate of the United States:

In reply to a resolution of the Senate passed April 25, 1882, I transmit herewith a communication, with accompanying papers, from the Secretary of the Navy, in relation to the title by which the United States holds the land now occupied as a navy-yard at Boston, Massachusetts.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

Mr. HOAR. I move that that be printed and lie on the table. The motion was agreed to.

RAILROADS IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to submit a resolution, and ask its present consideration; it will not take a minute.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, directed to report to the Senate such information as the records of that Department contain as to the basis upon which the Government settled with certain railroad companies in Tennessee for the claim of the Government rolling-stock and material purchased from the United States by said railroad companies in or about the year 1865, with copies of the correspondence specified in the paper hereto attached, on the subject of said settlement.

It is not necessary to read the accompanying paper.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

SAMUEL CHASE BARNEY.

Mr. FARLEY. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 660) for the relief of Samuel Chase Barney, to report it favorably and without amendment. The committee have adopted the House report, and I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill now. It will not take five minutes to dispose of it.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. If it gives rise to any debate I must object.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is not a report from a committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California reports a bill from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PLATT. What is the character of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Let the bill be read, and then if it leads to discussion I shall object to its consideration.

Mr. ROLLINS. I desire to know what the bill is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

DUTY ON KNIT GOODS.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I move to lay aside informally the regular order, which I understand is the tax bill—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no regular order now except the consideration of the Calendar. The proper motion would be to postpone.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Whatever the proper motion is. I am not familiar with the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the consideration of bills on the Calendar under the Anthony rule. Is there objection to postponing it? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Now I move to take up the knit-goods bill, being the bill (H. R. No. 6715) to correct an error in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. I desire very briefly to state my personal reasons for moving to take up this bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to taking up this bill? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that I should resist taking up this bill now, only that I understand that the reasons of the Senator from New York for acting upon it now are that he is unwell, and is obliged to leave to go home. I shall insist immediately after the consideration of this bill on calling up the tax bill, and persisting in it until it is ended.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I will briefly state my reasons for asking the action of the Senate on this bill at this time. This is what is known as the knit-goods bill. It is for the relief of an industry of large proportions in my State. I think the census report shows that it is followed much more largely in that State than in any other State in the Union.

For several weeks we have gone on discussing a general tax bill for the relief of internal taxes and connected with it many of the tariff questions. It was made evident in the Senate yesterday, when the chairman of the Finance Committee made a proposition to the other side to take what is known as the internal-revenue bill substantially as it came from the House, with two or three amendments which had been generally consented to, and put it upon its passage, and that proposition would not be accepted by the opposition, as it was objected to by several Senators, who claimed that much more time would be required to perfect it and to debate it, and one Senator, notably the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] stated that it would take at least until October to finish the completion of the consideration of that bill, and that more than thirty-five amendments were still pending and that as many more would be offered upon other questions relating to the tariff—it seems, then, to be evident that if we are to continue the consideration of that bill thus indefinitely until next fall or till next winter, all other important measures must be laid aside and passed over.

This measure which I have called up is a matter of such great importance not only to the people of my own State but to many other States in the Union, that I have felt it incumbent upon me to ask the Senate to take up this bill and to lay aside informally the tax bill.

As I have said, it is a matter of great importance to many of my constituents. I have remained here week after week listening to the discussion of the general internal-revenue and tariff bill, hoping that some result might be arrived at. I find myself now, Mr. President, as the Senator from Vermont has suggested, suffering from an infirmity and under the charge of the doctor. I am well aware that my condition will not be at all improved so long as I shall remain in this climate, but I am unwilling to leave my seat here and to leave this session without making an honest effort to pass this bill. It is, as all the Senate know, a bill to correct a mistake in the Revised Statutes.

When what is known as the woolen tariff was made in 1867 a high duty, we may say, was placed upon raw wool, and the duties upon woolen goods were made to correspond to that. First a duty was placed upon the woolen goods which was supposed to be commensurate with that placed upon the raw material, and then in addition to that there was placed upon woolen goods a duty which is about equal to the ordinary duties upon all imported goods of I think 35 or 45 per cent., I do not remember which.

In the revising of the statute, by accident I must assume, a few words were dropped out the result of which is entirely to change the effect of that tariff upon knit goods in this respect. The Treasury Department went on levying the same rate of duties upon knit goods as previously. The importers appealed and finally carried the case to the Supreme Court, and the decision has been that as these words were omitted in the Revised Statutes this extra duty which is imposed on all other woolen goods could no longer be imposed on this class of goods.

The condition of affairs is now that a large industry having been built up under what was the original law and what was supposed to be the Revised Statutes finds itself now helpless and at the feet of Congress asking for relief. It is a simple question of putting the law back where it was before the statutes were revised.

Now, Mr. President, they are met with this condition of affairs, that the duty levied on their class of goods is really less than was levied on the raw material; consequently, instead of having the ordinary protection which is given to silk goods and cotton goods and all other classes of woolen goods, they are entirely without protection; in fact, it is worse for them than free trade, and therefore I appeal to the Senate that they shall pass this House bill and put this matter back simply where it was before the statutes were revised, before the Supreme Court gave this decision, and let the matter rest. The entire tariff then goes to the tariff commission, which is now investigating it, and will undoubtedly be reported back to the next session of Congress. Then, if Congress in its wisdom shall see fit to change the duty upon woolen goods, it will of course change it upon knit goods as well as upon blankets or any other kind of woolen goods.

This bill, in short, simply puts this class of goods upon a par with all other classes of manufactures of woolens in this country. It is simply an act of justice to the men employed, to the capital invested in this business, and to those who have given their time to it, that this error should be corrected.

I beg of the Senate and of all Senators that this bill may in no way be interfered with by amendments. Let it be discussed as fully as the Senate may desire to discuss it, and then let it stand entirely upon its merits as it passed the House. Let amendments pertaining to the internal revenue and to the tariff be attached to the other bill which has been under discussion so long, and which it seems to-day is evidently to continue under discussion for so long a time to come.

These, Mr. President, are chiefly the reasons why I have asked the Senate to take up this bill and pass it as it is.

Mr. BAYARD obtained the floor.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me a moment?

Mr. BAYARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALL. I ask the consent of the Senator from New York to allow me to bring before the Senate a bill that will require no delay and no explanation. It is a bill passed by the House granting the right of way over an Indian reservation to a railroad which is now stopped because of the absence of the necessary legislation.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I think we can dispose of this bill in a short time. If anybody desires to discuss it we can have a fair, square vote on its merits. Every man can make his record, and then I shall have no objection to the Senator from Florida calling up his bill. I desire action on this bill.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I am perfectly ready that the Senate without the slightest disposition on my part to interpose any irregular opposition to the consideration of any measure, they may desire to consider, shall take up this bill and consider it. The Senate will observe that the title of this bill has been amended by the Committee on Finance to correspond with the facts. It was entitled a bill "to correct an error in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States." That was a misnomer. There was no error in that section of the statutes. But the bill is in fact to amend section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, by placing a certain class of woolen manufacture under a different schedule and at a higher rate of duty than the law ever has imposed upon that particular fabric.

This is but an illustration of the incongruity and incompleteness and injustice of the present tariff laws. There is no doubt that the protest made in 1873 against the ruling of the customs officials at the port of New York, the ruling being upheld by the Treasury Department and the case passing under the statute into the courts of law, has only been decided by the Supreme Court within about fifteen months. Early in the spring of 1881 the Supreme Court decided that these knitted woolen goods, knitted on frames, were not affected by the tariff law of 1867, but that they were otherwise enumerated and subject to duty under a certain schedule of the tariff as it stands now in the Revised Statutes. There was no error in the transfer of the law to the Revised Statutes. I know that very suggestion was made, and a bill was brought into the Senate in order to avoid any consideration of the tariff laws by Congress; it was brought into the Senate under the allegation that there had been an error in the codification of the laws and their transportation into the Revised Statutes, which changed the duty upon this particular article of manufacture. That bill was not sent to the Committee on Finance; it was sent to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and that committee upon examining the decision of the Supreme Court felt themselves impelled to report the bill back and commit it to the Committee on Finance, where it lay and where no action whatever was taken upon it nor mention made of it. In the mean time in the House of Representatives, seeing this, what I believe to be an accident in the tariff, not an error in the sense of a clerical omission—

Mr. MORRILL. Allow me—

Mr. BAYARD. May I make my statement? Then I will give way to my friend with pleasure. A bill was introduced in the House of Representatives with the title to correct an error, and I believe they made themselves a clerical error by putting in the wrong section in their haste. However, it came to the Senate, and here it is now, its title amended to state the facts.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desired to correct the Senator in one respect. The Committee on the Revision of the Laws, as I understand, were unanimous in favor of the correction. When the bill was sent to the Finance Committee the Senator says it never was called up. He is mistaken; it was called up and decided that it was a tariff measure, that the Senate could not originate.

Mr. BAYARD. Yes, that is true, and there was the difficulty. We cannot originate bills touching the revenue. You cannot put it under the color of the revision of an error in the statutes. It really was not an error in the revision; that is a mistake. There is this plain, palpable fault in the present tariff law as interpreted by the Supreme Court; that to-day there is a tax upon raw wool which is in excess of the tax upon this manufacture of wool called knitted goods on frames. No man can sustain that; no man can frame a tariff discriminating against your own labor and your own manufacture, and no man proposes to do so that I have ever heard.

Therefore the law of 1842 (which I shall show described these goods by that specific description which the Supreme Court says controls the general allocation of the article in the tariff) taxed these goods under the same name under which they are taxed to-day. They were taxed under the same name in the tariff of 1861. They were taxed under the same name in the tariff of 1842, and then were taxed 30 per cent. ad valorem. Under the tariff of 1857 the duty was lowered to 24 per cent. It was raised to 35 per cent. by the tariff of July, 1862, and March, 1863, and it was placed at 35 per cent. by the tariff of June 30, 1864, and March 3, 1865. Now the question was whether the tariff law of 1867 did or did not embrace this schedule of articles, and the Supreme Court decided that it did not.

I have before me and the Senate shall have before it the authorized digests by Heyl, by Ogden, and by other tariff experts employed by the Treasury Department to prepare these tariff laws for the use of the customs officers in which this description of manufacture is allocated in the same place precisely, in the same schedule that the Revised Statutes place it in. I will agree that it requires a most acute criticism, I will agree that it requires a most penetrating examination to find out under our present tariff on wools and woollens or steel or iron what is the duty upon almost any complicated fabric of manufacture. It is that very vice in our present tariff that has brought according to the testimony of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. French, 18,000 cases upon the dockets of the courts of justice to ascertain what the duty is, the importer averring a lower and the Treasury Department averring a higher rate of duty, and those cases must be submitted to the courts and there stands that fearful mass of litigation of itself constituting a vast tax upon the property of the country, throwing all business into confusion, which is the result of a tariff so complicated, so incongruous, so out of date to all the progress in invention, in art, in science, in manufacture that you cannot successfully carry on a business in this country to-day under a new invention unless your tariff is adjusted to it according to common sense and the interpretation of plain language and the requirements of the commerce of the day.

What has been the consequence? These manufacturers of knit goods in this country, as estimable and worthy a class of my fellow-citizens as any we have, have just the same sympathy from me if public laws shall bear hardly upon them as any other class of men here; but they are suffering to-day under a judicial interpretation of the tariff, and many thousand others are suffering also in other ways. There are duties under this tariff absolutely prohibitory, and I wish to say that if any of these articles are restored to the schedule or are now to be placed there—for they never were there—by the action of Congress on Schedule L instead of Schedule M, so that 50 cents per pound upon the weight of the imported article shall be added, you will have on more than one half of all these articles of common popular wear and use a duty absolutely prohibitory. Upon a large proportion of the woolen caps knitted on frames, stockings knitted on frames, drawers knitted on frames, undershirts knitted on frames, you scarcely have received in the last five years $500 duty. I propose to deal with this tariff question upon the broadest, purest, and most just terms that I can. I propose to make no exception. If this bill shall be taken up, if it shall come before the Senate I shall move to amend it. It has already been amended and it must go back to the House for its concurrence in the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inform the Senator from Delaware that the bill is up for consideration.

Mr. BAYARD. All the same—

Mr. COCKRELL. How did it get up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By a vote of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. By unanimous consent.

Mr. COCKRELL. I beg pardon, there was no vote taken, and I was here and listening to every word.

Mr. BAYARD. No such question was put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Reporter's notes will show it.

Mr. COCKRELL. There was no vote to take it up.

Mr. McMILLAN. It was distinctly put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair put the question and asked if there was any objection to taking up this bill at the request of the Senator from New York. Unanimous consent was given.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. No one objected.

Mr. COCKRELL. Nobody knew it. I did not hear it. I was in my seat and listening to what the Senator was saying.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair put the question in as loud a voice as he could, and the bill was read by its title.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I not only gave the number of the bill but I stated distinctly it was what was known as the knit-goods bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understood the Senator to say distinctly what it was, and he went right on with his remarks, and I did not hear one solitary word that was said about submitting it to the Senate.

Mr. McMILLAN. The question was put twice.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The Chair asked if there was objection. No objection was made, and the President distinctly said "the bill is before the Senate."

Mr. McMILLAN. The question was put twice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York was about going on with his speech when the Senator from Ohio told him he had better wait until the bill was taken up. Thereupon the President of the Senate put the question to the Senate, and it so appears in the Reporter's notes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt it was an inadvertence that some gentleman over there did not object; but no objection was made.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question was put in such a way that it could not be heard, for I was listening.

Mr. SHERMAN. On the contrary, I thought the attention of every Senator was drawn to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was watching it distinctly.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senate has not been so still in two days as when the question was put.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from New York went on and proceeded with making a statement which I understood was preliminary to putting the question to the Senate to take up the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope there will be no complaint, because I am perfectly willing as an individual that the vote shall be taken upon taking up the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have understood all the time that the question of taking it up was under consideration.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am perfectly willing myself that the vote shall be taken on taking it up. I would have no man surprised.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri makes a reflection on the Chair.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not make a reflection on the Chair, and meant no such thing. I only meant to say that I was here listening, and I thought certainly there must be a mistake on the part of the Chair. I was listening distinctly to hear it, and the Senator from New York was talking on the motion to take up. I so understood.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator's attention must have been momentarily diverted. Everybody heard it on our side.

Mr. COCKRELL. Nobody around me here heard it. If there is any one on this side of the Chamber who heard it, I would thank him to state it.

Mr. MORGAN. I have to state that I heard it, and I understood that the bill was taken up without objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asked if there was any objection in as loud a voice as he could.

Mr. COCKRELL. A half dozen Senators here say they did not hear it, and I know I was watching to hear it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to my friend that I heard it distinctly, and the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] after the bill was taken up, got up and said that as soon as this bill was disposed of he would call up what is known as the tax bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. And the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] got up and asked the Senator from New York to permit the bill to be laid aside temporarily to take up a bill granting the right of way to a railroad through a military reservation.

Mr. CALL. I understood the facts as stated by the Chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no doubt about it. I called attention to it myself.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I did not know that the bill was before the Senate, and supposed I was arguing a motion to take it up; but it seems, although I cannot imagine how, that it is. As it is, I shall feel myself now at liberty to refer to the merits of the bill. I supposed the question was whether it should be taken up, and the Senator from New York in moving to take it up gave what he supposed to be the legislative history of this bill, and therefore as he had referred to it for that reason I thought I was justified in stating what I believe to be the facts of the case.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that you have by this bill selected a single branch of manufacturing industry which I will admit to be entitled precisely to the same favor and the same care of the Legislature as every other, which finds itself by reason of the obscurity of the tariff and under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States lately rendered, in the unfavorable position of having a higher duty upon the foreign raw material which enters into its product than is imposed on the manufactured fabric. I will agree that is not the way the tariff should be framed. Not only is it not a tariff for revenue but it is a tariff for the protection of the industry of foreigners.

There is already upon this article of knitted woolen goods a tariff duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem, and it is proposed to add 50 cents a pound. That will more than double the tax. That will make a duty of not less than 70 per cent. and in many cases of more than 90 per cent. upon certain classes of these manufactured goods.

I wish to submit to the reason and justice of Senators, are we now in the month of August, 1882, to create a prohibitory duty by an affirmative law? Do you believe in prohibitory tariffs? Do you think there is any ground of justice or right upon which a law can be passed that prohibits the importation of manufactured goods? I will read the statement of a man so careful in his statements, so high in intelligence and character as Mr. CARLISLE of Kentucky:

For instance, in the year 1880 the whole revenue derived from one grade of these goods was only $9.65, and from another $39.39, the rates of duty on them being 96½ and 92 per cent. respectively.

In 1881 the whole amount collected on one grade was $24.15 and on another $19.86, the rates of duty being 89½ and 88½ per cent. respectively.

That was the amount of revenue collected under the supposition that the rate now proposed by this bill, and which the Supreme Court of the United States said was illegally imposed to the extent of 50 cents per pound upon knit goods, shall be restored.

We speak of a tariff for revenue, a tariff for protection. I aver, as a proposition fundamental and true, that you have no right to use the taxing power of the Union except you do it for a public end, and not for the sake of private interest, however meritorious, and what public end is there in a tax that amounts to prohibition? It is a stifling of trade; it is the crushing of commerce and yields no revenue. It has no justification, and can have none, nor do I believe that such a principle will ever be sustained by an aroused and intelligent popular opinion in the United States when it is fairly discussed and comes to be understood.

I know not what may come from the tariff commission, but I do believe the time will come, and very shortly, when there will be a maximum of duties ad valorem established by law upon imported merchandise. If Mr. Clay and Mr. Webster, those two distinguished friends of a protective tariff, were willing to frame in 1833, as they did, a tariff that gradually should be scaled down to a maximum of duties of 20 per cent. ad valorem, where are we and what progress have we made when it is proposed to restore by affirmative legislation a tax which is shown to be nearer 100 than 90 per cent.?

Mr. MORRILL. I know the Senator will thank me to correct any error that he may make. So far as he states that Mr. Webster voted for or advocated the compromise measure of Mr. Clay in 1833 he is decidedly mistaken. His vote was the other way, his speech was the other way, and he so stated distinctly, as is reported in the debates. I will read just what is recorded:

Mr. Webster, of Massachusetts, was not averse to the introduction of the bill; but he could not at present see how he could concur in a measure which contained such a surrender as that contemplated by it.

Mr. Webster, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a series of resolutions expressive of his views in regard to the tariff, and declaring the impropriety and inexpediency of adopting a plan of reduction which should immediately or prospectively reject all discrimination on articles to be taxed, or give any pledge or assurance which would tend to restrain Congress from the full exercise of all its constitutional powers in giving reasonable protection to American industry.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator has read that extract from Mr. Young's Compilation on Customs and Tariff Legislation. I propose as this discussion shall proceed to bring him ample proof that Mr. Webster would have scoffed at such a tariff as is proposed to-day upon the woolen manufactures. I can find his arguments and reasons for voting against such an absurd proposition as that you are to tax an article until you virtually prohibit its importation and prevent the production of revenue.

Mr. MORRILL. That is a very different proposition from saying that he voted for the tariff of 1833.

Mr. BAYARD. I am very willing to invoke the great name of Mr. Webster against the Senator from Vermont, and do so very confidently. I say you cannot find in Mr. Webster's arguments or doctrines anything to sustain such a tariff as exists to-day and is now proposed here. I will show that to the Senator, I do not say to his heart's content, but I will show it to his intellectual satisfaction.

I wish to come back to the tariff history of this description of manufactures. Perhaps it would be well to refer to the last census bulletin to show the extent of capital engaged and the foreign wool used by the class of manufacturers in aid of whom this proposed amendment of the tariff is sought. Mr. Seaton, the Superintendent of the Census, in census bulletin No. 285, gives the statistics relating to manufactures from wool, and I will read from the title Hosiery and Knit Goods. It seems there were three hundred and fifty-four establishments in the United States. The capital employed was $15,133,991. The total number of hands employed was 28,328. Of males over the age of sixteen there were 7,395; of females over fifteen, 17,397; of youths under that age, 3,536. They consumed of foreign wool 448,789 pounds; they consumed of domestic wool 8,146,137 pounds.

As I make it, something less than 5 per cent. of the wool they consumed was foreign wool. The total value of their material was $14,054,199, and the value of their product was $28,613,727.

I do not stop now to make an estimate of the profits upon the manufacture, because that is a very complex and difficult question. The invention of new machinery, the discarding of old, its repairs, its changes, the adaptations to modern inventions, all require a great deal of money, which must be deducted from the sum total of the product. Therefore I do not state what the profit has been, although I have seen it estimated at about 14 per cent. per annum upon the capital engaged.

By the tariff of 1842 caps, gloves, socks, stockings, wove shirts and drawers, and all similar articles made on frames, worn by men, women, and children, and not otherwise provided for, were taxed 30 per cent. ad valorem. The same tax was continued on the same articles in the tariff of 1846. It was reduced to 24 per cent. in the tariff of 1857. It was advanced to 30 per cent. by the tariff of August, 1861. It was advanced to 35 per cent. in July, 1862, and kept at 35 per cent. in 1864. Then came the tariff of 1867. I hold in my hand the Digest of Heyl of 1870, adopted and used officially by order of the Treasury Department, and the Digest of E. D. Ogden in 1867, made by the order of the Treasury Department, and I find that those two officials continue the same allocation and classification of the articles in question. I read from page 170 of Heyl's Digest of Duties on Imports, 1870:

Caps, comforters, gloves, leggins, mitts, socks, stockings, wove shirts and drawers, and all similar articles, wholly or partly of worsted and not part wool or silk, made on frames, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Ogden in 1867, at page 156, has the same:

Caps, wove on frames, 35 per cent.; hose, wove on frames, 35 per cent.; drawers, wove on frames, 35 per cent.; gloves, wove on frames, 35 per cent.; mitts, wove on frames, 35 per cent.; shirts, wove on frames, 35 per cent.

There is the allocation and the classification of 1867 and of 1870, made without reference to the Revised Statutes at all, and that is what the Supreme Court decided in the cases in which the protests which were filed, and out of which grew the suit which was decided last year by the Supreme Court. I have the protest here and it is dated in the fall; and I have the response of the Secretary of the Treasury to it. The protest was taken under the statute in 1873, before the revision. The revision of the statutes was not passed until June, 1874.

Mr. PLATT. I have disliked very much to interrupt the Senator, but I trust he will pardon me for a single interruption, because I know he does not wish to make any misstatement.

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly not. If I had done so I should be very glad to be corrected.

Mr. PLATT. If it be true that the case decided in the Supreme Court was decided upon the protests made in 1873, before the revision, then the Supreme Court did not understand the case, because in the very opening words of their decision they say:

The question in this case is whether stockings of worsted, or worsted and cotton, made on frames, and worn by men, women, and children, imported after the Revised Statutes went into effect, June 22, 1874, are dutiable as knit goods, under Schedule L, class 3, section 2504, or as stockings under Schedule M.

The Supreme Court may have mistaken the case; it is possible they did not understand it correctly; but they understood it to be a case arising under the revision, because they say so.

Mr. BAYARD. Here is the answer of J. F. Hartley, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, dated November 3, 1873:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., November 3, 1873.

GENTLEMEN: The Department has, by letter of this date to the collector at New York, decided your appeal (955 B) dated the 16th ultimo, relating to the assessment of duties at 50 cents per pound and 35 per cent. ad valorem, less 10 per cent. on certain knit gloves and wristlets, by affirming his decision on the entries per Bremen, July 7; Hermann, September 2; Köln, July 28; New York, August 2; Deutschland, August 26; City of London, August 13, and Hansa, August 8; and by declining to entertain the appeal as to the entries per Rhein, June 23, and Hermann, July 22, 1873. The collector reports that case No. 406 did not arrive per Bremen, as stated in your appeal.

Very respectfully,

J. F. HARTLEY,
Assistant Secretary.

I am given to understand that this distinction in duties was protested against at the date that I mention, and there were protests out of which this suit grew, and in which the decision was reached. I wish to state to the Senator that I will agree that the Supreme Court is bound by the revision of the statute, but I wish to show that the revision of the statute did not change the law.

When the Supreme Court decided the case in question in 1881, of course they had recourse to the latest expression of the legislative will, and were controlled by that.

I have read from the two authorized publications of the tariff issued under the direction and with the approval of the Treasury Department to show that these woolen goods knit on frames were subjected to the duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem, and no more. I should like just here to read the law of 1867, which is supposed to have changed the duty on the articles in question.

I have cited these compilers of the tariff to show that they, being experts, retained woolen goods, knit caps, and so on, the same article now affected by this proposed amendment of the tariff, under the 35 per cent. duty subsequent to the passage of the act of 1867. Now, take the act of 1867. I read from Heyl's Digest of 1870, at page 50:

Sec. 2. That in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on the articles hereinafter mentioned—

I wish Senators to notice that it is "on the articles hereinafter mentioned"—

Sec. 2. That in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on the articles hereinafter mentioned, and on such as may now be exempt from duty, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the goods, wares, and merchandise herein enumerated and provided for, imported from foreign countries, the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say:

On woolen cloths, woolen shawls, and all manufactures of wool of every description made wholly or in part of wool, not herein otherwise provided for, 50 cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

On flannels, blankets, hats of wool, knit goods, balmorals, woolen and worsted yarns, and all manufactures of every description composed wholly or in part of worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other like animals, except such as are composed in part of wool not otherwise provided for, valued at not exceeding 40 cents per pound, 20 cents per pound; valued at above 40 cents per pound and not exceeding 60 cents per pound, 30 cents per pound; valued at above 60 cents per pound and not exceeding 80 cents per pound, 40 cents per pound; valued at above 80 cents per pound, 50 cents per pound; and in addition thereto, upon all the above-named articles, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

When this act came to be carried afterward into the Revised Statutes the question arose, did that act repeal the acts prior, or did that enumeration include the goods specified in former laws as knit on frames and allocated to the schedules which I have read? The revisers thought not, and when they came to transfer existing laws into the Revised Statutes you find in Schedule L, class 3, page 471—

Woolen cloths, woolen shawls, and all manufactures of wool of every description made wholly or in part of wool, not herein otherwise provided for, 50 cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Clothing, ready-made, and wearing-apparel of every description, of whatever material composed, except wool, silk, and linen, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, not otherwise provided for, caps, gloves, leggins, mitts, socks, stockings, woven shirts and drawers, and all similar articles made on frames, of whatever material composed, except silk and linen, worn by men, women, or children, and not otherwise provided for, articles worn by men, women, or children, of whatever material composed, except silk and linen, made up, or made wholly or in part by hand, not otherwise provided for: 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Under which of these schedules in this complicated tariff were you to impose the duty? The Supreme Court, following a principle of construction laid down at an early day, decided that where Congress has designated an article by its specific name and imposed a duty on it by such name, general terms in a later act, or other parts of the same act, although sufficiently broad to comprehend such article, are not applicable to it. Therefore when you find a tax of 50 cents per pound laid in addition to 35 per cent. upon goods "not otherwise provided for," and then you find a class of goods that were otherwise provided for, you look to see what is the duty specially imposed upon them, and the special shall control the general imposition. That is the principle, and upon that the decision was made which has turned out to be so unfortunate for a class of the constituents of my learned friend from Connecticut.

I believe this is a fair statement of this case. If I had framed this tariff with my friend from Connecticut this thing would not have occurred, because I think we would have taken care to simplify the laws, so that there should be no misunderstanding and no such obscurity as to make long and expensive litigation necessary.

I agree as to the hardship in which this particular class of manufacturers find themselves as compared to many other branches of manufacture in wool; that they have 35 per cent. tariff, and a corresponding protection upon their manufactures and the raw material of which it is in part composed has a tariff duty averaging over 40 per cent. I do not know what the average of the wool tariff upon raw wool is, but I think it is over 40 per cent. Of course it is ad valorem so much per pound, but it is a very high, an exorbitant, and an absurd tariff.

Mr. President, these are days of proposed tariff reform, and the Senate has now before it an opportunity of deciding, and of illustrating what they really mean by that. We are adjusting the duty on this especial manufacture, which to-day, so far from being a protection to our manufacturer, is a protection to his foreign rival, because, as I said, the duty upon the raw wool, and I am here corrected by my friend from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS,] has an average ad valorem duty of about 50 per cent.

Mr. PLATT. I will state that the ad valorem duty on the kinds of wool used in this manufacture of the lowest grade is 41.61 per cent., of the highest 76.41 per cent. It runs from 41.61 to 76.41 per cent.

Mr. BAYARD. I am obliged to my friend from Connecticut for reading that, for it sustains the idea I have stated. I did not know what the tariff was upon the wool used in this special manufacture. I stated that the average duty upon all wools was about 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. PLATT. That is true.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator shows now that on some wools it is upward of 70 per cent. The question is, ought you to raise the tariff already so high upon woolen manufactures, or ought you not rather to lower the excessive tariff upon raw wool? There is the question. Are you to intensify and maintain and continue the obvious evils and injustice of this tariff system, or do you propose fairly to reform them? Because the manufacturer of goods in the United States has to pay from 41 to 76 per cent. ad valorem on the raw wool he uses, ought you to make his customer in this country pay a greater tax than 35 per cent. ad valorem upon the manufactured product?

I say the proper remedy and relief is to lower the duty upon wool, and not to raise the duty upon the manufactures of wool.

We are entering in a very untimely hour of this session upon this subject. But, nevertheless, what more obvious thought is there to an American, a man who knows something of the vast expanse of land in this country, who knows something of the endless pasturage and that land fit for the production of sheep can be had within two hundred miles of this Capitol for 25 cents an acre? The production of wool is a simple question of the extent of pasturage, and broad ranges of mountain pastures abound and are almost as free as the blue sky above us. Do you tell me that an American wool-grower needs protection? I have not the figures by me now, but I believe I am correctly informed in saying that the tax upon foreign wools has not advanced the price of American wool. There are so many paradoxes in these tax questions arising from the complication of this system of tariff that it is hard for one unless specially prepared to meet and explain them, but I believe that I am stating the fact that the advantage to the wool-growers in America has never been advanced under this system of heavily taxing foreign wool. A comparison of the prices current before and since the imposition of heavy tariff duties on wool will, I believe, sustain the allegation.

Is that the reason why we should double the tax upon this article of wear to the working people of this country, their woolen underclothing, stockings, drawers, shirts, knit caps, mittens, wristlets, all the variety of knit goods manufactured upon frames? We are asked now to double the tariff upon that when we could grant an adequate relief by lowering the tariff on wools. I ask in reason and common sense why should we not prefer the latter course?

I sincerely wish to see this special interest relieved. I do not think it fair or right that a solecism should exist in law. I am disposed to give them the full and even measure of justice and of protection that our revenue laws give to our other manufacturers, for wherever a law can be passed which, by its discrimination, shall aid the American manufacturer and producer I shall select that mode of raising revenue, first for revenue and incidentally for the protection to our home industries.

I have received a letter from an intelligent man, who made this subject more a study than my duties have enabled me to do, who says in regard to the present tariff upon wool and woolen manufactures:

Thus, when the wool tariff was framed in 1867 it was agreed, after compensating the manufacturer for the increased duties on wool by the enactment of specific pound duties, that 25 per cent. ad valorem would be sufficient protection for the manufacturers but for one thing, and that was the existing internal revenue duties on domestic goods and the duties on drugs and dye stuffs. Ten per cent. was therefore added on this account and the ad valorem made 35 all round. Now, these internal and other taxes have long been repealed, but the compensating tax or tariff never has been. But the manufacturers demand the reinstatement of the original duties and are unwilling to make any concession.

Second. The high pound duties in the respect of knit goods were framed on the assumption that only a comparatively small proportion of materials other than wool entered into the composition of the domestic articles. There was, therefore, an enormous temptation offered to the American manufacturer to use cotton and shoddy as cheaper materials, and so well has he availed himself of his opportunity that the ordinary shirts, drawers, and stockings sold to the masses in this country are not entitled to be called woolsens, and are of the most worthless description.

Then he refers to the statement published in the Boston Herald, which was read in the Senate the other day, and which gave such offense to the Senators from Massachusetts, and possibly to my friend from Connecticut.

I take no pleasure at any time in reading unpleasant charges against any portion of my countrymen. I take no pleasure in reading of rascality or cheating anywhere; but still I do know that the exigencies of trade, the desire to gain money, induces men to resort to all sorts of expedients in manufacturing; and I believe it is the common belief of every man who hears me, and still more of the many millions outside of this Chamber that the so-called woolen underclothing manufactured in this country is utterly misnamed, and that it contains but a remarkable small percentage of pure wool.

The table that I have read shows less than one-twentieth of imported woolen was used in this manufacture, 8,146,137 pounds of native wool, and something less than a half million pounds of imported wool. I am somewhat assisted in my belief by an article in a magazine called the Hosiery and Knit Goods Manufacturer, published in the city of Philadelphia, in July, 1882, upon the comparative cost of foreign and American knit goods. I have read that article, and if its figures were true it would disclose the slightest possible inducement for anything like increased protection. But I can see, even with my imperfect knowledge of woolen manufacture, statements which are evidently erroneous. For instance, I do not hold it fair to put the price of wool in America and in England upon a parity, nor do I believe it is correct to state either at an average of 80 cents a pound. I believe it is a great overestimate of the cost of the ordinary wool used in manufacture. I do not accept the Hosiery and Knit Goods Manufacturer or its statement and its tables as authority, and yet my friend from Connecticut will probably know better its true weight. It seems to be the special representative of this industry.

Mr. PLATT. That is the second number of the journal that was ever published, pretending to be an organ of the knit-goods industry. It was formerly a self-styled organ of the carpet manufacturers under the name of the Commercial. A young man, conceiving that he could make a little money by getting advertisements, bought up the old paper and assumed to turn it into a paper in the interest of hosiery and knit goods and solicited advertisements. That is the second number published, although it appears to be volume second. It is in no sense the organ of the knit goods manufacture. As is very well suggested by the Senator from Delaware, it is an entire misstatement of the cost of manufacture in this country and in another, and it needs no particular skill or judgment to see that it is the work of an enemy rather than the work of a friend.

Mr. BAYARD. I did not cite it as the work of an enemy or of a friend, nor did I accept it. That it should be the organ of the manufacture was not necessary to give it weight; on the contrary, if it was the disinterested statement of a person fairly examining a public question, I would much rather rely upon that than I would upon the paid organ of a particular interest. I never have heard of it before, and I am free to say in looking over it I find errors in the figures upon which its computations are based which I could not accept. But what I meant to say is, if these figures are approximately true, if their results are approximately true, there is no great suffering, and there is no great difference between the powers of production at a given rate by the American manufacturer and his foreign competitor.

I rejoice in everything that shows my countrymen are becoming able to compete in manufactures everywhere, and I have no other object in legislation than to make them the successful competitors. I believe the theories I have and the principles I hope to see put in force in this country will give to the production of American capital and American labor combined the control of other markets than our own.

This system of indiscriminate taxation in the shape of alleged protective duties fails to protect either capital or labor. It stimulates production unduly. The tax being upon all products alike, it benefits each only at the cost of all others, and thus destroys the benefit to all; and when we have an overstocked market at home we are disabled, handicapped, and fettered in our attempt to compete in foreign markets.

Mr. President, I propose to amend the bill reported from the Committee on Finance by an additional section:

That from and after the 1st day of November, 1882, the duty upon all wool shall not exceed 25 per cent. ad valorem, and the duty upon all manufactures of wool, or of which wool shall be the component material of chief value, shall not exceed 50 per cent. ad valorem; and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

It will therefore be seen that as things now stand, and until we shall have a general reformation of the tariff, I am in favor of increasing the duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem to 50, and at the same time providing that the tariff upon wools shall not exceed 25 per cent. ad valorem.

This is not the proper mode, this is not the season, nor the kind of bill which ought to have been introduced to meet this general subject; but the minority cannot control the business of the body; they cannot compel the majority to bring in schemes of reformation; they can only raise questions before public opinion in a fair and regular way in order that they shall be ultimately decided at that bar.

Yesterday and last evening we were kept here in session for nearly nine hours under the pretense, for I must call it so, of considering a bill to reduce the burdens of taxation. On this side we were reproached for not proceeding with that bill, although we remained here and outnumbered our friends upon the other side of the Chamber until the very close of the debate; and the roll-call will disclose the fact. To-day that bill to reduce taxation is, I understand, again by the caucus decree of the majority laid aside, in order that taxation may be more than doubled upon a single manufacture.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me to make a correction? It is not upon a material point, because the order of business might well be the subject of consultation; but, as a matter of fact, calling up this measure now is in no respect the result of any caucus. It comes from the fact that the Senator from New York, [Mr. MILLER,] who is deeply interested in it, must go home, and he desired to have it considered to-day. That is the leading motive.

Mr. BAYARD. Any fact that is stated by the Senator from Connecticut I have no doubt is true. I came to the Capitol and hearing that the majority were taking private counsel, which they certainly had a right to do, and having adjourned yesterday evening upon the tax bill, upon which we were forced to sit here without our dinners yesterday, and then having the tax bill laid aside by their consent, it appeared to be naturally the result of the caucus.

Mr. HAWLEY. Naturally, but this all arose after the caucus. You have had caucuses as we have. This is not the result of a caucus.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not find any fault with it. I have never been disposed to delay for an hour or a day the decision of this or any other bill of a fair business character as this is, but the fact stands, (and I cannot say that I blame any one for it,) that we have taken up a bill that I conceive puts their immediate friends and constituents to a great deal of inconvenience and possible loss.

If I had had the drafting of the tariff, the knit-goods manufacturers never would have been in the unfortunate position in which they are found now; they never would have been put to the disadvantage which the present tariff by its obscurities, and absurdities has placed them. If they find themselves at a disadvantage to-day they may thank those who drafted and arranged these laws so fine-spun that it requires close judicial investigation and careful interpretation to discover what they do mean or what is the tax to be imposed upon a commodity.

I have read the history of these laws and I expect to hear the Senator from Connecticut take a different view. I believe the counsel which sustained that case before the Supreme Court was legally justified as a question of statutory interpretation in insisting on that which the court finally sustained, that the allocation of duties of this particular manufacture was under the same association and in the same schedule by name in which it has existed since 1842, and has never yet been taken out, and the Revised Statutes have not changed it.

I do not wish to detain the Senate. When the question came up I meant to meet it openly and fairly, and give the reasons why we should not select this particular industry for relief when so many others in the country demand and are entitled to equal relief. Perhaps you may say, better a small measure of justice to one than justice to none; but if it is done I submit to the Senate the real relief, and the just relief, and the proper step to be taken is at once to relieve our manufacturers from this excessive duty upon raw wool. A measurable relief would be on raw wool 25 per cent. ad valorem, instead of from 40 to 75 per cent. Whatever may be the revenue or whatever protection may come from it, let it stand until we decide, as I hope we ultimately will, to place it on the free list and be satisfied as to this special manufacturer's industry to raise it from 35 to 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Fifty per cent. ad valorem is understood to be about the average of this strange tariff, many duties exceeding 100 per cent., and one, as I showed the other day before the Senate, amounting to 340 per cent. Averaging altogether, I believe, 50 per cent. ad valorem. Up to that rate I propose this industry should go for the present until we shall have some more scientific and just arrangement of the tariff and coupled with that a reduction of the duty upon wool. Those are the propositions that I think should accompany this measure of relief.

I can only say, so far as I am personally concerned, there is no one more contented to see any class of our fellow-countrymen relieved from an unjust mistake in the law. I believe it was an oversight, but it never was the error in the revision of the statute that it was claimed to be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SEWELL in the chair.) The amendment of the Senator from Delaware will be reported.

Mr. PLATT. There is a committee amendment pending.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the amendment of the Senator from Delaware be read for information, at any rate.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill:

SEC. —. That from and after the 1st day of November, 1882, the duty upon all wool shall not exceed 25 per cent. ad valorem, and the duty upon all manufactures of wool, or of which wool shall be the component material of chief value, shall not exceed 50 per cent. ad valorem; and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 35 and 36 to the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 5224) to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. W. H. CALKINS of Indiana, Mr. BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH of Ohio, and Mr. R. W. TOWNSHEND of Illinois managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

- A bill (S. No. 96) for the relief of Joseph Conrad of Missouri;
- A bill (S. No. 1440) relating to the registration of trade-marks;
- A bill (S. No. 2171) to remove the political disabilities of Frank C. Armstrong, of Maryland;
- A bill (S. No. 1472) for the relief of Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of Haller Nutt, deceased; and
- A bill (H. R. No. 6743) to establish diplomatic relations with Persia.

DUTY ON KNIT GOODS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6715) to correct an error in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, a single word with regard to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. The manufacturers who must shut up their factories, the employes who must be idle, come to Congress and ask for bread. The Senator from Delaware proposes to give them a stone. That fitly illustrates the amendment, and I propose to pay no further attention to it at this time. I take issue with the Senator, and if I can, wearied as I am somewhat physically by these protracted sessions—

Mr. BAYARD. We all are.

Mr. PLATT. If I can express myself clearly, I will undertake to convince even the Senator from Delaware that there was no such law in existence prior to the revision of the statute as imposed only a duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem upon this class of goods. I put the argument which I am to make in this case to every member of the Senate without reference to the views which he may entertain upon the subject of the tariff.

I claim that this is an error; that the law prior to the revision of 1874 upon all this class of goods, upon all articles pertaining to this class, imposed a duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem, and in addition thereto certain specific or pound duties which were put there for the purpose of offsetting the duty upon wool. I can show it to any Senator who will give me careful attention.

Before I come to that point of the argument, however, (and I am not unmindful of the time of the Senate and therefore I shall be brief,) I wish to speak for a moment of the importance of this question. I ask Senators not to couple it with any proposed tariff legislation. This industry has grown up in this country since 1870. In 1870 there was only produced in this country, as appears by the census of 1870, 223,000 pounds of yarn and hosiery, only 4,080 dozen of shirts and drawers; and yet in 1880 we had $15,000,000 of capital and over invested, and we had a gross product of $28,000,000.

There are no great capitalists in this business. Notwithstanding all the sarcasm of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. VANCE,] it is an infant industry, and it illustrates the doctrine which my friend the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] believes in, and which I believe in—that is, that the primary province of all tariff legislation is the raising of revenue, and that incidentally it is well to foster and encourage American manufactures.

The tariff of 1867, which I will show embraced all this class of goods and was the law up to the revision of the statutes, when it was changed either by an error, a mistake, or a wrong—the tariff as adjusted in 1867 enabled American manufacturers to do what they had never before done in this country, to establish factories for the production of knit goods. They have done so. That tariff properly fostered them; incidentally it protected them. The courts understood the law to be as I claim it; collectors of the ports understood the law as I claim it; Secretaries of the Treasury understood the law as I claim it. It was so administered everywhere; and acting upon the faith of it then, manufactories began to spring up all over the country, and within the last ten years have been multiplied.

It is not Connecticut alone that stands here asking that you shall not strike at and destroy these manufactures; it is nineteen States in this Union that ask it. They are scattered from Maine to the Missouri, in all the States. They are not capitalists; they are not overgrown corporations. The average capital of these corporations is less than $45,000 each, and knowing what I know of the corporations in my own State and the private parties who are engaged in this manufacture, that is a fair estimate of their capital. They are not in a condition to go on with this business. If the law as they understood it, if the law upon the faith of which they built their factories and employed their men and made this production and cheapened these articles in the American market, is not to stand, they are willing to take their chances with all other woolen manufacturers. If the duty on woolen manufactures is to be reduced, they are willing to be reduced upon their manufacture; but they do come here and protest against the injustice, weak as they are, young as they are, of being singled out and not protected as other woolen manufacturers are.

I do not believe that a manufacturer is a public enemy to be punished or suppressed. I know that my friend the Senator from Delaware does not so believe. I do believe it is a public calamity that a large number of men, women, and children shall be thrown out of labor. We have been told that the strikes of which we have heard are matters of the first importance; that they should engage the careful attention of every honest legislator. Refuse to pass this bill, put the amendment of the Senator from Delaware upon it, and send it back to the House with a reduction of the tariff on wool, and before next December there will be more people idle and thrown out of employment in these factories than there are now idle on account of the strikes.

We do not need to go back of the tariff of 1861, because it repealed the tariff of 1846 and was the only tariff in existence after it became a law. In that tariff were three clauses—

Mr. BAYARD. The tariff of 1861?

Mr. PLATT. The tariff of 1861, called the Morrill tariff.

One clause which went to make up Schedule M in the Revised Statutes is:

Clothing, ready-made, and wearing apparel of every description, of whatever material composed, except wool, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer.

That has in terms nothing to do with knit goods. I simply read it to show that it was one of the clauses taken to make up a paragraph in the revision.

The next is—

Articles worn by men, women, or children, of whatever material composed, made up or made wholly or in part by hand, not otherwise provided for.

That is another one of the clauses which went to make up Schedule M of the Revised Statutes.

The next clause, the third clause of Schedule M, is:

Caps, gloves, leggins, mitts, socks, stockings, wove shirts, and drawers, and all similar articles made on frames, of whatever material composed, worn by men, women, or children, and not otherwise provided for.

Upon all the articles enumerated in these three clauses 30 per cent. ad valorem duty was laid by the tariff of 1861.

There was at that time no duty on wool such as was placed upon it afterward. There was, therefore, at that time no reason for imposing the specific duties which were laid afterward on articles of knit goods as an offset to the duties, which were afterward imposed upon wool for the benefit of the wool-grower.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to ask him what percentage of imported wools enters into the knit goods made upon frames?

Mr. PLATT. I beg the Senator from Delaware not to interrupt me, because I am making a legal argument. I will say, however, that none of these articles which are referred to are made on frames. That has nothing to do with it; they are no longer made on frames. That is a clause which comes from the early history of the manufacture, away back in the tariff of 1842, as the Senator from Delaware read. It has been continued down through the statutes, but no longer is applicable to this class of goods. That is an additional reason why I claim that it never was intended to include in these clauses as they finally went into the Revised Statutes knit goods as they are now made.

That continued to be the law, 30 per cent. ad valorem, and the only law which imposed a duty upon knit goods of any description, until 1862, when an additional 5 per cent. was levied, as I will show. The three clauses are still continued in the act of 1862; and it is there provided:

That from and after the day and year aforesaid, in addition to the duties heretofore imposed by law on the articles hereinafter mentioned, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the goods, wares, and merchandise enumerated and provided for in this section, imported from foreign countries, a duty of 5 per cent. ad valorem, that is to say:

That raised the duty on caps, gloves, leggins, mitts, and wove shirts and drawers to 35 per cent. Still there were no specific duties, and the reason for it was that the duty had not been imposed on wool, which made the specific duty necessary. Then we go on until 1864, when a new law was passed on the subject. It is to be found on page 208 of volume 13, Statutes at Large.

Mr. BAYARD. Will it disturb my friend if I ask him, does he mean that there was no tariff tax on raw wool in 1862?

Mr. PLATT. I do not say that, but I say it was largely increased afterward.

Mr. BAYARD. Oh, yes.

Mr. PLATT. And when the large increase was made in the duty on wool then the specific or pound duties were added to knit goods to offset the increase made of duties upon wool. The first specific duty appears in the statute of 1864, in the clause which I will soon read, and this is a complete act. It was intended to cover this entire branch of manufacture; it includes by name many of the articles which appear in the old statute of 1862.

Mr. BAYARD. The same articles precisely are kept together in the tariff and taxed together.

Mr. PLATT. The law of 1864 provided:

On shirts, drawers, and hosiery of wool, or of which wool shall be a component material, not otherwise provided for, 20 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 30 per cent. ad valorem.

The act reduced the ad valorem duty 5 per cent., and put a specific duty of 20 cents per pound upon all that class of goods. There is where the specific duty first comes in.

Mr. BAYARD. Will not my friend find in the same law the class of articles, caps, gloves, leggins, mitts, socks, stockings, wove shirts and drawers, and all similar articles made on frames and used by men, women, or children, and not otherwise provided for?

Mr. PLATT. I have read the law through. I believe I have read every word of it, and it is not there.

Mr. BAYARD. Does the Senator say that the statute does not contain it?

Mr. PLATT. It did not go into that statute unless I am very much mistaken. It is possible that the Senator may take the book and by diligent examination of the statute find something which I have not been able to find there; but certainly so far as I have been able to give it an examination the whole class of knit goods is embraced in the statute of 1864 in the words "shirts, drawers, and hosiery of wool, and of which wool shall be a component material, not otherwise provided for." It is possible I am mistaken, but, whether I am or not, it is manifest that it was intended to put in the statute of 1864 upon all articles of hosiery, of shirts and drawers, a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem and a specific duty of 20 cents per pound, provided they were of wool.

Mr. BAYARD. Now, may I say one word there? The Senator has read, correctly read, the charge of duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem and then the specific duty per pound upon the articles he there has mentioned and upon the articles "not otherwise provided for." Now, what articles were those which were otherwise provided for? The articles that were left under the law of 1862 and 1861, which are to-day the same as they were then, kept together and taxed under a separate schedule. That is what the Supreme Court said.

Mr. PLATT. Let me go on. The Senator cannot claim that when it is said that on shirts, drawers, and hosiery of wool, there shall be a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem and 20 cents per pound, those same articles still stay at 35 per cent. ad valorem. That cannot be so.

Mr. BAYARD. Suppose you find at the same time and under the same law, they leave untouched 35 per cent. duty on caps, gloves, mitts, socks, wove shirts, drawers, and other similar articles made on frames and worn by men, women, and children and you find that tax, which shall apply?

Mr. PLATT. The Senator takes the old law as not repealed by this section, leaving cotton goods at that price, and takes what Mr. Heyl says and supposes he refers to wool. This statute of 1864 did most manifestly repeal the statute of 1862 so far as relates to woolen hosiery, to woolen shirts and drawers. It left it in force so far as it related to cotton goods and to any other goods made of material other than wool, except that in the same statute it took out of the original act two other classes of goods, that is, those made of silk and those made of linen. The act of 1864 excluded from the old act of 1862 the articles I have referred to made of wool and all manufactures of silk and linen. It left the act of 1862 in force so far as related to knit goods of cotton or of any other material not excepted.

Mr. BAYARD. Now, will my friend be kind enough to explain to the Senate why it is that Messrs. Ogden and Heyl, the authorized codifiers of these laws, classify these things under woolen manufactures? Here they are.

Mr. PLATT. I have had no opportunity to examine those books. I ask the Senator to explain to me why it is that after every Secretary of the Treasury, that after every collector of a port, that after the courts themselves decided differently, he brings up to me the compilation of somebody who undertook to make a statement of the tariff?

Mr. BAYARD. I did not bring up to the Senator anything. My supposition was that he desired to state this correctly. Neither he nor I can have any personal object except to find out the true state of fact. He tells me these duties were not as I have stated. I merely hand him the authorized publication of the Treasury Department and show him that they were classified as wool, taxed as wool, and there they are. I did not make them so. I may say here that the Senator's tone toward me is as though I had framed this law. I did not frame this law, I did not make this law. It was revised by Republican revisers and passed by a Republican Congress and decided by a Republican court. If there is error or hardship in it, it has been created by them, not by me.

Mr. PLATT. If in my earnestness I have been betrayed into a tone which is in the slightest degree disrespectful or offensive to the Senator I beg his pardon, for I certainly did not intend it.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator seemed to arraign me as though I had caused this miserable, unhappy condition of the tariff. I want to remedy it.

Mr. PLATT. I have not had the opportunity to examine those books. I know this, that whatever may be in them the Secretary of the Treasury did not heed them if the construction of them is such as the Senator claims; collectors of ports did not heed them; the circuit court in New York did not heed them when it decided distinctly the case against that view of the Senator.

Mr. BAYARD. Some Secretaries do not heed laws anyhow.

Mr. PLATT. When the Secretaries, the collectors of the ports, and the courts all decide one way is it worth while to claim that they did not understand the law, and that the law was not so because some one who summarized the list of duties made a table which seemed to indicate the contrary?

Now, to take the Heyl code of 1879, I find he states this both ways. I do not know whether he is correct. He is certainly not the Revised Statutes; I do not understand that his book is taken in court as the Revised Statutes. The court had to decide upon them, not upon an interpretation of the Revised Statutes by Heyl or Ogden.

I may say right here that prior to the revision and after the act of 1867 it is true that importers in New York did file protests and claim that there was only 35 per cent. duty ad valorem on this class of goods. It is equally true that they brought suit to recover the specific pound duty which they had paid under protest, and it is also true that that suit was decided against them in New York in the case of Krause vs. Arthur, and that they took no appeal from it. It is equally true that they brought another suit, Victor vs. Arthur, claiming under the act of 1867 that only these ad valorem duties could be assessed, and seeking to recover back the specific duty; but when the revision was passed they abandoned that suit. They acquiesced in the decision of Krause vs. Arthur, and then brought another suit of Victor vs. Arthur under the revision and under a new protest, and that was the suit carried up to and decided by the Supreme Court. It is hardly a conclusive argument, when the parties filed the protest in relation to the original act, tried their case in court and before a jury and were beaten, and acquiesced in it, that simply because they filed a protest originally the law is as they claimed it and not as decided in the suit, the result of which was adverse to them. The law as it was prior to the revision of 1874 was fully settled in the case of Krause vs. Arthur, as I claim it to-day.

Now I go on. Being so interrupted the continuity of my argument has been somewhat broken.

In 1864 for the first time specific or pound duties were placed on these articles. An additional duty was placed on wool. It therefore must be perfectly apparent that Congress intended to give the additional duty of 20 cents per pound as an offset to the additional duty that had been imposed on wool. So it went on until 1867, when the provision found in Schedule L of section 2504, Revised Statutes, was passed, and here for the first time comes the description "knit goods" in this act. The other articles which had been enumerated by name in the prior acts were not touched, not enumerated, and the whole class of manufactures of this description is included within one general term, that of "knit goods." That statute was manifestly intended to repeal all duties imposed upon knit goods, and to make an entire new provision in relation to them. It is this:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on the articles hereinafter mentioned, and on such as may now be exempt from duty, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the goods, wares, and merchandise herein enumerated and provided for, imported from foreign countries, the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say:

On woolen cloths, woolen shawls, and all manufactures of wool of every description made wholly or in part of wool, not herein otherwise provided for, 50 cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

There they made a general description of manufactures of wool, and imposed 50 cents a pound and 35 per cent. ad valorem. There it says "on all articles manufactured of wool not herein otherwise provided for." Then they go on immediately and provide for knit goods. I will read the whole clause. The term "knit goods" is first used here. The words "on frames" are left out of this statute entirely.

Mr. BAYARD. But the words "otherwise provided for" remain.

Mr. PLATT. "Otherwise provided for herein," that is, in this statute, not in some former statute. The duty, so far as related to woolen goods, was repealed except as herein otherwise provided for. That does not mean provided for in the act of 1861; it means provided for in this act. I read from the statute of 1867:

On flannels, blankets, hats of wool, knit goods, balmorals, woolen and worsted yarns, and all manufactures of every description, composed wholly or in part of worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other like animals, except such as are composed in part of wool, not otherwise provided for, valued at not exceeding 40 cents per pound; 20 cents per pound; valued at above 40 cents per pound and not exceeding 60 cents per pound; 30 cents per pound; valued at above 60 cents per pound and not exceeding 80 cents per pound; 40 cents per pound; valued at above 80 cents per pound; 50 cents per pound; and in addition thereto upon all the above-named articles, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

It will be seen they did not put the pound duty upon this class of goods as high as they did upon the general class of woolen manufactures. They did not protect it so well, to the same extent that they did other woolen manufactures.

These are all the provisions relating to this subject until we come to the revision. When we come to the revision we find that the revisers took the act of 1867 and incorporated it in Schedule L, in these words:

Flannels, blankets, hats of wool, knit goods, balmorals, woolen and worsted yarns, and all manufactures of every description composed wholly or in part of worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other like animals, except such as are composed in part of wool, not otherwise provided for, valued at not exceeding 40 cents per pound; 20 cents per pound; valued at above 40 cents per pound and not exceeding 60 cents per pound; 30 cents per pound; valued at above 60 cents per pound and not exceeding 80 cents per pound; 40 cents per pound; valued at above 80 cents per pound; 50 cents per pound; and, in addition thereto, upon all the above-named articles: 35 per cent. ad valorem.

It is the precise language of the statute of 1867. If it did not intend to include all the articles formerly subject only to ad valorem duty, the words "knit goods" there did not mean anything. There is no article made, so far as I am informed, outside of the articles it is claimed are now subject only to 35 per cent. ad valorem, which can be classed under the head of "knit goods" except cardigan jackets.

Mr. BAYARD. If that be the case the law is all right for these articles "on frames."

Mr. PLATT. They do not make articles on frames.

Mr. BAYARD. Then there is nothing in it.

Mr. PLATT. The difficulty about it is that the Supreme Court said there was, and I will show why the revisers, after having stated in Schedule L the entire law relating to woolen knit goods, woolen hosiery, and everything of that sort, went back to the statute of 1861 and took the three clauses which I have heretofore referred to, and, reversing them in their order, constructed Schedule M, which I will read. If Senators could remember—and they cannot, of course, because this matter is complicated—the three clauses which I read from the statute of 1861 in the early part of my argument, they would see that these three clauses reversing the order go to make up Schedule M.

Clothing, ready-made, and wearing-apparel of every description, of whatever material composed, except wool, silk, and linen, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, not otherwise provided for, caps, gloves, leggins, mitts, socks, stockings, woven shirts and drawers, and all similar articles made on frames, of whatever material composed, except silk and linen, worn by men, women, or children, and not otherwise provided for, articles worn by men, women, or children, of whatever material composed, except silk and linen, made up, or made wholly or in part by hand, not otherwise provided for: 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The Supreme Court decided that woven shirts and drawers, caps, gloves, leggins, mitts, socks, and stockings, which embrace the whole line of hosiery, were specifically mentioned in Schedule M, and therefore the specific designation must control and override the general designation of knit goods in Schedule L. When they were asked to go back of the revision they said they could not do it under the rule of construction which must govern them. They said this distinctly:

It may be true, as suggested, that if there had been no revision, and we had been required to construe the statutes as they stood before December 1, 1873, a different conclusion might have been reached.

Showing that they had looked at the statutes as they existed prior to the revision, and intimating that but for the rules of construction to which they were shut up they would have held that under the statutes prior to the revision these goods were obliged to pay both an ad valorem and a specific duty.

But how came this section in Schedule M to be here? The law of 1861 had been repealed as to wool; it had been repealed as to silk and linen. It stood as to cotton goods and as to all goods made of materials other than those three kinds, wool, silk, and linen. Cotton hosiery and other cotton knit goods were only subject to an ad valorem duty of 35 per cent., but woolen knit goods were subject to the specific duties in addition to the ad valorem duties. Silk and linen goods had been provided for at ad valorem duties exceeding 35 per cent.

In the first clause, which does not touch us, they excepted wool. They said "except wool, silk, or linen." In the second clause, and the one which touches us, they except only silk and linen. In the third clause, which does not touch us, they except only silk and linen. I have shown that knit woolen goods had already been taken out of that statute, just as much as silk and linen had been taken out of it. They started to except articles of wool, silk, and linen. In the first clause of which the paragraph is composed they did do it; in the second and third clauses they only excepted silk and linen. What is the fair presumption? The courts had decided in New York that these goods, prior to the revision, must pay both the ad valorem and the specific duty. The revisers ought to have known that. They certainly did know that at every port of entry in the United States that was the construction put upon the law. They certainly did know that the Secretary of the Treasury, and all Secretaries of the Treasury who had administered the law, put that construction upon it.

Is it to be believed, then, that they intended to change the law? They had no right to change the law; they had no power to change the law. They were expressly directed by the law which gave them authority to act not to change the law, and it cannot be presumed that they intended to violate the directions given them in the act from which they derived their authority. The inevitable conclusion, then, is this: that they inserted the words "wool, silk, and linen" as an exception to the first clause, intending also to insert the same words "wool, silk, and linen" as exceptions to each of the other two clauses, but omitted the word "wool" by mistake in the second and third clauses. They used the words "silk and linen" in making the exceptions to clauses 2 and 3, but the word "wool" was dropped out.

Whether they supposed the first clause covered the whole, whether it was a mere clerical error, or in whatever manner this omission is to be accounted for, it must be conclusively held that it was an error; otherwise you must hold that they intended to change the law, and that is a violent presumption, one which cannot be maintained.

Mr. President, I have endeavored to make clear, I have made clear to my own mind, and I trust to the minds of Senators, that the law prior to the revision did put a duty upon these articles of 35 per cent. ad valorem and a scale of pound duties or specific duties from 20 to 50 cents, according to the value of the product, the value of the manufactured article. I have shown that it was so understood everywhere, except by some few importers who protested against it and undertook to claim differently, and they took their case into court, where they were beaten, and then they abandoned the claim under the law of 1867 and under the law prior to the revision.

I do not propose to go into a general discussion of the tariff question. I do not propose to go into any statement as to the precise cost of manufacture or the precise profit which was made under the duty as it was understood by everybody to be. I simply say to Senators that these manufacturers, who are not to be presumed to be other than honest men, come from all sections of the country, supported by the petitions of all their employes, and they say to you this: they say to you we built our manufactories, we commenced this manufacture upon what we understood to be the law and you understood to be the law and Congress intended should be the law, and upon the law as it has been administered until this decision of the Supreme Court. And they say, we ask you now to restore us to the position which we had a right to assume we occupied; we ask you to disconnect this case from tariff legislation; we ask you to put us back where we supposed we were, and let us take our chances with the whole woolen industry when a revision of the tariff shall be made. We ask you not to stop our manufactories. We ask you not to turn these laborers into the streets; we ask you to enable this industry to go on until the revision of the tariff. We ask you not to bankrupt us.

I have made this appeal. I ask it as a matter of justice; I ask it as a matter of right. I beg of Senators not to stand here for any purpose and oppose this measure of just relief by adding to it tariff legislation now in these few remaining hours of the session, and I believe the session to be drawing to a close. Do not send this bill back to the House with any amendment whatever upon it. Any amendment will kill the bill. The House has no quorum. The bill will be lost there if it shall be amended.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question. Under the law as it now stands, as construed by the Supreme Court, the duty on knit goods is 35 per cent., I believe.

Mr. PLATT. It is.

Mr. HARRIS. What will the duty be if this bill shall pass?

Mr. PLATT. Just what it was understood to be before, and what it was in fact before the revision.

Mr. HARRIS. What was it understood before to be?

Mr. PLATT. I will answer the question. I have it from a book published by the Treasury Department. I do not take Mr. Heyl's statement of it, I take the authorized publication of the Treasury Department. On goods valued above 80 cents per pound there will be a duty which will be equivalent to an ad valorem duty of 55.78 per cent.; on goods valued at above 60 and not exceeding 80 cents per pound the duty will be 88 per cent. ad valorem; valued at above 40 cents and not exceeding 60 cents per pound it will be 89 per cent. ad valorem. At the same time the duties on the wool will run from 41 per cent. to 76 per cent. ad valorem; 41 on one class, 55 on another, 64 on another, 67 on another, 76 on another. You can see very well how much protection there is. The average protective duty by the law as it was before the revision was in the neighborhood of 20 per cent. ad valorem. Surely that was not excessive, it was not a high protective duty; but the 35 per cent. ad valorem duty affords no protection. As the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] well says, it protects the foreign manufacturer.

Mr. HARRIS. Then the object of this bill is to increase the duties on knit goods from 35 per cent. ad valorem to from 55 to 89 per cent. ad valorem, if I understand the statement of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PLATT. The object of this bill is not to increase duties at all. It is to put the duty where everybody in this country except the importers have understood it to be.

Mr. HARRIS. Is not the effect of the bill to be passed to increase the duties on knit goods from 35 per cent. ad valorem to from 55 per cent. to 89 per cent.?

Mr. PLATT. It is.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I suppose the object that you and others have in seeking to pass it is to produce the effect that you admit it must have; therefore I think the Senator's denial was quite gratuitous and unnecessary as to the object with which the bill is pressed.

Mr. PLATT. The object of it is this: it is no longer (as the law now is) to protect the foreign manufacturer as against the American manufacturer, but it is to give the American manufacturer a fair, even chance with the foreign manufacturer. We ask it. It does not give so much as on some other articles of wool manufacture. We were the least protected of all woolen manufacturers by the law as it was. We ask that we may be put back and have that modicum of protection which the country supposed it was giving to us, and which we supposed we had when we commenced this industry, and which has only been taken away from us upon the plain, palpable, conclusive errors of the revisers of the statutes.

CHARGE OF DESERTION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate House bill No. 5224.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 5224) to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore being authorized to appoint the committee, Mr. LOGAN, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 2092) for the relief of Major W. R. King.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) for the printing of additional copies of House Executive Document

No. 47 and subsequent land laws, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (H. R. No. 3414) granting a pension to Sarah J. Cameron;
A bill (H. R. No. 4594) authorizing full pay to Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, United States Army, while on leave to serve in command of the Franklin search expedition in the Arctic;

A bill (H. R. No. 4684) to amend section 4400, of title 52, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulation of steam-vessels;

A bill (H. R. No. 4888) increasing the pension of John F. Ellis;
A bill (H. R. No. 6249) granting an increase of pension to Joseph F. Wilson;

A bill (H. R. No. 6265) donating cannon and cannon-balls to Post No. 14 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Logansport, Indiana, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6517) authorizing compensation to members of Company B, Fourteenth Infantry, for private property destroyed by fire on the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad;

A bill (H. R. No. 6593) donating condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6743) to establish diplomatic relations with Persia;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 205) granting the use of tents at a soldiers' reunion to be held by the Soldiers' Reunion Association of the State of Illinois in the year 1882;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 254) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer to "Tip" Best Post No. 75, Grand Army of the Republic, of Montrose, Iowa, one piece of condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls (or field-piece) for monumental purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 263) granting the use of cannon, tents, and muskets at soldiers' reunions to be held in the State of Iowa in the year 1882.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 97) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of Acting Assistant Paymaster Edward K. Winship, United States Navy;

A bill (S. No. 126) to reimburse the Creek orphan fund;

A bill (S. No. 1255) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes.

DUTY ON KNIT GOODS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6715) to correct an error in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SEWELL in the chair.) The amendment of the Committee on Finance will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 4 the committee propose, after the word "twenty-five," to insert "hundred and four;" so as to read:

That the paragraph beginning with the words "clothing, ready-made, and wearing apparel," under Schedule M of section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, be, and the same is hereby, amended by the insertion of the word "wool" before the word "silk" in two places where it was omitted in the revision of the said statutes; so that the same shall read as follows.

Mr. PLATT. I hope the Senate will disagree to this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the Senate non-concur with the committee amendment, in order that the bill may not be sent back to the House.

Mr. PLATT. The bill is complete as it stands. It should not go back to the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves to non-concur in the committee amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are two committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They are both non-concurred in. The Secretary will now read the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, as an additional section, the following:

That the duty upon all wool shall not exceed 25 per cent. ad valorem, and the duties upon all manufactures of wool, or of which wool shall be the component material of chief value, shall not exceed 50 per cent. ad valorem, and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. COKE. I hope this amendment will be adopted. I do not propose to inflict a speech upon the Senate. I have listened with interest to the honorable Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. PLATT.] I have failed to hear anything from him which, in my judgment, justifies the taking of knit goods, the subject-matter of this bill, out of the same category in which hundreds of articles on the tariff list are found as much needing modification and amendment in the duties imposed as, according to his argument, this bill provides for touching knit goods. I do not believe, sir, that the change desired by the friends of this bill should be made, unless at the same time other changes equally necessary and equally desirable are also made. There are many articles on the tariff list which are as monstrous and as enormous in the excessiveness of the duties imposed as the honorable Senator contends this bill will remedy with reference to the duties imposed on knit goods. I do not believe that a bill professedly to decrease taxation should have been laid aside for the purpose of increasing taxation upon the articles embraced in this bill. I think it would have been much better that these articles should have shared the fate of the rest of the articles on the tariff list, and whenever the tariff is revised that they should have been revised with the remainder.

I rose, Mr. President, however, to make an observation upon one particular point with reference to the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Delaware. The Senator from Connecticut says if the amendment of the Senator from Delaware with reference to the reduction of the tariff on woolen goods prevails it will throw a vast amount of labor out of employment in the manufacturing districts. I have to say, in reply to that remark, that Mr. Burchard, the Director of the Mint, a few years ago a distinguished member of Congress, in a very able speech made by him in the House of Representatives, in which the tariff question was discussed, stated—I have the extract from his speech on my desk—that 17½ per cent. ad valorem represents all the money paid for labor in the manufacture of woolen goods; that 17½ per cent. ad valorem represents all the labor employed in the manufacture of woolen goods. The amendment of the honorable Senator from Delaware allows 50 per cent. ad valorem. Now, take 25 per cent., which represents the duty on the raw material, from that and it leaves 25 per cent. So that the manufacturer is paid back every dollar he expends for labor in the manufacture of woolen goods, and has 7½ per cent. of protection for his capital besides. If labor goes out of employment by reason of the reduction, if this amendment is adopted it will be simply because the manufacturer refuses to pay to the laborer that which the law places in his possession ostensibly for the protection of American labor. When 17½ per cent. ad valorem will pay for all the labor, what excuse, what apology is there for saying that a 50 per cent. ad valorem duty is an insufficient protection?

Sir, I am one of those who believe that under this Government no class, no industry, no avocation is entitled to call on the Government to tax all others for its protection. I believe that every industry should stand on its own merit, that there should be free competition, and that the impost duties should be laid exclusively for revenue. I do not believe that it is a part of the duty of this Government to lay impost duties, except to raise money to support the Government. The protection of private interests by onerous burdens upon the public is not within the constitutional power of Congress. But take the theory of the gentlemen who favor and who say that they should have protection, with the amendment of the honorable Senator from Delaware adopted, they have protection to the extent of 50 per cent. These gentlemen say it is for the protection of American labor, when the facts show that 17½ per cent. will pay for every dollar's worth of labor employed in the production of woolen goods, when the figures further show that 5 per cent. will pay the entire alleged difference claimed to exist between labor in Europe and America.

Sir, the whole theory upon which the protective tariff rests is that our people must be protected against the pauper labor of Europe. What other protection is there? Three thousand miles of ocean are to be traversed by the European product before it can get to our markets to compete with our home product. What other protection have we? We have in a profusion which exists nowhere else in the world of raw material ready to hand; we have the cheapest, the best, and the most abundant food for our operatives, while England, the great competitor most feared by our manufacturers, sends her ships here for our wheat and corn and beef and pork and canned goods, to feed her operatives, at the same time procuring her raw material from all quarters of the globe. Surely under these circumstances 50 per cent. ad valorem ought to be sufficient protection for American woolen products in American markets.

Our present tariff averages from 43 to 45 per cent. I believe that a tariff of 18 per cent., such as we had in 1857, would bring more revenue than the present tariff brings, and would give more protection than is needed by any branch of American industry. It was estimated that the tariff of 1846 would produce $22,000,000. It actually produced $64,000,000. Multiply sixty-four millions by three and it will be one hundred and ninety-two millions. The product of our present tariff in 1881 was $193,000,000 in round numbers. Multiply the product of the low tariff of 1846 by three and it produces exactly the product of our tariff in 1881, yet the volume of trade and of commerce and of business resulting from the growth and development of the country is five times, as the figures show, as great now as in 1846. If a tariff of 18 per cent. would produce $64,000,000 in 1846, a tariff of 18 per cent. would certainly produce $300,000,000 now.

There can be no question about this. Any gentleman who will take the tariff list and see how many articles there are which produce absolutely no revenue, because the duties are prohibitory, will see at a glance that we have only to lower the duties, reduce the tariff, and let foreign goods come in and pay the duties in order to fill our Treasury. If we will reduce our tariff we can greatly modify, if we deem it wise to do so, our internal-revenue system.

Mr. President, I shall support the amendment of the honorable Senator from Delaware. It is not unobjectionable to me. The duty on woolen goods at 50 per cent. is too high; but I will vote for it as the best we can do now. I contend now, and shall always contend, for a reduction of duties until we get down to an average not exceeding 20 per cent. I will take this amendment, though, as a step in the right direction, and will vote for it. It will give to the producers of the raw wool 25 per cent. It will give to the manufacturers of woolen goods 50 per cent., when it has been shown that 17½ per cent. pays them back for all their labor, leaving in the balance a clear margin for an immense profit. I will not vote to reduce the duty on raw wool unless at the same time the duty on woolen goods, as is done in this amendment, is reduced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ALDRICH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.]

Mr. HARRIS, (when Mr. JACKSON's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. JACKSON] is paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.] My colleague is necessarily absent from the city.

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JACKSON.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SAWYER. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. CAMDEN.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. LAPHAM. I was under the impression that I was paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES,] but he is here and I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. My colleague [Mr. FRYE] is paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL.]

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I announced that I was paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] I have transferred my pair to the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.] So that the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Virginia are paired. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—23.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:
"From and after the 1st day of November, 1882, the duty on wool imported into the United States shall be 25 per cent. ad valorem."

Messrs. ALDRICH and ROLLINS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KELLOGG, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR.]

Mr. MILLER, of New York, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JACKSON.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will announce, once for all, that upon this bill the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] is paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.]

Mr. SAWYER. I will announce, once for all, that I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. CAMDEN.]

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to my friend from Wisconsin that I voted "nay" on this proposition. I think my colleague would vote with me if here, and he can vote if he wishes.

Mr. SAWYER. Then I vote "nay."

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to say that I am paired during the day with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.] I did not discover at the last roll-call that the Senator from Oregon was not in his seat, and I inadvertently voted. I should not have done so. I would vote "nay" on this amendment.

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 35; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAYARD. I move to amend by adding as a proviso:

Provided, That the rate of duty on the merchandise described in this section shall not exceed 60 per cent. ad valorem.

My object in offering this amendment is to gain an expression of opinion of the Senate as to whether a range of tariff duty should exceed 60 per cent. ad valorem. The last amendment the Senate voted down was to diminish the duty on the raw material, and now I propose to test the sense of the Senate on whether the duty upon a manufacture should exceed 60 per cent. ad valorem. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I do not expect to vote for the amendment just offered by the Senator from Delaware for the reason that as I understand it the average of tariff duties on other woolen goods such as are manufactured in this country exceeds 60 per cent., and I think it would be but fair that this particular branch of woolen manufactures should be placed upon something like an equality with other branches of woolen manufactured articles. I think the tariff is too high on woolens in the United States, but I am not willing to single out a particular article and take advantage of an accidental circumstance or a misunderstanding and put it clear below other manufactured articles of the same character or manufactured from the same material. I do not think that is right.

When we come to a general readjustment of the tariff I expect I shall vote for a reduction on all woolens, probably. I do not think now is the time, however, to enter upon that general reduction. We have referred this question to the tariff commission and they are now in session acting upon it under our authority, and it seems to me it will be time enough when they have reported and we have seen what their report is, to enter upon a readjustment of the tariff of this Government. Therefore I am not willing to single out at this stage individual articles and raise or reduce the duties on them unless there be some imperative necessity or very cogent reasons that make it absolutely necessary in the particular case.

It seems to me that that reason does now exist in the case now before the Senate. No matter who may be right as to how the law stood prior to the late decision of the Supreme Court, or who may be right as to how the change in the law was produced, or whether indeed there was any change made by the compilers, still the fact stands in bold relief that the Government and its officials understood the tariff to be on this particular class of woolen manufactured articles 35 per cent. ad valorem and 50 cents per pound specific duty. That was the practice of the Government. The Secretary of the Treasury put that construction upon the law; all the officials of the Government put that construction upon the law. That was the rule at every custom-house in the United States. Therefore it was the practice of the Government, and that placed this particular class of woolen manufactures on an equal footing with other classes of that character of manufactures, and that seemed to be right, whether the general tariff in favor of all that class of articles is right or wrong.

The case was brought, as we are told by the honorable Senator from Connecticut, before the United States circuit court in New York, and a decision was there rendered in favor of the construction put upon this law by the officers of the Government, and the plaintiffs in that case dismissed their case. Subsequently, in another form, there was an action brought which finally went to the Supreme Court of the United States. The practice of the Government pending all this litigation, as I understand, was still the same; these manufactured articles had a protection of 35 per cent. ad valorem and 50 cents per pound upon the manufactured article as a specific tariff.

Finally, within the last three or four months, if I am correctly informed—probably in May last—the Supreme Court of the United States rendered its final decision upon this question, holding that these articles were not entitled to the 50 cents per pound specific tax that was imposed in their favor.

What condition did that leave them in? It is agreed, I believe, by the honorable Senator from Delaware and the honorable Senator from Connecticut in their colloquy that the average tariff upon wools is something over 50 per cent. Then this class of manufacturers who use the finer qualities of wool that pays a still higher per cent. have to pay on the raw material of which they make these goods somewhere from 50 to 60 per cent., and they get protection to the extent of 35 per cent. That is a discrimination of, to say the least, 15 per cent. against the home manufacturer and in favor of the foreign manufacturer.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him what proportion of the manufacture is imported wool and what proportion domestic wool?

Mr. BROWN. I do not know the exact proportion. I have never looked carefully into that point. Probably the Senator himself is better informed on that subject than I am.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a statement made by a gentleman whose intelligence on this subject I believe to be equal to that of any man in the Senate in which he states that less than $4,000,000 would buy all the wool in more than $28,000,000 of knit goods; that if the wool used was all imported and duty paid upon it the duty would be but 5 per cent. or 5 cents on every dollar's worth of knit goods made. The official statement taken from the census return shows that less than 6 per cent. of the wool used in these knit goods is imported and that the duty paid on the wool used in making knit goods valued at $1 is less than 1 cent. That is the statement made by a gentleman familiar with this matter based on the returns of the Census Bureau, that $4,000,000 pays for all the imported wool that enters into the manufacture of $28,000,000 worth of knit goods, and that less than 6 per cent. of the wool used in these knit goods is imported wool, and the imported wool does not amount to 1 cent in a dollar's worth of knit goods.

Mr. BROWN. I hope the Senator from Delaware will not make his speech in the midst of mine. I thought he interrupted me to make a correction and to give information. The argument I prefer to make myself.

The Senator tells us that there is a very small proportion of the wool that enters into the manufacture of these articles that is imported from abroad; but he does not take into the account that the tariff fixed upon foreign wool regulates the price of the home-raised wool. There is where the trouble is; it does not matter whether 1 per cent. or 10 per cent. or 50 per cent. of the wool that enters into these articles is imported, that imported wool regulates the price of the home wool as well as the foreign wool, and the manufacturer has to pay the same price whether he uses foreign wool or home-raised wool. Therefore the proportion of imported wool used does not affect the argument at all. It does not in the slightest degree affect the manufacturer, if the wool is of the same quality, whether he use foreign wool or whether he use home-raised wool. He pays the same price for it in either case. I was not therefore in error, I think, in the statement I made to the Senate.

It seems to me, therefore, in this particular state of the case that it does call for legislative action to place this particular class of manufacturers upon something like an equality with other manufacturers. If there had not been the misunderstanding about the law that I have referred to, and the tariff had been standing in this condition for years, although it might have been very unequal, I would not consent at this stage to enact any legislation to change it; but it turns out that the law has been differently construed by the Government and by its agents, and the tariff collected under a different rule until within the last three or four months, when the decision of the Supreme Court astonished this class of manufacturers, and left them where the large investments they have made must not only prove fruitless but disastrous to them.

If I understood correctly the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. PLATT,] it was that there were now about $15,000,000 invested in this particular industry. That investment has been made, stimulated by the tariff as it was then understood, and if the tariff is now taken off by virtue of this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and there is a discriminating tariff in favor of foreign manufacturers of 15 per cent. against them, I can see very readily that that $15,000,000 is sunk and that industry is ruined, and I am not willing, as an American Senator, bail from what State I may, or belong to what party I may, to do that injustice to them. I do not think I should do it from any party consideration or any other consideration. I will try to do justice to them, but at the same time that I would do this I would not enter into a general change of the tariff or a change of it at all where there has been no misunderstanding as to the true construction of it or the true meaning of it.

I did not vote for the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Delaware for the reason that it reduced the tariff on wool about one-half. If the average tariff on wool is as was agreed between him and the Senator from Connecticut, about 60 per cent. ad valorem, then his amendment proposed to take off a little more than one-half of the tariff that now exists in favor of the Southern and Western wool-growers. I am not willing at this stage of the tariff proceeding to vote for any such change as that. We may reduce it; doubtless we shall when we readjust the tariff. Whether it will be put down to 25 per cent. I do not know; I hope it will not go that low, but at any rate I am not able to single out that particular industry now and take off more than one-half of the protection it has where there is not a general reduction made on manufactured articles.

Again, I would not vote for it because it only gave to the manufacturers of knit goods 25 per cent. protection. They paying 25 per cent. on wool, and getting 50 per cent., would have but 25 per cent. protection. This is a long way below the average of what is given to other woolen manufacturers. Therefore I think that would not be just; but disconnecting the two, and taking the amendment of my honorable friend the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] it would be still more objectionable, because it reduced single-handed and alone the tariff on wool in this country against the wool-growers of this country a little more than one-half.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me a single moment to say only that the complaint in this case, as I understand it, is that the raw material of which knit goods are made is taxed very much higher than the manufactured article? Now, such an evil as that deserves remedy. I would rather remedy the evil by reducing the tax on the raw material than by increasing the tax on the manufactured article. It was for that reason, and that reason only, that I introduced the amendment that I did, to which the Senator and other Senators have objected.

Mr. BROWN. I know my honorable friend had none but the purest and best motives in introducing his amendment. I am speaking of the reasons why we differ about it. Here is one particular class of woolen goods that we are legislating about, and the Senator says that he had rather reduce the tariff on wool than to raise the tariff on that class of manufactured articles. Now let us look where that goes to. When you reduce the tariff on wool the reduction applies to the manufacturer of some other woolen article who may get 100 per cent. protection, as it does to this class of woolen articles. In other words, you reduce the tariff on all wool slightly over one-half; you make a strike at our wool-growers by withdrawing protection from them more than one-half of what is now allowed them, while on the other hand you only protect the people of this country against the tariff on a very small class of the manufactured wools of this country. I cannot therefore vote to reduce the tariff on wool and make this great discrimination against our own wool-growers, or in other words withdraw this protection, which is their very life, in order to get rid of a little higher tariff on a particular class of woolen goods and not on woolen goods generally.

Again, Mr. President, when we come to a final vote I cannot vote for the amendment of my friend from Tennessee making a general reduction of 10 per cent. on the tariff; but I believe that is on a different bill and not on this. I cannot do it, for the reason that I think there are great inequalities in the present tariff. There are specific duties that are entirely too high on some articles and entirely too low on others. I would not therefore reduce them by striking 10 per cent. off and by leaving those that are entirely too high still too high and crippling those that are now entirely too low.

These are substantially the reasons why in this case I cannot vote for these amendments and will vote for this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, whatever might be the apparent fairness or whatever plausible argument might be made for any amendment suggested here, I beg those who are friendly to our view of the case to remember that any amendment is simply death to this general purpose of ours to relieve these manufacturers from this stroke of lightning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 6226) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Robb;
A joint resolution (H. R. No. 279) to provide for preparing the reports of contested-election cases in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) providing for a joint select committee to inquire into the condition and wants of American ship-building and ship-owning interests; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 278) instructing the Secretary of the Navy to convene a court of inquiry to investigate as to the circumstances of the loss of the exploring steamer Jeannette.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 2172) to amend section 4702, title 57, Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. No. 2099) for the relief of the executors of John W. Forney.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

DUTY ON KNIT GOODS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6715) to correct an error in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the House of Representatives has sent us a tariff bill in the nature of a bill to amend an act of Congress which the House, as probably a majority of this body, think has been either misconstrued or in some way deformed by the compiler of the Revised Statutes. In sending us this special tariff bill, this bill to increase the duties upon knit goods, the House has selected from among 20,000 taxed articles one particular object which it desires to increase the tariff upon.

The Revised Statutes were enacted and adopted under the direction of Congress. The manner of their adoption and their enactment has never been an agreeable subject of reflection among American statesmen. The committee who reported upon the work of those gentlemen who were intrusted with the revision of the statutes found that there was an excessive mutilation of existing law. How that occurred, or why it occurred, it is impossible for me to say, but I know that we have been called upon from time to time to correct the revision of the statutes, so as to make them express what is alleged to have been the previous intention of Congress.

This tariff bill—for it is nothing else—is artfully cloaked under the pretext of an amendment of a preceding statute, which, it is alleged on all hands here, violated the intention of Congress after it was found to be incorporated in the revised code. The remarkable political skill exhibited in separating this particular provision of law from the bill which the House sent us is worthy of comment and of notice and of reflection. The bill which the House sent us and which we have been considering for some time related entirely to the internal revenue, a subject standing by itself, a subject not committed to the commission on the tariff, which is now sitting at Long Branch.

This particular bill, however, as I have remarked, was sent to us to revise the existing tariff as decided by the Supreme Court of the United States upon knit goods. After the bill called the internal-revenue bill, or the little tax bill, came into the Senate and had been referred to the Committee on Finance, and had been considered by that committee and had been reported to this body, it contained no provision at all touching the general tariff laws of the United States. Thereupon certain gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber—and I am glad that they were on that side of the Chamber—moved some amendments to that internal-revenue bill, that reduction-of-taxation bill, which amendments did not relate to the internal revenue but to the tariff, a distinct and substantive subject.

When those amendments came into the Senate there was found among the number one in favor of a peculiar industry which I think has its home in Pennsylvania. It has been supposed that that industry had its home in Massachusetts, but my information is that the production of hoop-iron in the form of cotton-ties and all other manufactured bands of iron has its chief home in Pennsylvania and has had for many years. Republican Senators selecting that particular form for increasing the taxation upon a particular product which affected a particular industry in a particular section of this country, introduced into that general bill the amendment relating to hoop-iron or cotton-ties; in other words, they separated that from all the other amendments they desired to present, and they stand in the attitude to-day of having two tariff bills here, each of which has been reported by the Committee on Finance, one relating to the increase of duties upon knit goods and the other relating to the increase of duties upon hoop-iron, upon cotton-ties.

The honorable Senator from Georgia thinks that this special bill which we have before us now in reference to the increase of the tariff on knit goods is entitled to great consideration and respectful consideration because it undertakes to remedy a defect that by accident it seems has crept into the Revised Statutes, if the accounts of this matter be true. The same argument will be used upon the Senator from Georgia with respect to cotton-ties, for it is claimed here that the Secretary of the Treasury made an unfortunate decision by which he reduced the tariff upon cotton-ties from 80 to 35 per cent. ad valorem. That is the claim which is set up in behalf of that feature of the tariff bill introduced and reported by the Committee on Finance. The argument for the correction of the record, for the correction of the legislation heretofore existing, is precisely the same in the one case as it is in the other.

Mr. BROWN. I ask the Senator, with his consent, if there is not this difference: in the one case the Supreme Court had decided that the ruling of the Treasury was wrong, and in the other case it did not.

Mr. MORGAN. There is that difference; but the situation is precisely the same notwithstanding the difference, for the reason that the custom-house officers had been collecting the duty on cotton-ties at 35 per cent. ad valorem instead of 80 per cent. ad valorem under the ruling of the Secretary of the Treasury, and no one interested in the question ever saw proper to appeal to the Supreme Court.

The cases are precisely parallel. In the one case a decision has been made by the law officer of the Treasury Department in which he fixed the tariff upon cotton-ties at 35 per cent. ad valorem, reducing it from the claim of 80 per cent. contended for by the manufacturers; and in the other the decision has been that the tariff on knit goods instead of being somewhere between 60 and 90 per cent. must be also 35. The cases are entirely parallel. The honorable Senator from Georgia must select his ground because he is bound if he finds a difficulty in the one case to sustain it in the other.

Mr. BROWN. I will interrupt the Senator again. I have no difficulty in selecting my ground there. It does not appear here that there has been any error whatever in the matter of cotton-ties. It does not appear that there is any mistake; there is no decision of any court that shows there is. You might as well say that in every other case in the whole range of the tariff we must readjust it because somebody might desire to have it raised or lowered a little. In the case now before us the Supreme Court of the United States has ruled that the construction heretofore put upon the law was an error, and that ruling caused a discrimination of 15 per cent. in favor of the foreign manufacturer against the home manufacturer. There has been no ruling of any court that shows any wrong decision in the matter of the tariff on cotton-ties.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1612) to provide for the closing of an alley in square 751 in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, and for the relief of the Little Sisters of the Poor, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 249) for the relief of Helen M. Scholefield.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 2092) for the relief of Major W. R. King; and

A bill (S. No. 2099) for the relief of the executors of John W. Forney.

PRINTING OF AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Alabama kindly permits me to make a report from a committee of conference:

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the resolution of the House of Representatives "to print 300,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1881," having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same, namely, "and $219,161.54, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to carry out this resolution;" and also the amendment to the title of the said resolution changing the same from a concurrent to a joint resolution; and the Senate agree to the same.

H. B. ANTHONY,

G. G. VEST,

BENJ. HARRISON,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. S. MCCLURE,

E. K. VALENTINE,

WM. M. SPRINGER,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator explain what that does?

Mr. ANTHONY. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate. The amendment of the Senate was to make an appropriation to provide for the expense of the publication.

Mr. COCKRELL. It changes it to a joint resolution.

Mr. ANTHONY. It changes it from a concurrent to a joint resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. How many thousand copies will be printed?

Mr. ANTHONY. Three hundred thousand.

DUTY ON KNIT GOODS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6715) to correct an error in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Georgia says that I am mistaken in reference to the amount of tax on scroll-iron. I may be; it may be 70 instead of 80 per cent. My information has always been that it was really 80 per cent. ad valorem on the value of scroll-iron. That makes no difference in the argument. I will accept his figure of 70 per cent.

All the importations of scroll-iron had been taxed by officers of the Treasury Department of the United States at 70 per cent. That matter went on for several years, and very important establishments were built up in different States, and among others one in my State. They commenced manufacturing cotton-ties, putting a little buckle, some fixture, and cutting it in lengths so that it might be applicable to the subject of banding cotton. Thereupon the question was raised before the officers of the Treasury Department whether iron manufactured from scroll-iron in these forms and cut in lengths bore an ad valorem duty of 70 per cent., or whether it came under the classification of articles of iron not otherwise provided for. Two Secretaries of the Treasury took the subject under consideration. They are both present in the Senate. They both decided in favor of 35 per cent. ad valorem tax upon cotton-tie iron.

Mr. SHERMAN. There was no question at all arising out of the revision of the statutes. It was a mere construction of the law as to the classification of the article.

Mr. MORGAN. The other was nothing but a mere construction of the law as to classification.

Mr. BROWN. No; there was a decision of the court.

Mr. SHERMAN. The courts had decided various ways, but they finally settled down—

Mr. MORGAN. The Supreme Court has not decided it as to cotton-ties.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; but the circuit courts of the United States in New York and New Orleans have decided it.

Mr. MORGAN. There have been a variety of decisions about it. Mr. HOAR. There was no claim of a legislative mistake.

Mr. MORGAN. No, there was no claim of a legislative mistake. The claim was that the mistake was made by the Secretaries of the Treasury in interpreting the legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. On a simple question of classification.

Mr. MORGAN. I know.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was simply whether the article belonged to the class of manufactured articles not otherwise specified.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand all that; but a final adjudication was arrived at that hoop-iron cut in lengths, with a buckle affixed, came under a classification which entitled it to a 35 per cent. ad valorem tax. It was claimed, on the other hand, that the statute really meant and was intended to mean that scroll-iron, although cut in lengths, with a buckle attached to it, should be subject to an ad valorem duty of 70 per cent.; and so under these pretensions or these ideas and understandings these establishments went to work, and they expended large amounts of money in their plants, and they supplied the people of the South and all other parts of the United States with cotton-ties and similar bands of iron at a tariff of 70 per cent. ad valorem, making thereby large profits.

Then the question came up and the question was decided, and it was decided by the law officers of the Government, and that decision made by these law officers was just as conclusive as if it had been made by the Supreme Court, for the tax affected the industry all the same, and if you will allow me to say it with all due respect, it is the sheerest quibble to speak about judicial decisions of this court, that, or the other, whether it is the Supreme Court or a circuit court, in the interpretation of a statute.

What is the claim now set up in the little tax bill? It is that the Secretaries of the Treasury in the interpretation of the laws misunderstood and misapplied the intention and design of Congress in their enactment. That is precisely the question presented, except that they charge that Mr. Boutwell or somebody else who had a hand in the revision of the statutes perhaps dropped some words out. The Congress of the United States nevertheless re-enacted these statutes, and you can collect revenue under them or you can hang a man under them. It does not make any difference whether Mr. Boutwell made a mistake or not, a man who may be sentenced to death under a statute which Mr. Boutwell might have left a word out of or interpolated a word into, after the Congress of the United States re-enacted those statutes and made them absolutely compulsory and obligatory upon the country, whatever is done under them is conclusive, because that is the law of the land.

Now, what are we trying to do to-day? We are trying to correct, not a mistake of Mr. Boutwell, but a mistake of Congress in the re-enactment of this law. There is the proposition, for if Congress had not re-enacted this law upon Mr. Boutwell's report of the Revised Statutes it would not now be the law. It is your own enactment; it is your own expressed judgment; it is something that you have no right to withdraw from or retreat from, except upon the principle of self-stultification. It is your law and not Boutwell's, because you re-enacted it.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I ask a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. Were not the revisers instructed not to change the law in any respect?

Mr. MORGAN. But they did change it. Does not the Senator know that?

Mr. HAWLEY. But did not Congress approve their work under the universal belief that they were not changing the law? There is only one answer to both those questions.

Mr. MORGAN. Universal belief includes heaven and hell.

Mr. HAWLEY. The universal belief in Congress, at any rate, was that they were not changing the law, because they told the revisers not to do that.

Mr. MORGAN. The currency of the country that the people had used from the time of the foundation of this Government and guaranteed in the Constitution, the silver of this country was also changed by this same process. The change was universal, but whose change was it? There is the point I make. It was not Boutwell's work; it was the work of Congress. Now, sir, the proposition is here to repeal an act of Congress; and if Senators desire to repeal an act of Congress to get a higher tariff on knit goods, let them do it. I shall not participate in an act of that kind; neither will I participate in a repeal of an act of Congress to get a higher tariff on cotton-ties. We have got to do exactly the same thing in both cases. What would lead me to cast my vote for the one proposition would compel me to cast my vote for the other. I cannot get out of it logically or reasonably.

I have been very much concerned about the situation of this tariff bill before the Senate of the United States. Last night, when I essayed to make some remarks before the Senate about it, they were in a very impatient mood, and thinned out the benches until we had no quorum left, and I was cut off from the expression of the humble opinions that I had to advance on this question about the time that I was giving a heartfelt welcome to this method of legislation in this Congress before my term as Senator should have expired. I have been waiting here ever since I came to the Senate to see if the House of Representatives would not permit us to take into consideration the question of the tariff, against which the whole common sense of the American people rebels. All the grand industries of the country stand in battle array against this enormous, outrageous, unnecessary, and improper system of taxation. I have been waiting to welcome a measure of this kind, as I say, ever since I have been here.

I stated last night that I was not going to berate either of the political parties for not allowing it to come here. I do not believe that the Democratic party is as much to blame as a party for it as the Republican party; but I do believe, and I am free to state it, that there have been men in the House of Representatives that have been upon the Committee on Ways and Means, a body that has the exclusive jurisdiction of this subject, a body without whose consent we cannot touch this matter by legislative action at all; men who, knowing the demand of the country, knowing how much the future prosperity of this great people is involved in the question of the investigation of the tariff, have for reasons that affect them in their districts, for reasons that affect them in their personal affairs or political prosperity or success, absolutely withheld from the Senate of the United States the right to consider any question of this kind.

I do not know if the people of the United States at large are informed of the fact, though I presume they are, that the Senate of the United States cannot originate a bill that touches the tariff in the slightest degree; that is, a revenue bill. The Constitution prohibits us from originating any measure of that kind, else I believe that long since this country would have been relieved of some of the burdens which are crushing the people to-day, and which are making corporations and monopolies rich, and have been for fifty or more years past. But the House of Representatives, with its exclusive power, whether in the hands of Democrats or in the hands of Republicans, has refused to allow this question to come to us for consideration. The Senate of the United States might as well never have existed as to have been vested with powers thus cramped and limited on questions of this kind.

So, sir, I have welcomed this question to the Senate. When it comes up and we have a chance for consideration upon it, I feel an earnest desire to go into it. True, I know we have appointed a commission to consider it. That commission is now in session, but I know as well as I know that I stand upon this floor, and I charge it upon gentlemen in charge of this measure on the other side, including the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance, that the action which is now expected to be taken upon these two bills is to bury them under the debris of this long eight months' session so that when we meet again in December and that commission shall make its report there will be found another Committee on Ways and Means in the House that will never allow a bill to come forth. That is the declaration of a foregone conclusion; that is the decree of fate that we are now trying to combat with. I repeat it, sir, to give it emphasis, when that commission shall have reported next December, if it shall report then, no Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives will ever allow the House or the Senate to vote upon a bill that brings the subject of tariff reform within the reach of the Senate of the United States or of the American people.

It is for this reason that the honorable Senator from Vermont finds himself constrained to waste his energies, which have been so long contributed to the welfare and honor of this country, in the approaching dog-days to the killing of his own bantling. It is this and nothing else that calls the caucus of the Republican party this morning to determine that we should stay here as long as the honorable Senator from Vermont had a demand for our services to help him lay his bill beneath the clods. Perhaps if we should vote the knit-goods bill, that might be something of a placebo to the demands for tariff legislation that come from the North. There seems to have been three demands for tariff legislation coming from that section of the country, two of which the honorable Senator from Vermont himself offered in this Senate as amendments to his own bill, which he had previously reported. What were they?

Sugar and cotton-ties, two demands distinctly and earnestly made by the very Senator who had reported a bill that had not a word of tariff upon it. That was a demand from his own section of country.

That clamorous voice which has not been able to be silenced even in the far North where so much of industry and money is engaged in manufactures, reached the ear of the honorable Senator, and he rose in the Senate and offered an amendment to his own bill touching the tariff. I was glad to see him do it; but the matter has gone too far. The honorable Senator from Ohio injected into that tariff bill his pet idea of a polariscope upon which he had wasted the genius and energies of his nature while he was Secretary of the Treasury and as to which the Supreme Court decided that he had mulcted the Government of the United States in damages to the amount of about $3,000,000 by a mistake in judgment.

So, sir, the improvements upon the present condition of the country in reference to taxation, whether internal or external, have been moved originally on that side of the House, and we are now required to take that bill as it was reported and to take the knit-goods bill as reported, and we are required not to entertain the idea that without insulting the American people, stultifying ourselves or perhaps revolutionizing the Government, we shall avail ourselves of this first opportunity to get some relief for our own country and our own people, and not for ourselves only but for all others. That is the attitude of affairs here to-day. Having a commission to which they were willing to intrust the whole subject of the tariff, they flout an insult into the face of that commission by saying to them, "We cannot intrust you with the tax on matches; we have refused to allow you to interfere with the internal revenue at all; we will deal with that subject to suit ourselves and those we represent; neither can we trust you with the polariscope, nor can we trust you with the tariff on sugar, nor can we trust you with the tariff on cotton-ties; we must make a groove for you upon these questions in which you are compelled to run."

The supreme will of the Government of the United States must be expressed to this commission in advance upon these questions, and they must obey it, and not take the subject into consideration after Congress has passed upon it, and why? "Because, while we are willing to trust your fidelity and your humility and your supplianee and your compliance with our will in every other matter, we cannot trust you upon these pet measures of ours."

No, sir, the honorable Senator from Ohio would as soon trust his polariscope scheme to King Cetewayo as to that commission at Long Branch; and the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania would as soon have trusted his pet scheme of 70 per cent. tariff upon cotton-ties to the King of the Fiji Islands as to have intrusted it to that commission. They must pick out various things. Those who moved this knit-goods bill and got the Committee on Finance to report it would as soon leave it to a Southern rebel to decide what should be the tax on knit goods as to leave it to that commission that the honorable Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] seems to be so much in love with.

No, sir; they pick out this thing and that thing and the other thing from the internal-revenue and from the tariff laws of the country; out of a broad, immense field of 2,000 articles they pick out two or three little articles on which they want legislation on the subject of the tariff; and the honorable Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] rises and says, "You want thirty-five or forty million of reduction of general taxation; you are getting too much money into the Treasury; there is too much plethora here; and I propose now that we shall relieve it by a reduction of 10 per cent. this year, 10 per cent. decrease of the general tariff that you have constructed," and Senators on that side arise and denounce us as lunatics for making such a proposition.

Mr. President, I hope I am deceived about this, but I feel the deepest possible consciousness that I am not. I hope that I am deceived about the plans and purposes of those who are advocating these measures in this curious form before the Senate of the United States, two bills, one following in the track of the other immediately; but I believe I am not, and, sir, to test the sense of the Senate upon the question of tariff reformation, as the knit-goods bill and the hoop-iron or cotton-tie proposition are both akin and both stand upon the same ground precisely, I shall move at the proper time to amend the knit-goods bill by introducing all the legislation that the Senate has accomplished at this session upon the little tax bill as an addition thereto; so that we can have the whole thing to run together; and our friends on the other side shall not have the delectable opportunity of picking out a special measure of tariff reform or internal-revenue reform which they think will make to their personal interests or the interests of their own constituents to the exclusion of everything else connected with this general and grand subject.

Mr. CONGER. May I ask the Senator if it will interrupt his remarks to have some bills from the House of Representatives on the table referred to the appropriate committees?

Mr. MORGAN. No; nothing ever interrupts me.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 6226) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Robb was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) providing for a joint select committee to inquire into the condition and wants of American ship-building and ship-owning interests was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 279) to provide for preparing the reports of contested-election cases in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 278) instructing the Secretary of the Navy to convene a court of inquiry to investigate as to the circumstances of the loss of the exploring steamer Jeannette was read twice by its title.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask that that joint resolution be considered at the present time. It will take but a moment, and I presume there will be no objection to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It had better be referred.

Mr. ROLLINS. It is very short. I do not think there will be any objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think this is exactly fair to the Senator from Vermont, who is out of his seat temporarily.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the Senator from Alabama will not be interrupted further. I only wished to have these bills referred.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not want to lose the floor; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection made.

Mr. ROLLINS. Who objects?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. ROLLINS. Then let the joint resolution lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will lie on the table.

DUTY ON KNIT GOODS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6715) to correct an error in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President—

Mr. FERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if it would not relieve him to allow me to have the post-route bill passed?

Mr. MORGAN. It would, because I have some amendments that I wish to put on that bill. It would relieve me very much, but not physically. I will keep the floor.

Mr. FERRY. Does the Senator say it would relieve him?

Mr. MORGAN. It would relieve my people of course, and I am always in favor of relieving them. I yield to the Senator, if he desires to take up the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it the pleasure of the Senate to consider the bill at this time?

Mr. SHERMAN. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, who has charge of the pending bill, I object to the interposition of the post-route bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. FERRY. I had no disposition to take advantage of the absence of the Senator from Vermont. I did not notice that he was out of his seat, but I thought it would relieve the Senator from Alabama on this warm evening to allow the post-route bill to be passed. It is very important that it should pass before next week.

Mr. MORGAN. Not physically. I have not been crying for quarter yet. We expect somebody else to do that before we get through. It is the honorable Senator from Ohio who is so anxious to pass the knit-goods bill. I do not wonder at that, because I think that having been a prominent member of the Government for the last twenty or twenty-five years, he should be very willing to do what he can to correct all the mistakes of the Government in that time.

Mr. President, I have not had, and few persons on this side have had, any participation in putting the tariff, fixed by law as it now is, upon the people of the United States. That is one thing that we cannot be answerable for. We may commit a great many sins or absurdities or follies in trying to get rid of it, in trying to respond to the general demand, yes, the universal demand, from the north to the south and the east to the west, that the tariff shall be accommodated to the existing condition of affairs in this country; but we are not responsible for its present shape.

The honorable Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] some days ago put into the debate on the other bill a statement, for which I understand he gave credit to Mr. MORRISON, of Illinois, which sets forth the articles in the tariff now existing which bear a rate above 50 per cent. ad valorem. That table shows what would be the reduction of the revenue in the event that we should put the tax upon all imports into this country at a rate not exceeding 50 per cent. ad valorem. It shows that it would yield a revenue, according to computations based upon existing and known facts, of between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000. The precise figures are given and the sums are made out with great exactitude. I am very much in favor of that amendment when we shall come to it, because I believe that it will increase the revenues of this country. I believe it would take off a burden that rests upon all the industries of this land, and more particularly upon the manufacturing industries, and would enable our people, under a more liberal system, to manufacture goods for all of those distant, far-off countries where our enterprise and our commerce are now seeking markets and are finding such valuable returns.

The proposition of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] is a more moderate one, and perhaps it is preferable, because it makes its impression upon the tariff more gradually and at certain fixed periods of time, so as to enable all the different industries of the country to accommodate themselves to the proposed change. Ten per cent. from the tariff during this year and 10 per cent. during the next year, the precise period of the operation of the law being fixed in the act itself, would give a moderate, regular, safe relief to all the industries of this country, including the manufactures. I believe that no class would prosper under such a reduction more rapidly and more thoroughly than the manufacturing classes themselves. There can be no doubt of it, because we have a surplus revenue that far exceeds the amount that such a reduction would bring about.

We desire to reduce the revenue. That is our boast in the bill. If it was entitled, as it ought to be entitled, a bill to increase taxation upon certain classes of people to the exemption of others, then there is not a Senator on that side of the Chamber who would dare to advocate it; but by a false and fictitious title at the head of it that it is a bill to reduce taxation Senators feel that they can deceive the American people as to the actual effects of the bill by the flaming title that they write at the head of it, that it is a bill to reduce taxation.

Sir, I can scarcely speak of it in proper terms when I come to think of the fact that it is a bill to throw away taxation, a bill to preserve and perpetuate armies of unnecessary officeholders as a burden upon the people, and a bill to discriminate against those men who by their toil produce the real wealth of this land. The men who delve in the mines and work in the iron-works and in the factories, the men who navigate the rivers and plow the soil and reap the harvests, are the only class of men who are neglected, and they are industriously neglected in all the measures that have been brought forward, whether in reference to knit goods, bank taxes, patent-medicine taxes, the tax on matches, taxes on cotton-ties, or taxes on sugar. Those men upon whom we depend—yes, this body of Senators depend—with their families and all their belongings who earn the bread of life day by day, who toil and sweat to contribute the money that you appropriate yourselves for your support while you are here, the men who sustain by their nerve in battle as well as by their skill in times of toil and peace the honor of the country that you so much boast of, are left as neglected as stepchildren under your bill, and those are selected by you who are your pets and whom you can control in political adventures according to your own will and pleasure. There is the animus of all this legislation, and I denounce the whole of it as not having one shadow or particle of good faith in it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, do not say that, please; you have no right before God and man to say things like that.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I will go before the country on it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I pledge my life and honor to our sincerity in this bill, now and anywhere.

Mr. MORGAN. Then put it into this general bill and let us modify the tariff as we think it ought to be modified, and you too; for it was Republicans who introduced amendments upon the tariff in this Chamber. If we are here to represent the American people and not a particular section of them or a particular class of people, if we are not here to represent a special industry against the whole country, then open your doors and let us have a fair consideration and a full consideration of those measures which look to the relief of the whole country. But do not leave out the people whom I have mentioned, upon whom you and I depend for our daily bread, the agriculturists, the miners, the toiling men through this land, giving them no relief.

What relief is it to be to the family of the toiler in the North, whether in a factory or not, that he has got to pay 50 cents a pair for stockings that he can now get for 30 cents or 25 cents? Where is the relief in that? You have a bill here under the pretense of reforming a statute so as to make it speak its original meaning, under which you raise the taxes 100 per cent. upon these goods; and when some of us, at least, from the South come forward and offer you to reduce the taxes upon wool, in order that the excuse may be taken out of your mouths that you are making the pretense of before the world, you vote solidly against it.

If that side of the Chamber were willing to take off the tax on wool why did they vote solidly against that proposition? It was not an act of magnanimity. It was because they felt that by keeping up the tax on wool they could have a better excuse, a more plausible pretense, for raising the tax 100 per cent. on knit goods.

Mr. HOAR. It is the gentlemen on your side.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not account for anybody else but myself.

Mr. HOAR. I thought you were accounting to our side.

Mr. MORGAN. I am accounting to myself for your side, not to the honorable Senator. I submit those impressions as striking an ordinary, common mind, and they will strike the mind of the common people throughout the United States, and, thank God, there is a heap more of them than there is of uncommon people in this country. The safety of our institutions depends on that fact. There are a great many common people in this country, and while they have rights guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States they will have men who will stand by them.

I have never defined my position upon a tariff in the Senate. I have never thought it worth while to do so. I have never thought there was any occasion for my doing so, and I have often thought that perhaps it might be presumptuous in me to do it, but by the votes I have given here, the few expressions that I have given utterance to, I have not shown any hostility to any branch of American industry. I believe in the doctrine of live and let live, and I would root out to the very bottom every feature of every law in this land which by discrimination gives a monopoly in favor of any class or any party or any set of persons.

I believe this is a Government in which the American citizen as he is described in our Constitution, in our laws, and in our treaties, is the chief object and ought to be the chief object of the care of the American Congress; that every man should have his equal rights in this country under these laws; and that the power of the Government of the United States ought not to be exercised for the purpose of putting one man down and making another rich at his expense. It ought to be exercised equitably and justly, taking into consideration the quality and condition of all men and what they contribute to the general welfare. But a law that expressly discriminates against any man or any set of men cannot be called a law that is either wise, just, or constitutional in the American sense of the phrase.

I would not discriminate in these laws against the manufacturers of the country. I desire to see them plant themselves wherever they can turn a spindle or establish an iron furnace for the manufacture of those things that are essential not merely to our comfort and support in this land, but also to our commerce with foreign countries. More than that, I will go as far as the furthest man can reach in making appliances and conveniences and security in transferring the commerce of this country into foreign markets and opening to us the rich return which we must have if our people continue to prosper in this land.

So I would not discriminate against the manufacturer. I would not take from him any advantage that he ought justly to enjoy.

But it is a different thing when he comes to demand that a law shall be amended to give him 100 per cent. increase upon the tax to be imposed upon a special article of his own manufacture, and then refuses to receive at our hands the compliment of the reduction of price upon wool, whereby he can manufacture the article without injuring himself or injuring the man who buys the goods from him. I hope that at least this side of the Senate, and I hope that all gentlemen who are concerned in a proper system of legislation on this question will concur with me that these two bills ought to be considered together. They are both tariff bills and both made so by Republican action; and there is no reason why the Committee on Finance or the Senate either should insist upon the separate consideration of one of these bills apart from the other.

The amendments which have been proposed are said to number thirty-five. I do not know that I shall vote for all of them. I think there are some of them for which I shall not vote. There is one that I shall be sure to vote for, and that is the reduction of the tariff upon machinery, so that the newly settled parts of this country in the West and in the South may have a chance to plant themselves with their infant industries, and may have a chance to compete with the great accumulations of capital and power and influence and goodwill in markets which are controlled by the gentlemen who have done such a splendid business in planting their manufactories in the East.

I shall appeal to the generosity of the manufacturers of the East that they will assist us in reducing the tariff on our machinery so that spinners and weavers of flax, of hemp, of jute, and of cotton, and of silk also, if you please, may have a chance to invest their capital at something like living rates in manufactures, so that we can make all parts of this great country speak upon the commerce of the world as our flag bears it to all the different shores.

Will it astonish any gentleman here that I should say to him that a Massachusetts man, I believe he is, honored and respected and esteemed among us as if he had been born in our midst and fought with us during the war of the confederacy—I speak of General Tyler and his noble son—have gone into a county in my State and erected manufactories there, and their chief if not their sole market for their cotton goods, of excellent quality, is in China? That one fact, standing by itself without associating it with a number that I could mention of a similar character, ought to satisfy gentlemen of the pride that I feel in cotton goods bearing the brand of that company at Anniston in Alabama sold in the marts of China.

I shall ask for a reduction of the tax on machinery in order that our people may plant their infant industries, in order that they may contribute to the general prosperity and welfare of this country, in order that they may feel that it is their home, not here alone, but wherever the American flag floats, and shall feel proud of all its productions.

Is there a gentleman on that side of the Chamber interested in manufactures who will oppose me in my request that the infant industries of the South may be built up by a reduction of something upon the tax on machinery? I hope not. After we have built up factories like those at Anniston, like those at Atlanta and Columbus, in Georgia, at Montgomery, at Selma, at Florence, and away out forty miles from any river or railroad transportation at South Lowell, where there are two, at Tuscaloosa, at Tallahassee, and at Augusta, and many other places in the South—after we have built up these industries that we are trying to build up, if you will remove the tax on machinery and allow us to spin our cotton on or about the fields where it is produced, as we are compelled to manufacture the sugar on the fields where it is produced, and the iron at the mines where it is dug out—if you will assist us in this, then you will have no right to complain of us in our votes upon tariff questions. We will then assist you, not in monopolizing a home market, not in keeping up high prices in America when they are low everywhere else, not in confining your gains to the 50,000,000 people of this continent and the coming millions who are to inhabit it, but we will assist you in building up such manufactories in the United States as that the contributions to the commerce of the world shall be unparalleled, and that we shall be put into a condition which every American who has got his eyes about him at all must see that we must always occupy, that of rivalry with the great power of England in the control of the commerce of this earth.

I will help you in all that. I will not be niggardly about it. I will not confine myself to the particular text of doctrine by which this is to be done or that is to be done, but I will labor with you for the promotion of all that is American, doing it first and mainly by increasing the power of the people of this land, whether agricultural or manufacturing. I am opposed to a Chinese shoe system being applied to this grand continent and its many people.

I have taken the liberty of expressing these views upon this question for the first time in the Senate because I thought that there was perhaps some propriety, at least not an impropriety, in my doing so on this occasion. The tariff which you have builded, the tariff which is the work of your own hands, the tariff in which every sentence and every line is yours, the enormous and burdensome tariff which now rests upon this country that is attributable alone to the work of your hand—I am not reproaching you for it, for I believe you have been compelled to build it that way—but that tariff now is the subject of modification, and the demand comes from your side of the Chamber first. It was your Committee on Finance that demanded a reduction upon internal revenue; it was your own Senators who demanded a reduction of the tariff upon sugar; your Senators who demanded an increase of the tariff upon cotton-ties; and your Senators demand an increase of the tariff upon knit goods.

It is your tariff, every line and word of it. It stands there a monument to your patriotism and your labors, if you choose to accept it as such. Now, when you come to modify it, are you going to destroy it by taking off 10 per cent. of the premium one year and 10 per cent. another? It was not so molded; it was not so made; for if it be a system that cannot bear a touch of reduction in the form presented in the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, it is a system that is vicious from top to bottom. When you admit that you have got a system of tariff taxation that you cannot reduce 10 per cent. this year and 10 per cent. next year upon a horizontal plane of reduction, you then admit that you have a system that is artificial to the last degree, that is not just, a system without integrity, a system without structure, and you confess before the American people that you have a tariff that you cannot knock the cap-stone off of without knocking down the whole fabric.

The proposition of the Senator from Tennessee is a just proposition. It is a fair and an equitable one; it is a safe one. It is a matter of plain common sense. It is a proposition that ought to be yielded by everybody in the United States, that if we have $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 too much revenue coming in, and the tariff is responsible for half of it, we can certainly reduce from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 a year in the next two years without destroying the welfare of the country or without destroying the integrity of that tariff. If it be such a system as that it will not admit of this planing down on this horizontal scale, then it is a system that no man can defend. That seems to be the attitude of the question.

Hence I shall vote with the Senator from Tennessee when that matter comes up. I shall not vote for this little tax bill. I might vote for its provisions if it can be incorporated in the other bill. If it should be incorporated in the bill you have brought here yourselves, and I should find in it a disposition to do justice to all parts of this country, notwithstanding that might be in it, I could get my consent to vote for it if the change resulted from a mistake merely in the compilation of the law, and men have lost something by that. Then you would not be allowed, I think, or at least I would not sanction it, if acting upon the same or any kindred principle you should insist upon doubling the tax upon cotton-ties. This subject cannot be fairly treated apart. It is not justice to ourselves; it is not justice to the general country; and it is gross injustice to that commission sitting at Long Branch for us to strike at this feature and that feature and the other feature of the tariff, and to discuss and pass upon here and fix it in the form of law that seems intended at least to be irrevocable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter the rate of duty on the merchandise described in this section shall not exceed 60 per cent. ad valorem.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERRY, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] on this question. Were he present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MILLER, of New York, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM, (when Mr. VANCE's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. VANCE] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] on this question.

Mr. WINDOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.]

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] are absent together on a conference committee, and they are paired.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—20.

| | | | |
|---------|------------------|------------|-----------|
| Bayard, | Davis of W. Va., | Harris, | Pugh, |

| Ferry, | Jackson, | Miller of N. Y., | Walker, |
| Frye, | Johnston, | Mitchell, | Windom. |

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. There is an amendment I believe not yet voted on as to the title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That question will come up after the passage of the bill.

Mr. VEST. At the end of the bill I move to add:

From and after the passage of this act salt in bulk or bags, sacks, barrels, or other packages, shall be placed upon the free list.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, just a word before the vote is taken. The duty upon salt now provided by the existing tariff is—in bulk, 8 cents per 100 pounds; in bags, sacks, barrels, or other packages, 12 cents per 100 pounds. Then by statute passed, I suppose, for the purpose of protecting the American fisheries in this interest, it is provided:

Sec. 3022. Imported salt in bond may be used in curing fish, taken by vessels licensed to engage in the fisheries, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; and upon proof that the salt has been used in curing fish, the duties on the same shall be remitted.

Unless it is proposed to make a discrimination, palpable, unmistakable, and without any disguise or concealment in it, in favor of a particular interest in a particular locality as against the interests of the general people in regard to this great staple, an article of necessity throughout the country, there can be no pretense whatever for keeping this tariff duty in its present condition.

It requires no sort of argument, no sort of rhetoric, to present this case in any other than the strong light in which it presents itself at once to every mind. Why is it (and I ask the question to-day for the purpose of eliciting an answer) that salt when brought into the country and used in the preservation and curing of fish shall be free of duty, shall be upon the free list by an order of the Secretary of the Treasury, when salt that is used all over the country in curing beef, in curing hogs, in the thousand and almost universal applications that are made of it when so used, a discrimination is made against it of 8 and 12 cents to the hundred pounds? I can imagine no defense that can be made of this proposition; and I ask for the yeas and nays upon it, so that we can record our votes for or against.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been already ordered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. This bill has received a two-thirds majority in the House, and I trust that no amendment will be placed upon it.

Mr. CONGER. Not at this time, but some time I will have a conversation with the Senator from Missouri on the subject of salt that may save him. I shall not detain the Senate now, for I cannot conceive it possible that there are enough Senators so blind as the Senator from Missouri on this subject as to make even such a proposition as this possible to pass now.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that if there was any chance to pass a bill at this period of the session to reduce the duties on salt, I should not hesitate to vote for it; but I know the adoption of this amendment would simply defeat a meritorious bill that I think ought to pass. On that account I vote against it, although on no other account.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to say in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Missouri that there is a tax of 8 cents in bulk on salt to the hundred pounds, and 12 cents a package to the hundred pounds. There is also a clause in the statute which gives a rebate to those who use salt in the packing or curing of fish. The practical effect of that is that the people of Texas cure their pork and beef with salt which is taxed, and the people of New England cure their fish with free salt. I do not think that is fair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST,] and the roll will be called.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LAPHAM, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. MILLER, of New York, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JACKSON.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SAWYER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. CAMDEN.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM, (when Mr. VANCE's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. VANCE] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MITCHELL.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say that my colleague, [Mr. JACKSON,] whose pair the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has already announced, if present would vote "yea" on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—21.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VEST. I move to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act the duty on flannels and blankets shall not exceed 50 per cent. ad valorem, and all laws imposing any other duty on said articles are hereby repealed.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROWN. I shall vote against it for the same reason given in the case of the last amendment.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LAPHAM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. MILLER, of New York, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GROOME] on this question. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JACKSON.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I do not intend to occupy much of the time of the Senate, but I am not willing that a vote shall be taken on the passage of the bill until I at least express my astonishment that Senators on the other side of the Chamber have manifested such a desire to relieve a particular interest which they suppose to be afflicted and at the same time have manifested such a determined purpose to refuse all relief to the great body of the American people who are suffering from oppressive taxes. For several days we have been engaged in a discussion with reference to the tariff question. It is admitted by Senators on the other side that we are in the receipt of a large excess of revenue; they admit that the people of this country are too heavily taxed; and yet they only propose to relieve certain interests which are specified in another bill which we have been considering for some time past. To-day we are met with another proposition, that a particular manufacturing industry which they say is not sufficiently protected shall have the benefit of legislation at this late hour of the session.

I would have no objection if there is any particular interest in this country that is unduly oppressed to see that particular interest relieved, whether it is a manufacturing interest or any other kind, but I cannot believe, and I do not believe, that the manufacturers of knit goods are oppressed or are wanting in the proper protection for their business. I have seen a statement somewhere which averred that that particular interest was now making 14 per cent., clear of all expenses, upon the capital invested; and when I read that there are only $8,000,000 worth of wool that enters into the fabrics which they make, and that less than half a million dollars' worth of that is foreign wool, and that a large portion of the fabrics which they make are shoddy and composed of cheap material, I do not doubt but that the present tariff rate is sufficient to afford them reasonable profits upon their business.

While there has been great anxiety on the other side to relieve this particular interest, they have to-day voted down various propositions that have been made here for the relief of the great body of the people. One was the proposition offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to take a certain amount of duty off salt, which enters into every-day life. Yet that was voted down in the face of the fact that the New England fishing interests are absolutely exempted from the payment of any tax whatever upon salt.

Is there any justice in that kind of legislation? Shall one particular section of the country be exempt from the payment of taxes upon an article which everybody else must pay a tax upon?

I want this to go out before the country. I want the people of this country to understand that on this side of the Chamber we have been endeavoring to reduce their burdens, while we have been met by the party controlling the legislation of the country with a positive refusal upon every such proposition.

The Senator from Georgia, [Mr. BROWN,] who has voted with the other side, avers his willingness to vote for a proper reduction upon all the tariff equally. I say to the Senator from Georgia that if he waits until the hour arrives when there will be a general revision of the whole subject, he will wait until he is in his grave.

What is the policy of the protectionist? They cry out, "We will not fight the tariff in detail," and they combine their interests against reducing the tariff in detail from any particular interest, yet when you make an attempt at a general revision of the tariff there is such potency of influence in favor of protection in the country by a combination as to defeat any general legislation. If I had the voice to-day to speak to the entire American people, I would send them the message of despair from any relief which they can hope for from this Congress and the majority controlling the legislation of this country. They will never get it world without end. When we propose to take it off one article, "No," say these gentlemen, (and I am sorry that the Senator from Georgia joins in that effort,) "we will not take it off in detail, but we will wait until there can be a general revision of the tariff."

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. I have given the reasons for my course here, which are entirely satisfactory to me, and I have no doubt they will be to my constituents. As to the time when the tariff can be modified, it will be done whenever a majority of the people of the United States desire it, for they will send representatives here who will be instructed to do it. Until the majority of the people desire it it cannot be done. It is said it was not done in the four years the Democracy were in power because the Committee of Ways and Means I believe would not permit it in the House. The people have this thing in their own hands every two years. They have the power whenever they determine upon a course to have it carried out. My hope is that they will elect a Congress the next time that will make the necessary readjustment and modification of the tariff, but until the majority of the people desire it and elect representatives who are in favor of it I shall not expect to see it done.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no doubt the reasons stated by the Senator from Georgia are perfectly satisfactory to himself; and I have no doubt they are as honestly entertained as they are honestly expressed. At the same time, while he may entertain those views honestly and express them candidly, from what I have seen since I have been a member of this body, eleven years, I think if we shall wait until there is a general revision of the tariff before we take the duty off of those things that are admitted to be too high we shall have to wait until our heads will all, I fear, be under the sod. When a proposition is made to reduce the duty on salt, that article which enters into everybody's life, which is as necessary for the poorest man in this country as it is for the richest man, which is absolutely an essential of life, without which we cannot live, that proposition is voted down in the face of the American people.

What hope can the American people entertain from this Congress and the party controlling the legislation that they will have any relief whatever in any respect? So, too, when we propose for the purpose of expediting matters a general revision and modification of the tariff by taking off the 10 per cent. additional duty that was levied in 1875, we are met with opposition and we cannot secure that.

Therefore I say now and here that I never expect to see much revision of the tariff unless the people throughout this land rise in their majesty and demand it. I want to emphasize it so far as my feeble voice can do it, in order to call attention throughout the country to the fact, so that the people may come up in the majesty of their strength and take possession of these Halls through members that they send here who will meet their just demands. I shall be sorry to see my associates, with all of whom I have the most pleasant relations, leave these Halls; I would be glad to see them turn from the error of their ways; but I say to them frankly that if they will not obey the high behests of the American people they ought to give way, and we all ought to give way who will not do it, and take our positions in the ranks, and let men come here who will represent faithfully the constituency that sends them.

I know that the great body of the people want relief from taxation. Look at this little bill to relieve the manufacturers of knit goods. Does that affect the people? I can imagine that I see now some poor family wanting to clothe their children, to give them mitts that they may go to school, leggins for the little children, socks for the little baby, and undershirts for the father, who has worked and toiled and labored for the support of his family. I see them going with their little gatherings and paying tribute to these men, as is to be put on to-day by this legislation, far beyond what is necessary for their protection, in order that the manufacturers may grow rich, while the poor people of the country, who must have these knit goods as well as other people, are compelled out of their scanty earnings to pay 50 and 60 per cent. more than the cost of the goods and more than their actual worth because of the protection that it is proposed now to put upon them.

I want to emphasize, so far as I am able to do it, this fact, so that the people of the country may understand that they can expect no relief whatever from those now controlling the legislation of this country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely wish to say that I have comprehended from the first the very disadvantageous position in which this class of manufactures have stood, and I have regretted it. The reason, I suppose, why the Senate will not amend the bill sufficiently to describe the section of the Revised Statutes to be affected is that they have waited until the very end of the session when it is doubtful whether there is a quorum of the other House to act upon the bill in case the Senate should amend it, however formally.

I think it is a question of doubt whether if the bill is passed in its present shape amending "section 25" it can ever be held in a court of justice to amend section 2504. The fault of that lies in the haste with which this bill was hurried through the other House. If the bill should fail to become an effective law, and to produce the relief to these manufacturers that was intended, it will have been, in my opinion, because it has not been dealt with as it should have been.

The bill should have been introduced in the other House early, and deliberately passed upon and considered and brought here and voted upon, for which there was plenty of time; but there has been a good deal of finesse in the manner in which the bill originally appeared in the Senate, and then disappeared from the Senate, and then came back from the House in what I fear is to be an imperfect shape.

I have proposed amendments to the bill intended to give substantial and abundant relief to a class of manufacturers who are unfortunately placed in the position they are by the obscurities and complications of the present tariff. I have endeavored to give them relief that should increase the duty upon this manufacture to 50 per cent. ad valorem, and coupled with that a reduction of the duty upon the raw material to 25 per cent. ad valorem. I believe it not only was fair to this class of manufactures, but it was fair to all woolen manufactures, and would not be injurious to the wool-growers.

The Senate have, however, decided that they will not reduce the tax on the raw material, and they will not reduce the tax upon manufactured woollens even to make it 60 per cent. ad valorem. The question with me is shall I assist in keeping this class of manufactures at a disadvantage with others. I am unwilling to do it. Therefore it is that having endeavored to make this bill a just and fair bill to the business of the country, I shall not oppose it by my vote, but shall vote for it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to make a simple correction of a fact in what the Senator has said. I am afraid he is misled by the number of this bill, and thinks it was introduced late in the session. It was introduced very early in December or the 1st of January. It would have been, I am sure, passed the first day of the session last December except that a motion was pending before the Supreme Court to reopen the argument, and that was not decided finally and not made known until May 8. The friends of the measure, either in the middle of December or the 1st of January, introduced a bill which went to the Ways and Means Committee, and which bill now is on the Calendar of the House, but the bill that comes here is a new one and was passed by a vote of more than two-thirds of the House in its favor. That is the reason of its high number.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely wish to say that the friends of this bill have allowed it to stand till the very verge of an adjournment, or what may be the verge of an adjournment at least, certainly until a time when it is doubtful if a quorum of the other House can be obtained, so that no amendment to the bill correcting it so as to apply to the exact section it proposes to amend can be made.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is not worth while; but it would be easy to give the general history of the efforts of the friends of this measure to get it through the House, and when they did get it to a vote it went through by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. BAYARD. You see where it stands. You have a bill now which will appear, should it become a law, upon the statute-book a bill to amend section 25 of the Revised Statutes, and whether under that a court would say that you have amended section 2504 is a very doubtful question.

There is a proposition to amend the title of the bill which ought to have been made, and made in some respect possibly to remedy the defect which the text of the bill contains. It is called a bill to correct an error in the section. The Senator from Connecticut must admit that there is no error in that section; the word that is now sought to be interpolated never was in it; it never was in the law; the history of the law proves it. Therefore if your legislation is to be in accordance with the truth of history it should be a bill to amend a section, to amend the tariff laws.

Here we see the effect of the tariff, and we see the effect of a concentrated organization. Not a consumer of these articles, not one of the millions who use them, has been heard or can be heard; but we have seen, when the reduction of taxes was upon the lips of the dominant party in this Chamber, the bill that they have brought forward, the bill that they have given precedence to is a bill that doubles the tax upon an essential and important article of the clothing of every laboring man in this country.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not propose to make a speech upon this bill, but I simply wish to call attention to the fact that a bill of this character ought not to be passed without more deliberation than this bill has had.

This bill proposes to enact in the form of law that about $60,000,000 shall be paid by the laboring classes of the United States to a small number of persons, to an industry of the country, perhaps a meritorious one, but practically a very small portion of the industrial interests of the United States and represented by comparatively a very small part of the population. I should be very glad, if the facts justified it, to accord that interest in the country an abundant relief; but a bill that proposes, in plain terms, to impose $60,000,000 upon the people of the United States for that which they now pay $28,000,000 for ought not to be passed without the most serious deliberation.

It is not demanded under any of the proper principles of the protective system, nor any just argument based upon a system of taxation. The proposition, naked as it is, without some further investigation showing the necessity for a remuneration upon those people and the extent of that remuneration, should not be adopted measuring the taxation of the people by $60,000,000 in place of $28,000,000 now existing, and imposing that tribute not by adjustment upon the capital and the income property of the country but imposing that $60,000,000 upon the ill-earned, the poorly paid laboring people of this country. I for one object to the passage of a bill of this character under these circumstances.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to inquire as a matter of fact, have the words in Italics in this bill in line 5, page 1, the words "hundred and four," been stricken out.

Mr. MORRILL. They have been non-concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. MORGAN. My attention was called to it by the remarks of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] who says that we are passing a bill here to amend section 25, and not the section into which Mr. Boutwell by some misfortune, if it was a misfortune, introduced the words which have been complained of. So we are engaged now in an amendment of a section of the Revised Statutes that has no relevancy at all to the subject in hand.

I suppose it is expected that the Secretary of the Treasury will take this hint from the Senate and construe section 2504 in accordance with an opinion of the Senate expressed about section 25. If the Senators on that side wish to give actual relief to the people, they will retain the words reported by the committee, so that the bill shall read "section 2504 of the Revised Statutes;" but if they want to go before the country on a cheap proposition and deceive somebody, they will leave out the words "hundred and four," and say, "After all we have not increased this tax; the people cannot get the advantage of it; we were merely toying with the Senate; we were not in earnest about it."

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me to read section 25 of the Revised Statutes, which we are going to amend by this bill?

Mr. MORGAN. With pleasure, because I want to hear it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Section 25 of the Revised Statutes, referred to in the bill and which is about to be amended by the passage of it, read thus:

SEC. 25. The Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, in the year 1876, is established as the day, in each of the States and Territories of the United States, for the election of Representatives and Delegates to the Forty-fifth Congress; and the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, in every second year thereafter, is established as the day for the election, in each of said States and Territories, of Representatives and Delegates to the Congress commencing on the 4th day of March next thereafter.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill is a very happy amendment to that section, because of course this measure as the Senate propose to pass it relates only to the question of elections, not to the question of giving the persons who are engaged in this industry some additional benefit in accordance with what the old law was supposed to be. That is a most happy conjuncture, fallen upon, I suppose, by accident, but none the less happy.

The Senate of the United States are engaged in a proposition amending "section 25," and they are actually afraid to amend their own bill so as to make it read "section 2504," lest the House of Representatives, in which they have got a majority, might not after all be willing to pass the bill.

We are in a very unfortunate attitude this afternoon. This is supposed to be a very august body, a body of very great experience, illustrious men selected from the States for their ability, for their care of public affairs, for their impartiality, for the soundness of their judgment; but for the purpose of making a little political capital, and it can be for no other purpose, the Senate is now engaged in passing an amendment of a wrong section of the Revised Statutes, knowing that it is a wrong section.

Do they suppose that a Secretary of the Treasury of such eminent ability as Judge Folger, who is a man who recommends himself to the whole people of this country as a man of eminence and of purity of character, would interpret the body of a statute by the title of the act, and when he found the title of the act to be section 2504 of the Revised Statutes that was proposed to be amended, and found in the body of it that it was section 25 that was actually amended, he would read the law by its title and not by its body? If he could do such a thing as that hereafter he would be without excuse, for his attention is now sharply drawn to the fact that the Senate of the United States refuses to put into the body of the statute the words "hundred and four," and leaves to him the duty and responsibility of deciding the meaning of the statute, not according to what we put into it, but against what we refuse to put into it by the title of the act.

The men in the Northern States who are demanding this increase of the tariff duty upon knit goods will find themselves deprived of the supposed advantages of this legislation from the fact that the Senate of the United States have not the courage against what they suppose to be a political tide of opinion to stop long enough to put in the words reported by the Committee on Finance so as to make the relief that we are now giving more than a mockery, for if there is honesty in the decisions in this country, if there is judicial fairness and integrity in the decisions made by the Secretary of the Treasury in the interpretation of this law, then this act that we are passing now is a dead failure and intended to be so. The haste with which it is put through, the determination to have some expression of mere opinion which shall not amount to anything when you come to construe the law, only indicates the purpose of the act, that after all this, with other subjects connected with this great matter of revenue reform and tariff reform, is used as a mere pawn upon the board by politicians, as I think, to deceive and betray the people.

Mr. MORRILL. I am entirely willing to leave the interpretation of this act to the eminent jurist who now presides as Secretary of the Treasury. "That the paragraph beginning with the words 'Clothing, ready-made and wearing apparel,' under Schedule M," is the way it reads, and the title explicitly names the section.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, Mr. President, but it is "Schedule M of section 25." There is no such section. This bill is upon its face a patent fraud.

Mr. MORRILL. We will take the risk of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is such a section as 25, but it does not refer to this subject. The intention is to pass a bill a fraud upon its face, and force the Secretary of the Treasury to override the language of the bill and construe it in a different way; and what is the object of it? Why is it? You have got a Republican House of Representatives. They are still in session transacting business. Are you afraid to trust them? Are you afraid to make a law honest and fair and just upon its face?

Mr. HARRIS. And to carry out the recommendation of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL. And carry out the recommendation of the distinguished Senator from Vermont, who moved this amendment, backed by the distinguished ex-Secretary of the Treasury, now the Senator from Ohio. The great Finance Committee of the Senate, the great financiers of the United States, came in here and solemnly told us on the 11th of July, 1882, that this bill must be amended to mean something, must be amended to refer to section 2504, and to amend a certain portion of Schedule M under that, and then we have here in less than a month the same committee coming into the Senate and backing down from its own proposition and asking the Senate to vote for a farce and a fraud.

Mr. MORGAN. I believe the Senator from Vermont said he would take the risk. What risk does he take?

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no risk about it.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill is now in the Senate and open to amendment. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir; the question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I had desired to amend it as the Committee on Finance recommended that the bill should be amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I felt curious to know what risk it was that the honorable Senator from Vermont was willing to take. The Senator has no reply to make. The chairman of the Committee on Finance has no instruction to give to the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Missouri talked as though this was to be null and void, and the Senator from Alabama did. I said we would take the risk.

Mr. MORGAN. Of what?

Mr. MORRILL. Of its being null and void and of no effect.

Mr. MORGAN. I had not thought that a Senator, especially the chairman of the Finance Committee, would introduce risks into legislation of such great importance as this. I think we ought to have certainty in our legislation, something definite. The honorable Senator enters into a lottery this afternoon, and proposes to take the risk, I suppose to bet money on the political effect of this bill.

What else can it be but that risk? The Senate of the United States led by its greatest committee, as I believe it is conceded to be, taking risks upon a question like this! Well, sir, I will take no risk about it. I will not vote for a bill that on its face manifestly is intended to deceive the country and that must deceive the men whom we profess to protect and to aid by this measure, unless we can find some Secretary of the Treasury or some court who will construe the meaning of a bill contrary to the expressions within its body and according to its title. The Government of the United States has not, I hope, come to that poor condition that the administration of the laws for a great people depends upon the power of the judge or of a Secretary of the Treasury to guess at the concealed wish of the majority. I hope, sir, we have not come to the condition of putting up and staking the interests and welfare of this country upon the hazardous chances of the risk that the Senator from Vermont proposes to take. I have always supposed that that honorable Senator would take no risk that put the people in jeopardy. Now, sir, it appears that he is willing to take any risk in order to advance the interests of his party.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HALE, (when Mr. FRYE's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. FRYE] is paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.]

Mr. LAPHAM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MILLER, of New York, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JACKSON.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. My colleague [Mr. JACKSON] is paired as announced by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.] If present, my colleague would vote "nay" on this proposition.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. LAMAR] is absent on account of severe illness in his family, having a pair with the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG.] If my colleague were present, I have no doubt he would vote "nay."

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to announce that I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.]

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 15; as follows:

| YEAS—33. | | | |
|------------------|--------------------|------------------|------------|
| Aldrich, | Conger, | Hoar, | Morrill, |
| Allison, | Davis of Illinois, | Ingalls, | Pendleton, |
| Anthony, | Davis of W. Va., | Jones, | Platt, |
| Bayard, | Dawes, | Jones of Nevada, | Rollins, |
| Blair, | Ferry, | Logan, | Saunders, |
| Brown, | Gorman, | McDill, | Sawyer, |
| Cameron of Pa., | Hale, | McMillan, | Sewell, |
| Cameron of Wis., | Harrison, | Mahone, | Sherman, |
| Chilcott, | Hawley, | Miller of Cal., | Windom, |
| NAYS—15. | | | |
| Butler, | Farley, | Maxey, | Vest, |
| Call, | George, | Morgan, | Walker, |
| Cockrell, | Hampton, | Pugh, | Williams, |
| Coke, | Harris, | Saulsbury, | |
| ABSENT—25. | | | |
| Beck, | Grover, | Lamar, | Slater, |
| Camden, | Hill of Colorado, | Lapham, | Vance, |
| Edmunds, | Hill of Georgia, | McPherson, | Van Wyck, |
| Fair, | Jackson, | Miller of N. Y., | Voorhees, |
| Frye, | Johnston, | Mitchell, | |
| Garland, | Jones of Florida, | Plumb, | |
| Groome, | Kellogg, | Ransom, | |

So the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment reported to the title of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not ask for any amendment of the title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But it is reported from the committee and the vote has to be taken.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the question on the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask to have the amendment non-concurred in.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the title be amended by striking out "hundred and four," so as to correspond with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance, to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to amend section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the title will stand as it came from the House. Then all this talk about the description of the section will be obviated.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not understand the reason the Senator from Ohio gave for wanting a false title to be at the head of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say that I think the title of the bill as sent by the House is a very good title, giving the correct number of the section amended, and is the proper title to be kept.

Mr. COCKRELL. How did the Finance Committee come, then, to report that it was not the true title and the Senator from Ohio to join with them in asking for a different title?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will let my friend answer that question for himself. I say the title is true and right. I hope, therefore, the amendment of the committee will be disagreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask that the title of the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. "A bill to correct an error in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

The amendment reported is to make the title read:

"A bill to amend section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

Mr. BAYARD. That was reported by the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was reported by the committee of which the distinguished Senator from Ohio was a distinguished member.

Mr. SAULSBURY. How will it read if the amendment is non-concurred in?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will read: "A bill to correct an error in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States." The question is on the amendment of the title reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARRIS. Should not the title indicate the body of the bill, the meaning of the bill, and the subject-matter of the bill? The bill proposes to amend "section 25 of the Revised Statutes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance to the title of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "hundred and four," so as to correspond with the body of the bill. It will then be to amend "section 25," to correspond with the body of the bill.

Mr. SEWELL. I move that the Senate adopt the title as it appears in the House bill.

Mr. MORRILL. We reach that by voting down the amendment. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. If we vote down the amendment I have offered and then vote down the amendment of the committee the title remains as it came from the House, so that there is no occasion for making a substitute of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is exactly what we propose to do.

Mr. COCKRELL. What I wanted was simply that it might not be a farce and a fraud upon the country, and that the Senate of the United States might not say in the body of a law that they were amending section 25 of the Revised Statutes and then in the title say they were amending section 2504.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. RANSOM. Before this vote is taken I should like to state that in company with my friend from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] I was called suddenly from the Chamber while the Senator from Alabama was addressing the Senate, and that we expected to be back and did not think about the vote being taken so quickly and did not vote. I should have voted against the bill if I had been here.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from North Carolina is correct. I would have voted against the bill if present.

The question being put, a call for the yeas and nays was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. COCKRELL. I see the disposition of our good friends to perpetrate this fraud, and they will be responsible for it, and I will let it go. The amendment of the Committee on Finance is their amendment. We want a vote; we want to sustain it.

Mr. BAYARD. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays on the amendment. I made the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. BECK. I have been absent on a conference committee, paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE. I voted knowing that the Senator was near the Chamber, and if he had not come in I should have withdrawn my vote.

Mr. BECK. I have not been here as I have been in conference committee all day on the sundry civil bill. I was paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 29; as follows:

| YEAS—22. | | | |
|------------------|--------------------|------------------|-----------|
| Bayard, | Davis of West Va., | Jones, | Vest, |
| Beck, | Farley, | Maxey, | Voorhees, |
| Butler, | George, | Morgan, | Walker, |
| Call, | Gorman, | Pugh, | Williams, |
| Cockrell, | Hampton, | Ransom, | |
| Coke, | Harris, | Saulsbury, | |
| NAYS—29. | | | |
| Aldrich, | Davis of Illinois, | Jones of Nevada, | Rollins, |
| Allison, | Dawes, | Logan, | Saunders, |
| Anthony, | Ferry, | McDill, | Sewell, |
| Blair, | Hale, | McMillan, | Sherman, |
| Brown, | Harrison, | Mahone, | Windom, |
| Cameron of Pa., | Hawley, | Miller of Cal., | |
| Cameron of Wis., | Hoar, | Morrill, | |
| Conger, | Ingalls, | Platt, | |
| ABSENT—25. | | | |
| Camden, | Grover, | Lamar, | Sawyer, |
| Chilcott, | Hill of Colorado, | Lapham, | Slater, |
| Edmunds, | Hill of Georgia, | McPherson, | Vance, |
| Fair, | Jackson, | Miller of N. Y., | Van Wyck, |
| Frye, | Johnston, | Mitchell, | |
| Garland, | Jones of Florida, | Pendleton, | |
| Groome, | Kellogg, | Plumb, | |

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. Let the title be reported by the Secretary as it stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will stand as will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. A bill to correct an error in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

PROPERTY OF LITTLE SISTERS OF THE POOR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 1612) to provide for the closing of an alley in square 751 in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, and for the relief of the Little Sisters of the Poor, which was to strike out section 3.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF LAND LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) for the printing of additional copies of House Executive Document No. 47 and subsequent land laws, which was, at the end of the Senate amendment, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the copies for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives shall be distributed by the Secretary of the Interior in the manner provided for the distribution of the reports of the Tenth Census, and that all copies not ordered to be distributed within two years after the passage of this act shall be sold by the Secretary of the Interior at cost of publication with 10 per cent. added thereto.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move to take up the tax bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved by the Senator from Vermont that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the revenue bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am satisfied from the information which I have in regard to the conference committee on the sundry civil bill that we shall have no report on that to-night. Consequently there will be a legislative day on Monday. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not ask us to task ourselves by going on to-night with this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] informed the Chair that the conferees would be ready by nine o'clock with the conference report on the sundry civil bill. The House has taken a recess.

Mr. INGALLS. It is very important that that report should be received to-night, because unless the bill can be acted on promptly it will be necessary to pass another joint resolution to provide for the expenses of the Government.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will withhold the motion I intended to make, which was for an adjournment.

Mr. BUTLER. Why not take a recess until nine o'clock?

Mr. VOORHEES. I hear the suggestion made of a recess.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate take a recess until nine o'clock.

Several SENATORS. Say eight.

Mr. SHERMAN. Probably by eight o'clock we should be able to do something.

Mr. PENDLETON. The House has taken a recess until eight. If we come together at nine it will be time enough to receive a message from them.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] wants a formal bill passed.

Mr. VEST. Before the motion is put I should like to make a report from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit a motion to take a recess until eight o'clock. That, being the shortest time, will be first put.

Mr. VEST. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection.

SAINT LOUIS COLLECTION DISTRICT.

Mr. VEST. The Committee on Commerce direct me to report the bill (H. R. No. 6845) to amend the first subdivision of section 2568 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, title 34, collection of duties on imports, without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask if that changes a collection district?

Mr. VEST. It simply adds "East Saint Louis," Illinois, to the port of Saint Louis.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir; I have his letter.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to it.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEES IN NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now I move a recess until eight o'clock.

Mr. LOGAN. Will not the Senator allow me to take up a bill? It is a mere amendment about a Territory and will not take a moment. I have been trying for a week to get it up. It will not take a minute.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let my motion be considered pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to take up Senate bill No. 2002.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 2002) to extend the fees of certain officers over the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in line 8, to strike out "over" and insert "to the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona;" and, in line 9, after the word "in," to strike out "the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona," and insert "such Territories;" so as to make the bill read:

That the act of the Congress of the United States entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1853, is extended to the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and shall apply to the fees of all officers in such Territories; but the district attorney shall not, by fees and salary together, receive more than $3,500 per year; and all fees or moneys received by him above the said amount shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I move an amendment, to insert, in line 7, after the words "fifty-three," the words "and section 837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now I insist on my motion that the Senate take a recess until eight o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at six o'clock and twenty-one minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate resumed its session at eight o'clock p. m.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH EUROPE.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. President, if in order I ask to take up the bill (S. No. 2164) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe. I will state that the opposition of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] is withdrawn; and I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] to come in at the end of line 15 of section 2 instead of line 25. To that the Senator from Maine assents; so that all opposition to the passage of the bill so far as I am aware is withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to taking up the bill indicated by the Senator from New York?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the Senate counted to see how many Senators are present. I am in favor of the bill and will help to pass it, but seven Senators ought not to pass anything.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are twelve present.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not ask a call of the Senate, because there are a number of Senators about the building.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made that there is no quorum present, the Chair cannot entertain the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. LAPHAM. Then I shall ask to call it up as soon as there is a quorum here.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORRILL and others. Oh, no.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Kansas cannot be entertained unless there is a quorum present. No motion can be entertained except a motion to adjourn or for a call of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I move a call of the Senate. If the Senator from Missouri will withdraw his objection to the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from New York I will waive my call, but we ought to have some business done.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think more Senators will be here very soon.

Mr. LOGAN. There will be soon a quorum here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama insist on a call?

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that there is a quorum of the Senate in the rooms about the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call is withdrawn.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the roll be called.

The Principal Legislative Clerk called the roll, and seventeen Senators answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposes there is no use to send for absentees, as they will be here before the Sergeant-at-Arms could find them.

Mr. PENDLETON. Senators are coming in all the time.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to take a recess for fifteen minutes.

Mr. LAPHAM. Oh, no.

Mr. COCKRELL. I say frankly that it is useless to undertake to transact business without a constitutional quorum being present, and we had just as well take a recess. There will be no business done without a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri to take a further recess for a quarter of an hour.

Mr. LAPHAM. I hope not. I think there will be a quorum here in less time than that.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. Is there not in the judgment of the Chair a quorum present?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary informs the Chair that there are thirty-two Senators present.

Mr. HARRIS. If the absentees are called, I think the call will show a quorum.

Mr. FERRY. I ask what is the state of business before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York [Mr.

LAPHAM] made a motion to take up a particular bill. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] objected, and said he would object until there was a quorum present.

Mr. LAPHAM. I think there is a quorum here now.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the roll be called that we may see.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called again.

The Principal Legislative Clerk called the roll, and thirty-nine Senators answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A quorum is present, and the Senator from New York asks that the pending bill be laid aside while he submits a motion to the Senate.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask to take up the bill (S. No. 2164) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe, reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. I will state to the Senate that the Committee on Foreign Relations have instructed me to accept the amendment of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] to come in at the end of line 15 instead of line 25, and he assents to that. This takes away all objection made to the bill. There is no opposition to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to taking the bill up?

Mr. MORRILL. If it will not give rise to debate, I shall not object to its being taken up temporarily.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In section 2, line 15, after the word "word," it is proposed to insert:

And the rates charged upon said line for messages for individuals shall not exceed twenty cents for each word.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Committee on Foreign Relations will now be reported in their order.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The first amendment is, in section 1, line 13, to strike out the words "agreement as to rate" and insert "combination to establish rates;" so as to read:

And provided further, That no amalgamation, combination to establish rates, union, or sale of cable interests established under this act shall be made, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The next amendment is, in section 1, line 15, to strike out the word "existing;" so as to read:

Shall be made to any European or other cable companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "companies," in section 1, line 16, to insert:

Nor shall there be any fictitious increase or watering of stock; and any violation of the provision of this section shall work a forfeiture of all rights thereunder.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after "laid," to insert "shall;" so as to read:

That any telegraphic line or cable laid shall be subject to the following conditions, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 9, after the word "whatever," to insert:

And in addition the United States Government shall have the right to the exclusive use of a wire at such time as they may require, not to exceed four hours out of every twenty-four, and at such rates as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, but not to exceed twenty cents per word nor less than ten cents per word.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 18, to strike out "the most favored," before "nation," and insert "any other;" so as to read:

Secondly, Citizens of the United States shall enjoy the same privileges as to the payment of rates for the transmission of messages as are enjoyed by the citizens of any other nation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, at the end of the bill, to add "including the right to fix rates by a general law;" so as to read:

That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time is hereby reserved to Congress, including the right to fix rates by a general law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This concludes the amendments of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the bill be now read as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read as it has now been amended.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Samuel L. M. Barlow and Orazio Lugo, of New York, and Albert G. Buzby, W. Mitchell McAllister, and John H. Colton, of Pennsylvania, their associates, successors, and assigns, shall have the right to construct, lay, land, and maintain a line or lines of telegraph or submarine cables on the Atlantic coast of the United States of America, to connect the American and European coasts by telegraphic lines, wires, or submarine cables: Provided, That said company shall begin to lay said cable or cables within two years from the passage of this act: And provided further, That no amalgamation, combination to establish rates, union, or sale of cable interests established under this act, shall be made to any European or other cable companies, nor shall there be any fictitious increase or watering of stock; and any violation of the provision of this section shall work a forfeiture of all rights thereunder.

SEC. 2. That any telegraphic line or cable laid shall be subject to the following conditions, stipulations, and reservations, to wit:

First. The Government of the United States shall be entitled to exercise and enjoy the same or similar privileges with regard to the control and use of such line or lines, or cable or cables, as there may, by law, agreement, or otherwise, be exercised and enjoyed by any foreign government whatever; and, in addition, the United States Government shall have the right to the exclusive use of a wire at such time or times as they may require, not to exceed four hours out of every twenty-four, and at such rates as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, but not to exceed twenty cents per word nor less than ten cents per word; and the rates charged upon said line for messages for individuals shall not exceed twenty cents for each word.

Secondly. Citizens of the United States shall enjoy the same privileges as to the payment of rates for the transmission of messages as are enjoyed by the citizens of any other nation.

Thirdly. The transmission of dispatches shall be made in the following order: first, dispatches of state, under such regulations as may be agreed upon by the governments interested, the rates not to exceed those charged to individuals; secondly, dispatches on telegraphic service; and, thirdly, private dispatches.

Fourthly. The lines of any such cables shall be kept open to the public for the daily transmission of market and commercial reports and intelligence, and all messages, dispatches, and communications shall be forwarded in the order in which they are received, except as hereinbefore provided.

Fifthly. Before extending and establishing any such line or lines, or cable or cables, in or over any waters, reefs, islands, shores, and lands within the jurisdiction of the United States, a written acceptance of the terms and conditions imposed by this act shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State by the parties above named, or a majority of them, their associates, successors, or assigns, or by the company or corporation which may be organized to construct and operate cables under this act.

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be construed to limit the United States in granting to other persons or companies similar privileges herein contained.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time is hereby reserved to Congress, including the right to fix rates by a general law.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Secretary to read the last section but one. The Acting Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be construed to limit the United States in granting to other persons or companies similar privileges herein contained.

Mr. HOAR. That is not good grammar. The Senator should correct that.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask to insert after the word "privileges" in line 3, the words "to those," so as to read "similar privileges to those herein contained."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. LOGAN. I see the term "watering of stock" is used. I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether there is any defined, well-understood meaning of that phrase.

Mr. LAPHAM. It is "any fictitious increase or watering of stock."

Mr. LOGAN. I understand; but that is very indefinite indeed. If it has no well-defined meaning, I merely suggest whether it would not be better to make it read "any fictitious increase of capital stock."

Mr. LAPHAM. There could be a legitimate increase. There could be an increase of stock if it is done by an actual increase of capital. The object is simply to prevent any increase of stock without capital.

Mr. LOGAN. That is exactly the point I want to get at. Why not strike out the words "watering of stock," and make it read that there shall be no "fictitious increase of capital?"

Mr. BROWN. I suggest to make it read "fictitious increase of stock dividends." That is the way it is usually done.

Mr. LOGAN. That is, by putting a dividend in and making out that it is a part of the capital?

Mr. BROWN. They declare that the dividends are 25 per cent. on the stock when there is no money. They increase the stock dividends by 25 per cent. without any money. That is usually termed "watering the stock."

Mr. LOGAN. I do not care to discuss it, but I want to have it so that all can understand it.

Mr. LAPHAM. The term "watering of stock" is very well understood, and, used here in connection with the words "fictitious increase," it clearly implies what is intended.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I suggest to Senators whether they might not increase the stock beyond the actual cost?

Mr. LAPHAM. That would not be, because the cost might be more than the stock.

Mr. VAN WYCK. In reply to the criticism which the Senator from Illinois suggests, inasmuch as the rates are limited by Congress, and in no event can they exceed twenty cents per word, it did not seem probably so important to give the other question much consideration. I considered that that was the great point to be gained, as I stated when I interposed an objection a few days ago to the consideration of the bill. I regard it as extremely fortunate that at this time there has been a recognition of the rights of the public and also a recognition of the obligation on the part of Congress to protect the rights of the public from what heretofore has been a grasping of corporations which they have created and organized.

The establishment of the rate in this bill I trust will be a precedent, whereby the question cannot be raised in future that it is not competent and proper for Congress when it organizes a corporation of this or any kindred kind to protect the public in advance by establishing the rates of charges.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to inquire whether the language suggested by the Senator from Illinois, in lieu of "watering of stock," has been inserted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois did not move an amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely made an inquiry as to the term whether it was well defined in its meaning. I do not think it is; but the Senator from New York seems to think the meaning is clearly expressed.

Mr. GEORGE. I think that is a slang phrase which ought not to be used in the statutes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF CHARGE OF DESERTION.

Mr. LOGAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 5224) to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment No. 7, with an amendment as follows: Insert "six" instead of "twelve;" so that it will read "six months."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 8.

JOHN A. LOGAN,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
W. H. CALKINS,
BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
R. W. TOWNSHEND,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask the Senator from Illinois to explain the report. It is a matter of a great deal of interest to many people.

Mr. LOGAN. The amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 8, were mainly mere verbal corrections. There is nothing of importance in those amendments. The only important change that there is in the bill is the change to six months instead of twelve months. The House passed the bill making it apply where a person had served in the Army three months. In the Senate we amended the bill and inserted twelve months in lieu of three. The committee of conference made a division of the time and fixed the period at six months. That is the only material change there is in the bill.

The report was concurred in.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. FERRY. I ask that the tax bill be temporarily laid aside, and that the bill (H. R. No. 5812) to establish post-routes be taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to take up the bill indicated by the Senator from Michigan, commonly called the post-route bill?

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. FERRY. As the bill has been in print for some time, I ask that so far as the text of the bill as it came from the House is concerned the reading of it be dispensed with, and that the amendments proposed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be read simply, in order to economize time. I think no Senator will desire to have the text of the bill read, as it has been lying on the tables of Senators for a long time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there unanimous consent that the reading of the text of the bill shall be dispensed with? The Chair hears no objection.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the amendments reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which were to insert additional post-routes for various States and Territories and to correct the spelling of various names of places in the bill.

Amendments were added to the bill for various post-routes on the motion of Mr. CALL, Mr. GORMAN, Mr. SAUNDERS, Mr. MAXEY, Mr. BROWN, and Mr. SAULSBURY.

Several amendments for additional routes were agreed to on the motion of Mr. FERRY on behalf of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. FERRY. The committee has no more amendments to offer.

Mr. BECK. I offer an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Postmaster-General is authorized to place upon the public highways established by the laws of the several States and Territories such mail service as in his judgment the public interest requires, and report to Congress such routes as he may establish or discontinue, in his annual report.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] some weeks ago, when the legislative, executive, and judicial bill was up, criticised with some severity and some injustice the unnecessary length of the laws we were passing; still he suggested, very properly as I thought, that we should endeavor to condense them into something like a reasonable length. If there is any bill that annually comes before us that occupies unnecessary space upon our statutes it is this bill establishing post-routes from Goose Creek to Sleepy Hollow, and to and from all sorts of places that nobody knows about and cares less than he knows; and it does not place any service on any route after it is established. All that is left to the discretion of the Postmaster-General at last.

Whenever a railroad is established and chartered by the laws of the several States, mail service is placed upon it such as the good of the service requires. With the navigable rivers the same thing is done. Why not on the highways of the several States and Territories let the Postmaster-General establish such service as is necessary to the public interest? That is what he really does now. The bills we are passing are useless, because until the Postmaster-General thinks the public interest requires the establishment of mail service, there is no mail service placed upon any route that we name. There is no order given by this bill that he shall do anything on these routes. It simply says that if he thinks fit he may do it. Why not in a single line, or in a sentence of five lines, like the amendment which I have offered, authorize, wherever by the laws of the several States or Territories public highways are therein established, the Postmaster-General to use those public highways just as he uses railways, just as he uses the navigable rivers, and establish thereon such service as is shown to him upon examination that the public interest requires?

There can be no constitutional objection. I have heard it suggested once in a while that there might be some trouble if we did it in that way, but I do not see why we cannot do this in a general way just as well as by going through all this detail. The Committee on Post-Roads have very much of great importance to attend to, and it would certainly relieve them from great labor if the course I suggest were adopted. We are all annoyed, Senators and Representatives, by this matter of post-routes, and what do we do? We do not ask the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to give any intelligent consideration to the post-routes we present. I have had routes sent to me where I did not know the name of one town on the route, and I could not have told the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads where there was such a place as Coon Creek, in such a county, in Kentucky, or Sleepy Hollow, in another, by way of Brown's Cross-Roads, or any other cross-roads, and they never asked. In the House the custom is just to go to the Clerk and file a route and it is put in the bill, and I believe that is the custom here, practically. The intelligent Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, having an immense amount of work, requiring them to meet day by day, would be relieved of a great deal of labor if we just shortened up this matter and turned it over to the Postmaster-General and let him make a report to us of what he has done, let him make a report of the discontinuances; though I do not think even that is necessary.

If there is a bill that annoys members of the other House and members of the Senate and annoys the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and diverts their attention from other work, it is this bill that does nothing, facilitates nothing, and does not give the Postmaster-General any real authority, or certainly does not require him to do anything except what the public service requires.

I called attention to it a year ago and the chairman of the committee at that time said they would look into it. I now offer the proposition again. I do not care very much whether it is adopted or not, but I would ask the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads whether there is any serious objection to it; and if there is not it would save him and save all of us a great deal of labor if it can be done.

Mr. LOGAN. Does the amendment provide that all public highways shall be declared post-roads? Is that the amendment?

Mr. BECK. It is that all public highways established by the laws of the several States or Territories may have such service placed upon them by the Postmaster-General as the public interest requires.

Mr. LOGAN. I would suggest to the Senator, because it strikes me favorably, whether it would not be better to change his amendment and say that all the public highways shall be declared post-routes, and then that the Postmaster-General have the right to put service upon them.

Mr. BECK. That would be better language perhaps.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will remember that the Constitution gives us power to establish post-roads. If the Senator would add that to his proposition, I think it would be a good amendment.

Mr. BECK. I do not care to press it against the will of the Post-Office Committee; but the language suggested by the Senator from Illinois of course is the proper language.

Mr. FERRY. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that he withhold his amendment now inasmuch as this bill covers all the routes that members of the House and Senate desire to provide for at this time. If he will offer the proposition in the early part of next session the committee will be very glad to consider it, and perhaps there is a good deal of merit in it. At the same time I can see how it gives great latitude to the Postmaster-General, and may allow a great deal of service which is now shut out by specific routes established by the post-route bill.

I would suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that instead of offering it now to this bill, where it would be simply surplusage, as the bill covers all that is necessary, he lay it before the committee, and they can consider it at the next session. I should not be prepared myself now to accept it in behalf of the committee, and I think perhaps it would not be prudent to accept it as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. MAXEY. There are several objections in the way of this amendment.

Mr. BECK. I should like to amend the amendment by incorporating the language of the Senator from Illinois, and declaring that public highways, established by the laws of the several States and Territories, are hereby declared post-routes, and the Postmaster-General is authorized to put service on them.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say a word in reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky. Suppose Congress declares by an act that all the public highways of the several States and Territories are post-routes, could the States after that vacate any of those routes? They are established and declared by Congress to be post-routes. The question then might be raised whether the States could vacate those roads or change or alter those roads in any respect. Congress has power to establish post-offices and post-roads as it may see fit. It selects certain roads over which the mail shall be carried. I do not know now that it would be competent for the State authorities after that to vacate and change such a road. So I think the better plan is to limit the power of Congress over these roads in the several States; at least to give them no unnecessary authority over the public highways of the several States.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Delaware must see, I think, that as to all the thousands of routes we establish by this bill the same difficulty may arise in regard to the States closing or changing them. I suppose there have been 100,000 established and changed by the States time and again. If we gave authority over what were at the time public highways, they could be changed by the laws of the States quite as well as when we designate them by name.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Still these bills do not cover one-tenth of the miles of public highway in the country.

Mr. BECK. For instance, we adjourn on the 4th of March next. Sometimes between March and December quite large communities grow up in the Territories and in places where there has been no established public highway by Congress or one named in these post-route acts, where it is quite important to place mail service. It is no uncommon thing in the period between March and December for a town of a thousand—indeed I saw one last year of over 2,000 grow up between the 1st of May and the 1st of September, when I saw it—

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is all provided for in a bill now reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads authorizing the Postmaster-General to continue an existing route to any other point in the same direction where there has been a new community springing up.

I only make the suggestion whether the proposed legislation will not place all your public highways in such a position as to create embarrassment. For instance, if a contractor under the Post-Office Department carries the mail over a certain specified road, a question may arise whether the State would have any right to close that road after it had been established by act of Congress as a post-route. I only threw out the suggestion.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Surely that result cannot follow. I think there is a very great distinction between establishing a post-road and a post-route. The General Government undoubtedly has authority to establish and create a post-route, which plainly indicates the course and direction the mails shall go from one point to another; but that gives no authority, in my opinion, to the General Government over the roads which may have been created by the local authorities. The Government itself has claimed and has exercised the power to establish a post-road and to make one.

Mr. SAULSBURY. What is the difference between a post-route and a post-road?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. A post-route is merely indicative of the point, the locality, while the road is entirely distinct from that.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The proper construction may be that it shall be a particular line of road. I take for granted that when the Postmaster-General enters into a contract on a specified route it is for service on a road already existing.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. We have a law in the statute-book that all railroads throughout the Union are all post-roads, but that gives no authority whatever to the General Government over them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

Mr. FERRY. I hope it will be voted down. The committee have not considered it. Let it be referred to the committee, and the committee will consider it and report at the next session.

Mr. MAXEY. I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment. The question has been before the Supreme Court, and on a former occasion when the Senator from Kentucky offered the same amendment, I put on record some very important decisions of that court. There are serious questions about this matter; for example the point made by the Senator from Florida. Suppose a State under State law erects a toll-gate over a post-road, can the State authorities stop the mails? There are many questions that it is necessary to look into;

and I think the wise thing for us to do is to follow the course that has been pursued since the foundation of the Government. This amendment is a total departure from the entire practice. Is it wise to do this? I doubt it very much. I should prefer looking into it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. Let it be read as modified.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

That public highways established by the several States and Territories are hereby declared post-routes; and the Postmaster-General is authorized to place mail service upon such routes as in his judgment the public interest requires, and report to Congress such routes as he may establish or discontinue, in his annual report.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to call the Senator's attention to one feature: if this amendment is adopted, then the post-routes are fixed by the highways. In the other case the terminal points are fixed simply, and it gives the Postmaster-General discretion to change laterally one way or the other so as to accommodate the towns that are springing up and according to the demands of the growing population. If you fix it upon the highways, there can be no change whatever. So that after all this method meets the demands of the people much better than if you fix it on the highways.

Mr. BECK. As the Senator from Texas and the chairman of the committee seem to have trouble about it, if they will allow me to withdraw the amendment and refer the question to the committee to inquire into the propriety of bringing in a bill to that effect, I will withdraw it as an amendment and refer it to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads for their consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be withdrawn and the proposition it contains be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 5224) to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALL. I ask—

Mr. MORRILL. I now call up the tax bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Pending that—

Mr. CALL. I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont calls up the tax bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CALL. I thought I had the floor to make a motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the tax bill is the unfinished business.

Mr. VOORHEES. But the Senator from Florida had not stated what he wanted.

Mr. CALL. The objection was made before I had made my statement. I move to postpone the pending order in order to allow me to have a bill passed, which will take but a moment, and to which there is no objection whatever. It is a bill granting the right of way over a military reservation of the United States, and for the want of this legislation the railroad is stopped in its construction at very great cost.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to submit the conference report on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. CALL. I ask that my motion may be heard. I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the Senator from Florida abandons the floor the Chair will recognize the Senator from Iowa. Mr. JONES, of Florida. This is a matter to which there can be no possible objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the Senator from Florida getting up his bill; but here is the sundry civil bill, a very long bill. It must be passed and signed before Monday morning, or another joint resolution extending the appropriations will have to be passed; and in order to have it ready for signature on Monday it ought to be in the hands of the enrolling clerks at an early hour.

Mr. CALL. I yield for that.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee of conference on the sundry civil bill have instructed me to submit a report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) "making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 6, 8, 34, 42, 45, 51, 52, 56, 57, 58, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 95, 96, 98, 105, 111, 112, 115, 136, 137, 138, 139, 143, 144, 146, 152, 159, 171, 180, 189, 198, 201, 223, 228, 230, 232, 233, 235, 243, 244, and 246.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 26, 32, 33, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40, 43, 44, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 53, 54, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 107, 110, 113, 114, 115, 119, 120, 126, 127, 129, 134, 140, 141, 147, 148, 150, 153, 154, 157, 158, 160, 161, 162, 166, 169, 172, 176, 179, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 199, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 210, 211, 214, 215, 216, 217, 219, 221, 222, 224, 225, 226, 227, 229, 231, 237, 239, 241, and 242, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 89: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted, and strike out in line 1, page 21 of the bill, the words "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof "fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 104: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment numbered 104, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$280,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 142: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 142, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the matter proposed to be inserted the following: "under authority of law;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 145: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 145, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 149: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 149, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000;" and add at the end of the amendment the following: "in full satisfaction thereof;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 151: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 151, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "And the cession by the State of Rhode Island to the United States of said island for use as a 'naval training station' is hereby accepted;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 155: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 155, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 6 of said amendment strike out all after the word "retired," down to and including the word "to," in line 7, and in line 10 strike out the word "which," and at the end of said amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That the total cost of said building shall not exceed the sum of $400,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 173: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 173, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 178: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 178, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said Senate amendment insert $10,000; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 208: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 208, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following: "Provided, That no binding shall be done at the Government Printing Office for Senators, Representatives, or Delegates in Congress except that there may be bound for each Senator, Representative, or Delegate one copy of each book or document issued by order of Congress, but this provision shall not allow any binding as aforesaid to be done of books or documents issued by authority of and during any former Congress;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 212 and 213: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 212 and 213, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted and insert in lieu thereof as follows: "To supply district judges, district attorneys, and clerks of the United States courts who have not already received the same, with the Revised Statutes of the United States and the annual statutes published since the first revision, a sufficient sum of money is hereby appropriated: Provided, That all statutes heretofore or hereafter furnished by the United States to district judges, district attorneys, and clerks of the United States courts, under this or any other law, shall not become the property of these officers, but on the expiration of their official term shall be by them turned over and delivered to their respective successors in office; and the following provision in the 'Act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1881, namely,

"To supply district judges and district attorneys, who have not already received the same, with the reports of the Supreme Court and Statutes at Large of the United States, and also to furnish complete sets of the same, where there are none, to such points where United States courts are authorized to be held and to supply broken sets where there are missing volumes, a sufficient sum of money is hereby appropriated," be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

Amendment numbered 218: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 218, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of said amendment insert the following: "To enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to pay Dr. John L. Hays for preparing pamphlet on the husbandry of the Angora goat, in conformity with the provisions of the joint resolution approved July 1, 1882, $500; and the said pamphlet shall be printed at the Government Printing Office and paid for out of the appropriation for the Department of Agriculture;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 236: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 236, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Insert after said amendment as independent paragraphs, as follows:

"To pay James C. Courts, assistant clerk of the Committee on Appropriations of the House for extra services, $500.

"To pay Charles Carter for cleaning extra room of the House Committee on Appropriations, $60.

"To pay William H. Smith for services as assistant in the Library of the House of Representatives the difference between the pay of messenger and that of assistant from July 1, 1876, to December 12, 1881, $752.08.

"To pay Hon. ROBERT SMALLS for salary and mileage for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, $6,927.60."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 238: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 238, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "the," where it occurs the second time in line 5 of said amendment, the following: "First session of the;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. ALLISON. This is the last of the regular appropriation bills, and it is perhaps fitting that I should explain to the Senate the general result of appropriations at this session preliminary to any specific remarks that I may make upon the pending bill.

I have a number of tables giving in detail the appropriations for every purpose at this session, including not only the appropriations made in the regular bills but also appropriations made by means of separate acts of Congress. Taking all these appropriations the total amount appropriated this year in excess of the appropriations of last year is $77,532,621.34. This would seem to be a large increase, but when we come to analyze the specific appropriations making the increase it will be seen that in a large degree the present Congress had no alternative but to make the appropriations, as all or nearly all of them are in pursuance of laws passed by previous Congresses, creating obligations which we are bound to respect and provide for. The largest item is the increase of pension appropriations.

This increase alone amounts to $47,717,693 over the appropriation of last year for the same purpose. The regular appropriation of last year for pensions was $68,282,306.68. During this session we found it necessary to appropriate $16,000,000 in addition to the foregoing sum to pay deficiencies in the appropriation of last year. The appropriation, although large last year as made in the regular bill, proved to be $16,000,000 less than was necessary to pay the adjudicated accounts of the Pension Office. The regular appropriation last year was $68,000,000 in round numbers. The regular appropriation this year is $100,000,000. So, taking the deficiency of last year appropriated for at this session, but expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and the increase for this year amounting to $31,717,693.32, the total increase is $47,717,693. This increase of appropriation is made in pursuance of statute law. We have no alternative except to repeal the law. I do not enter into any discussion as to the general question of the propriety or expediency of the law itself. There it stands and summons Congress to appropriate the necessary sums to carry out the law.

The next increase is the increase of appropriations for rivers and harbors. That amounts to $7,196,075. This, too, may be said to be a non-partisan appropriation.

Mr. HOAR. That includes the Mississippi special appropriation?

Mr. ALLISON. It includes the special or extraordinary appropriation for the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, and also includes that for the Potomac flats, these two items alone amounting to $5,400,000; so that the increase for rivers and harbors over last year is chiefly accounted for by these two extraordinary and necessary appropriations. I repeat that this is a non-partisan appropriation, because on examination of the record I find that of the Senators who voted on the final vote in favor of that appropriation twenty-three were Democrats and eighteen Republicans; of those who voted against the appropriation three were Democrats and twelve Republicans. So in that sense it may be said to be non-partisan in its character.

The next increase is the increase for the Post-Office Department, which amounts to $3,686,468. Of this I should say, in explanation, that every dollar of this increase is made up, or will be made up undoubtedly, from postal revenues; so that it is a nominal and not a real increase, and cannot fairly be charged to the Treasury expenditures. I should also say, what is perfectly well known to Senators, that of the appropriation made this year for the transportation of the mails, owing to the favorable contracts made on the 1st day of July for the present year ending June 30, 1883, there will be over $2,000,000 saved, making in point of fact a substantial reduction, so far as the Treasury is concerned, in postal expenses this year as compared with those of last year.

Another large item is the pension clerks for the current year. It is well known that it was a policy adopted by Congress, upon the recommendation of the head of the Pension Bureau, that it is a wise thing to as rapidly as possible adjust these pension cases, in order that the just claims of applicants for pension may be allowed. The Commissioner of Pensions told us at the beginning of the present session that if he had an increase of his clerical force up to a certain amount estimated for by him he could complete these unadjusted and unadjudicated cases within three years. Congress met this demand by an increase of appropriation of $1,742,430 for clerical force in the Pension Office, the object and intent and purpose being to facilitate the early adjudication and final adjustment of pension claims. It seems to me there can be no one who will say that this is an unwise appropriation. This increase met with no hostility from any portion of this body, but was approved with absolute unanimity.

The next increase is for water supply for the city of Washington, amounting to $1,485,279. This, too, is a necessary appropriation. Another item of increase is to meet a deficiency in the appropriation for the tenth census of $540,000.

In making this statement I will not further detain the Senate with details of figures.

Thus it will be seen that the total increase of this year over last year, including not only what is contained in the regular appropriation, but also special acts for public buildings, for pension acts of a special character, and also special and miscellaneous appropriations, covering claims, &c., is—

|---|-----------------|
| Total increase..... | $77,532,621 34 |
| Enumerated items of increase already mentioned: | |
| For pensions..... | $47,717,693 00 |
| Rivers and harbors..... | 7,196,075 00 |
| Deficiencies of last year appropriated this year..... | 13,205,951 00 |
| Post-Office (paid out of postal revenues)..... | 3,686,468 00 |
| Additional clerks for Pension Office..... | 1,742,430 00 |
| Water supply, city of Washington..... | 1,485,279 00 |
| Tenth census deficiency..... | 540,000 00 |
| | 75,573,696 00 |

Leaving specifically unaccounted for an increase of..... 1,958,725 34

Now, if we add to this the increase of appropriations of this year over last year for public buildings, amounting in all to the sum of $2,829,500, we find that appropriations, excluding all the above items, for the ordinary purposes of the Government are less than for last year.

Mr. BECK. The chairman ought to state, I think, in justice, that the large increase for the Land Office is made up by the more rapid sales of land, and that the increase for the Patent Office, which is quite large, is paid by the inventors themselves.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Kentucky for reminding me of those two items. There is of course a considerable increase in the Patent Office, paid for out of patent fees. There is also an increase in the Land Office this year amounting to several thousand dollars, owing to the fact that for the year ending June 30, 1882, we have had a deficiency in that regard because there has been for the last few years a large increase in the settlement on the public lands under our homestead and pre-emption laws.

All the items that I have named footing them up amount to $75,573,696, leaving an amount of only $1,958,725.34 in excess of the appropriations of last year, excluding increase of appropriations for public buildings as I have stated; and if I had time and it was necessary I could show in detail that nearly every dollar of this apparent excess is made necessary by the growth of the various branches of the Government, arising from the fact of the large and rapid growth of the country.

Now, Mr. President, I do not know that I shall go into any more detail with reference to this question of appropriations, but file tables showing in detail every item of the increase of appropriations and reduction of appropriations for this year as compared with last year. I have made this comparison with last year because last year both branches of Congress were under the control of the Democratic party, and this year both have been practically under the control of the Republican party, but neither last year nor this year have these appropriations been made party questions.

I think I can say to the Senate that under the circumstances this is a most satisfactory conclusion of the appropriations of this year, when we take into account the circumstances that were pressing upon the Committee on Appropriations arising from the legislation of the last two or three years.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one question? Is not this the first time that a general survey could be made of all the appropriations and balances showing what has been the actual increase over the appropriations for the running expenses of the Government last year?

Mr. ALLISON. Of course this is the first opportunity because it was impossible to know what the appropriations of this year would be until the bill now under consideration should be finally disposed of. Of course the calculations I have made are based entirely upon the assumption that the conference report will be agreed to with reference to this bill.

Mr. HALE. All the other appropriation bills are through.

Mr. ALLISON. All the other appropriations are passed, and this is the last of the series.

Mr. BROWN. Will the chairman of the committee be kind enough to inform the Senate what is the entire amount of this year? He has only given us the excess over last year.

Mr. ALLISON. The entire amount appropriated through the regular appropriation bills this year is $270,103,225.70.

Mr. BROWN. How much by other bills?

Mr. ALLISON. By the other bills the total amount is $24,139,871.66, making an aggregate of $294,243,097.36.

Mr. SHERMAN. That does not include pensions?

Mr. ALLISON. That does include in the last statement the deficiencies of last year for pensions, and also includes the pension appropriation act for 1883, out of which special pension acts will be paid.

Mr. SHERMAN. But it does not include personal pensions or claims.

Mr. ALLISON. It does include personal pensions or personal claims allowed by special acts, in the sense that they will be paid out of the gross appropriation for pensions. These items do include also all the appropriations for public buildings, and appropriations of a miscellaneous character, as for example and illustration we appropriated $350,000 for the relief of the Mississippi overflow sufferers, at first $100,000, then another $100,000, and then $150,000, making a total of $350,000 for that purpose. So there are other items that I might enumerate swelling these appropriations, which were from time to time regarded as essential. We appropriated $100,000 outside of the river and harbor bill for the improvement of the Galveston Harbor, and so on, various amounts; of course it is impossible for me now from memory to name them in detail. And when you come to examine the appropriations of this year as compared with last year and deduct the necessary and essential deficiencies that were necessary arising from previous obligations of law, I undertake to assert here that we have been unusually careful and judicious in the appropriations we have made this year for the necessary and ordinary expenditures of our Government, and in this I challenge contradiction.

Mr. BROWN. The chairman charges the deficiencies of last year. What assurance is there for the future that there will be fewer deficiencies next year?

Mr. ALLISON. Of course we cannot tell what the future will bring forth; but I will say in response to my friend from Georgia that it has been the aim and purpose of the Committee on Appropriations in the House and the Senate, so far as I know, to provide for every necessary want of the Government in full, without the expectation that deficiencies will come next year.

Mr. HALE. Has it not been the purpose of the Committee on Appropriations, where any doubt has arisen as to the amount to be appropriated for any purpose in running the Government, to make the appropriation so large that there would be no excuse for a deficiency?

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is true in almost every case that I remember, and notably it is so in the Post-Office Department, because we already do know that we have appropriated more than $2,000,000 beyond what will be required for the transportation of the mails during the present fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1883.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me to put a question? I understood the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to say that the claims made for pensions would require $25,000,000 in addition to the appropriation made for that purpose at this session.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not remember what the Senator from Connecticut said. But I ask the Senator from Delaware if the obligations of law with reference to pensions depend upon the appropriations of this year or last year or next year? As these cases are adjudicated under your law they become an obligation of the Government and must be paid, whether deficiencies come or not. I for one do not believe, however, that there will be a deficiency of $25,000,000 during the present fiscal year in the matter of pensions. I believe that the $100,000,000 appropriated will be nearly sufficient, if not entirely sufficient, to pay the necessary cost of the adjudication of cases during this year and also to pay the current pensions.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the chairman of the committee inform the Senate what is the difference between the grand aggregate of expenses under the various appropriation bills for the current fiscal year and the estimated revenues of the Government from all sources?

Mr. ALLISON. With reference to that I will say to the Senator that I have not an aggregate table on that subject, but estimating the revenues of this year as equal to the revenues of last year, and including the interest on the public debt as a charge upon those revenues, the surplus will be from $50,000,000 to $60,000,000.

Mr. MORGAN. I believe, however, the estimate we made was $400,000,000 of revenue for the current year?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. Is that the estimate on which the Senator bases his statement?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the estimate on which I base my statement.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator's statement of general appropriations include interest on the public debt?

Mr. ALLISON. No; the interest on the public debt is aside from the $270,000,000 contained in the regular bills, and aside from the other appropriations which I have enumerated.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is a very important matter. Let me see if I have got the figures right. The general appropriation bills are $270,000,000?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. The sinking fund is $46,000,000; the private claim and pension bills and judgments of the Court of Claims will require from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000. I suppose it is impossible for the Senator to state the exact amount of this item.

Mr. ALLISON. I should think that was a very large estimate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Say $5,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I think $5,000,000 is a large estimate.

Mr. SHERMAN. That would leave a balance of $79,000,000, without counting the interest on the public debt. I think there must be some inaccuracy in the general statement of the general appropriations, the sinking fund, and the private claims. Does the $270,000,000 include the whole expenditures for the Post-Office?

Mr. ALLISON. The whole of them. That makes a difference equal to the sinking fund. I did not think of that, but it makes a difference of $44,000,000. The postal revenue, it is estimated this year, will be about $44,000,000. They estimate the revenues to come in during the year to be within $800,000 of the expenditures, and the appropriation for the Post-Office is $44,642,000. So that the sinking fund may be taken out of the calculation entirely.

I thank the Senator for calling my attention to that, because in this statement I have given the total appropriation for the postal service, not only for this year, but also for last year.

I ask leave to print some of these tables, in order that Senators may see in detail how these calculations are made up.

These tables are as follows:

Comparison of the regular appropriation bills and miscellaneous appropriations for fiscal years 1882 and 1883.

Now, with reference to the pending bill I will say that the Senate conferees were obliged to surrender a great many of the important provisions inserted by the Senate, and if any Senator desires to make an inquiry in regard to the subject I shall be glad to give him what information I can.

Mr. BECK. I think the chairman had better state those amendments as fully as he can, because there will be questions from time to time, and it will shorten matters perhaps if he states them at once.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope the Senator will name the amendments surrendered in the order in which they appear in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state them as fully as I can in the order in which they appear in the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to draw attention to the amendment of the Senate not concurred in with respect to the National Board of Health. There was an appropriation in regard to that which the Senate increased. I should like to know the nature of the conference action on that matter.

Mr. ALLISON. I may as well refer to that now.

Mr. BECK. The chairman will allow me to suggest there are so many others in the regular line before we reach that that I think it would be better to take them up regularly and I will call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to that one when it is reached.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. BAYARD. I will wait until the Senator comes to that.

Mr. BECK. We have given away a good deal.

Mr. ALLISON. I will call attention to the important amendments. The first important amendment where the House receded is number 44, found on page 20, that relates to the lighting of rivers. The House surrendered that provision. Amendment numbered 45 for lighted buoys the Senate receded wholly from; and those two items are out of the bill.

The next amendments of importance are numbers 51 and 52, where the Senate struck out the appropriation for a light-house at Mosquito Inlet and inserted a provision for the rebuilding of a light-house at San Blas. The House insisted upon their provision and we surrendered; so that the Mosquito Inlet light-house is to be constructed.

Mr. HAWLEY. These statements are exceedingly interesting, but we cannot hear them well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate please come to order? Gentlemen who are standing will please be seated.

Mr. BECK. I really believe I made a mistake. I believe the Senator from Iowa would save time if he would just begin and run the amendments rapidly over from the beginning. There are so many questions being asked me here even now that I think that would be the better course.

Mr. HARRIS. I think so, and especially the amendments the Senate conferees receded from. Those are the ones that I suppose most Senators would like to hear about.

Mr. ALLISON. The next important amendment where the Senate receded is to be found on page 38, and relates to the National Board of Health. After a long controversy the Senate has surrendered its amendments and the provisions of the House bill with reference to the National Board of Health are agreed to with an amendment, the House agreeing to insert $50,000 in aid of local boards of health in lieu of $25,000.

Mr. HARRIS. And all the other Senate amendments are receded from?

Mr. ALLISON. All the other Senate amendments on that point are receded from. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that the House of Representatives as represented by its conferees seemed to be in an attitude of hostility to the National Board of Health. We hesitated long, and at first intended, having agreed on nearly every other item in the bill, to report a disagreement upon these items, and bring the bill into the Senate for the judgment and instruction of the Senate; but after a long controversy we concluded that it was wiser for the conference committee on the part of the Senate to agree to the House provisions. But of course it is for the Senate to agree to the report or disagree to it.

Mr. BROWN. In that connection I should like to ask the Senator whether the appropriation to maintain a quarantine station at Sapelo Sound is retained?

Mr. ALLISON. None of the quarantine provisions are retained.

Mr. BECK. In looking over the bill up to page 21, on which is amendment numbered 45, I believe the House receded substantially from everything, so that in regard to the first twenty pages of the bill Senators by looking over the printed bill can see that everything the Senate inserted, except one item perhaps, is agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On most of the smaller items the House receded. In the important items, the large items, the Senate was compelled to recede in most cases.

The amendment numbered 171, on page 83, the Senate recedes from. That was an appropriation of $300,000 to pay for Cherokee lands. That was a matter of considerable controversy, and the Senate finally receded.

I will say that we recede also from the half month's extra pay for employes in the Census Office, and we recede also from the provision in reference to our own employes.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to ask the Senator with regard to that, has not the House passed a resolution which has become a law giving one month's extra pay both to its annual and session employes and clerks?

Mr. ALLISON. That provision is in this bill.

Mr. PLATT. And yet the House refuses to allow thirty days' extra pay to the annual and session employes of the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. They do on this bill.

Mr. PLATT. May I make another inquiry? Is the chairman of the conference committee able to say what the temper of the House would be as to a resolution paying the session employés of the Senate the usual extra compensation?

Mr. ALLISON. Of course we had no discussion on that. The provision in this bill with reference to the employés of the House of Representatives I think only applies to the annual clerks. The per diem clerks of the House of Representatives are not provided for in this bill, and I do not know that they are provided for in any resolution.

Mr. PLATT. But it has always been customary here, I believe, in long sessions, to pay to the per diem clerks a month's additional compensation.

Mr. ALLISON. I think so.

Mr. BUTLER. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that I have a joint resolution to that effect to present as soon as the Senator from Iowa gets through with this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. That has been the custom for a great many years.

Mr. HALE. That will go through.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it ought to be adopted.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator allow me one moment? A resolution after this bill is passed is one thing and a provision in this bill is another thing. A resolution after this bill is passed amounts to nothing at all, and takes care of nobody.

Mr. LOGAN. It does if it carries an appropriation with it.

Mr. VOORHEES. If the House agree to it, which it will not do any more than it would agree to the resolution in regard to mileage this afternoon. I am perfectly willing to be bullied by the House so far as I am concerned myself personally, as we have been on the little matter of mileage; I do not feel at liberty to make much of a contest about a thing of that kind; but I do feel at liberty to make a square issue in regard to the subordinates and employés of the Senate, and if I did not feel at liberty to do so I should be disgraced in their eyes. I feel that we have the same right, and not only the same right but the same bounden duty to take care of them in the same way that the House takes care of its employés, and so far as I am concerned I will stay here until white frost before I will yield to the House when they are getting for their employés exactly what we ask for ours and they deny to us the right to allow it.

Now, I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether they are refusing to concede the same provisions to the employés of the Senate which they have for their employés in this bill? I do not want to defeat any appropriation bill, and I want to make no factious opposition or obstruction; but I do say that there is a limit to endurance. I do not know why it is, unless the conferees of the Senate are more amiable than those on the part of the House, that all the concession seems to come from this end of the Capitol.

Mr. ALLISON. I for the moment made a mistake in reference to the character of the bill. The clause inserted by the House does provide for its session employés.

Mr. PLATT. It provides for both session and annual employés.

Mr. VOORHEES. I understand it applies to all who were on their rolls on the 15th day of June.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. VOORHEES. Annual, session, per diem, and all.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate amendment only applied to a certain class of our employés. We proposed to amend it so as to include the whole of our employés, particularly the session employés, because we believed that they deserved, more than those who are borne on our annual rolls, an extra month's pay. This the House conferees resisted and we were finally obliged to yield.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should like to know why "obliged to yield?"

Mr. HALE. Let me ask one question. Is it not the fact that upon no appropriation bill heretofore has there ever been any appropriation giving to Senate employés a month's extra pay, and is it not also a fact that for years the House have put theirs on upon the claim that that equalized the salaries and that has been assented to? So, then, the action of the conference committee is simply in the direction of what has been done time and time again heretofore, not introducing any new controversy on this subject.

Mr. ALLISON. The statement made by the Senator from Maine is true to this extent: at the long session of the last Congress I believe the Senate employés did not receive an extra month's compensation. The House do insist that their employés are paid less than our employés. That has been a standing controversy for years.

Mr. VOORHEES. Is that true?

Mr. ALLISON. That is true in part, and untrue in part. We have endeavored and have proffered over and over again to the House to equalize salaries by placing our employés who are not paid as much as House employés occupying similar stations upon a par with each other, and so with reference to those employés of the House who now receive a smaller compensation than our employés performing corresponding service. That has been a bone of contention for six or seven years. Now they insist that this appropriation is intended to make that equalization, and it does to a certain degree.

Mr. VOORHEES. Then, if the Senator from Iowa will pardon me, it seems that the House conferees decide their questions and ours also; they settle the question as to both Houses of Congress. I want to ask another question, and I do it with not the slightest disrespect to the Committee on Appropriations; on the contrary, I am glad if it is so. I understand that the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations has been allowed—and I am glad it is so—an extra month's pay for this year and last year both.

Mr. ALLISON. What clerk?

Mr. VOORHEES. The clerk of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Not for this year.

Mr. VOORHEES. Last year?

Mr. ALLISON. For last year.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am glad it is so, but—

Mr. ALLISON. I think it is worthily so.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should like to know why one gentleman should be selected to the exclusion of others.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not going to enter into a controversy with my friend from Indiana on this class of questions. I think the compensation of these employés should be equalized; I believe some method should be adopted for that purpose; but the Committee on Appropriations on these great bills cannot do it. They ought to be authorized to do it in some way whereby the matter could be taken up with deliberation.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the honorable Senator allow me to make one suggestion just here?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. These wrangles and quarrels between the two Houses have been going on in a disreputable way for five or six years, getting up ill-blood between us, and it is all because the Senate has abdicated its constitutional right to originate appropriation bills. I hold in my hand a resolution now that I will ask the Senate to consider the first time they will give me the opportunity, instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into this subject and report by resolution at the next session of Congress, so that we shall assert our powers, and when we make up our minds to do that we shall get through with all this trouble.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do not the session and the temporary employés of the two Houses get less than the annual employés?

Mr. ALLISON. They do, and our session employés are as much entitled to a month's extra compensation as the House session employés.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You do not give it in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. No.

Mr. VOORHEES. Are they not entitled to much more? There have been two extra sessions of the Senate within the last eighteen months. A year ago the extra session beginning in March lasted weeks and months, and these men were here on duty; and again, when death bereaved the Government and the people of the United States, we were called here again in October, and they were called here. There were two extra sessions in 1881, for which they got not one extra dollar, and yet we are to be dictated to in this kind of way. I am not complaining of my friend from Iowa. I know that he feels just exactly as I do on this subject. I concur with him that there ought to be some method of settling this question not in connection with the great interests involved in such bills as this.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from Indiana believe that in the last waning days of a session there is any opportunity to take up this subject, which involves feeling on the part of both Houses, and settle it in any way that is satisfactory?

Mr. VOORHEES. There is no sufficient opportunity, no proper opportunity.

Mr. HALE. There is not any.

Mr. BECK. I should like to say a word about this. The mistake we made, in my opinion, was when the sundry civil bill was before the Senate that we did not strike out the following lines in the House bill:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay to the officers and employés of the House of Representatives borne on the annual and session rolls on the 15th day of June, 1882, one month's extra pay at the compensation then paid them by law, which sum shall be immediately available.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not suppose a Senator here would have made that motion; nobody wanted to discriminate against the employés of the House in that way.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Indiana has stated exactly the reason why it was not done. We have never attempted to interfere with the House in the management of their own affairs; and that clause is in the bill. It was not amended by the Senate. So it was not before the conference committee. It was agreed to by the House and Senate, and therefore was beyond the reach of the conference. But when the question came on the following clause, beginning in line 2703, inserted by the Senate as an amendment, the House conferees declined to agree with us in it:

To enable the Acting Secretary of the Senate to pay the employés of the Senate (including the Capitol police) receiving an annual compensation, who were employed on the 4th day of March, 1881, or on the 29th day of October, 1881, a sum equal to one month's pay, at the rate per annum they were receiving at the dates herein specified.

So that one question was open for conference and the other was not. I agree that we pursued our usual policy of politeness in not interfering with the House provision; but if both matters had been in controversy one should have gone out or both should have gone out, and the mistake we made was in not holding the other House to a conference on their provision as to their employés so that both could stand upon an equality.

Mr. MAXEY. I want to ask the Senator if it is not the fact that the Senate agreed to the House bill for their own employés with the expectation on our part that they would agree to a like amendment put on the House bill as to the Senate employés?

Mr. BECK. I have no doubt that was the expectation; that was my expectation.

Mr. MAXEY. It was mine.

Mr. BECK. But I want to say this, that if it is ever my fortune to serve again upon the Committee on Appropriations or upon a committee of conference on these bills, I shall do all I can to frown down and to vote against any additional compensation to any employes either of the House or of the Senate. If they do not get pay enough, raise their salaries and pay them what is proper; but to be annoyed by miserable controversies among ourselves and with our fellow Representatives at the other end about extra compensation to employes has been for the last six or eight years disgraceful and disreputable. We are annoyed all the time about it. It is bad legislation, vicious in principle, demoralizing to the service, and we ought to say to the employes of both Houses just what we will pay them, just as we know what we are paid, and make it an offense for one of them to come and ask us to give him any more than the law allows him to have. Till we do that we shall have no comfort in caring for our employes.

I hope this controversy will end in good by having a settlement of what is a fair compensation for all these men and letting them understand that they must not be expecting any more than the law gives them. Let us give them what they ought to have at once, and stand upon it. This controversy may do great good in bringing about that result. I regret extremely that we have got into this controversy with the House, but I assure the Senate that there was no more chance to get the House conferees to yield on this question than there was to get them to yield on the board of health question. The Senate may reject this report, but, in my opinion, the House will again refuse, and you may go on for a week, and the same result will follow.

Mr. HALE. I agree fully with the Senator from Kentucky that at some time pretty soon some committee ought to be fixed that will settle this question forever. It is not a pleasant thing that toward the close of every session of Congress we are brought to confront this question of the pay of the employes of the two Houses, and it is always on a claim made by somebody for increased pay.

Now, it is an undoubted fact that of all the places that are held in Washington the most desirable places, and the places that are sought for most of all, are the places about the two Houses. The amount of labor that is performed by the employes of either House, compared with the employes of the Departments, is very small. The employes of the Departments remain here for twelve months of the year, with only a vacation, it may be, of thirty days, while the employes of the two Houses, with rare exceptions, only remain here in the two years of a Congress about half the time. The scale of pay is very much larger for the employes of the two Houses than for employes in the Departments, and yet we are never allowed a moment's peace, but everybody about the House and Senate is clamoring for increase of pay. It is time that the thing ceased. It is time that something was done to end this everlasting impertunity that besets us every session at its close to increase the pay of our employes. If the appeal of anybody should come up to us it should be from the employes who are paid at lower rates in the Departments, where they work month in and month out, and only have a few weeks' vacation. I, for one, agree fully with the Senator from Kentucky, that it is a thing that ought to be ended, so that we shall not everlastingly hear from it every year.

Mr. ALLISON. I have only a few words more to add to complete my statement.

As to the amendments with reference to the questions concerning the Library, the committee receded on the matter relating to the publication of the Peter Force papers and the purchase of the Rochambeau papers and the Carpenter papers. The other amendments were agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. Pardon me, I did not hear the second item the Senator mentioned.

Mr. ALLISON. The Rochambeau papers; the Senate Committee were obliged to recede from that amendment; and also, I will say, (which I omitted to state before,) that with reference to the roads to national cemeteries, the House insisted upon our receding from our amendments in that regard, and they are all receded from. I believe now that I have stated all the important features of this report.

Mr. VOORHEES. It is well to make up the record as we go along. I desire to state here in this presence, for the purposes of the record, that the most valuable, the most precious, and the most instructive collection of unpublished papers to-day, in my judgment, in the world are those relating to the alliance between France and this country in this country's struggle for American independence, those papers which illustrate the policy of the two governments, the plans of military and naval operations, embracing more than two thousand unpublished manuscript papers and maps, and the time will come when intelligent people will stand amazed at the stupidity which rejects the purchase of such treasures of knowledge as these.

My only object in rising at this time is, perhaps, accomplished; but I do wish to arrest the attention of the Senate, this grave and intelligent body, to the great wrong that is done to the present and to future generations by rejecting the acquirement of this historical collection reflecting light upon a most important period in the history of this Government; and I give notice that at the next session, early and often and throughout, this matter will be brought before Congress until the people of the United States shall have access to this great treasure.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—

EXTRA PAY TO EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me while I introduce a joint resolution, as I want to get it to the House as early as possible? It will only take a moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) providing one month's extra pay for certain employes of the Senate; which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Acting Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to all committee clerks, pages, laborers, and other employes of the Senate who do not now receive annual salaries, a sum equal to one month's extra pay at the adjournment of the present session of Congress, and the amount necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be immediately available.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I never voted for one while I have been here, and I shall vote against it now; but I will not stand in the way of its being offered if nobody else objects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it leads to debate I shall go on.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not understand that the Senator from Kansas objects to it, but wants the yeas and nays on its passage.

Mr. PLUMB. I object.

Mr. SHERMAN. While it is unpleasant to oppose these things, I do not think the Senate ought ever to pass them. I will not vote for them, though I do not like to stand in the way in the presence of our employes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over, objection being made to its consideration.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 670) to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of Fort Wayne, in the State of Indiana; and

A bill (S. No. 2002) to extend the fees of certain officers over the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to attach to the statement of the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] some remarks in regard to other appropriations of public money that are not included in the annual appropriations.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from Ohio pardon me? I wish to make an inquiry or two in regard to one or two items in the bill. Had I better do that now or wait till he makes his statement?

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator will wait. I must confess that the impression made on my mind by the statement made by the Senator from Iowa is rather unpleasant. It shows that the enormous expenses of the Government have gone beyond what I estimated even in the estimate I submitted the other day, I am sorry to say. It is no fault of the Committee on Appropriations, because I have no doubt they have done their utmost to keep down the appropriations. As I understand the statement made by him, we have appropriated for the annual service of the present fiscal year $270,000,000. Then there are claims in their multiplied forms as adjudicated by the Court of Claims, by the commissioners of claims growing out of our treaties, and by private-claim bills passed by Congress, including the Creek orphan fund and a good many other such cases and private pension bills, which he estimates at $5,000,000. I think that is a very low estimate, but there are besides that permanent appropriations amounting to $126,000,000, all of which are fixed by permanent laws beyond the power of Congress to control.

These appropriations, rarely looked after, are contained in the Book of Estimates, and I will give the leading items of them, so as to show that they are of a character that must be provided for, even if the annual appropriations may not all be paid.

There is the interest on the public debt, amounting to $65,000,000; there is the sinking fund, $46,000,000; there is the permanent appropriation for the collection of the customs through the Treasury Department, amounting to $5,739,000. There are other permanent appropriations in the Treasury Department, including largely drawbacks, bounties, allowances, &c., under customs laws, and repayment to importers of excess of deposits in the current transactions going on every day in the custom-houses. The total permanent appropriations under the Treasury Department, including interest and sinking fund, are $117,795,814.22.

Under the War Department there are permanent appropriations to the amount of $615,000; under the Navy Department $76,000; under the Interior Department, mostly trust funds for Indians, amounting to $1,075,625; under the Post-Office Department there is a permanent appropriation of $750,000; under the Department of Justice $150,000, for fees of supervisors of election, making an aggregate of $126,202,939.22.

These together make the appropriations now fixed by existing law $401,000,000; and no reference is made here to the possible deficiencies for pensions or the possible deficiencies in other branches of the public service.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator let me ask him a question? Are not the additional appropriations that he has arrayed here permanent in their nature, and of a kind that do not and cannot vary from year to year?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have said that already. They are beyond our control, and they must be paid out, every dollar.

Mr. HALE. They are not things that anybody, no matter who may be in power, can vary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have said that. They are permanent appropriations, the interest on the public debt, the sinking fund, the expenses of the collection of revenue, trust funds for Indians, the refunding of drawbacks, the allowance of pensions, &c. They are not subject to variation, but they are paid out of the revenues of the Government to the last dollar.

Mr. HALE. Do they in any way interfere with or impair the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations with reference to the ordinary running expenses of the Government?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all; I have said that; but I want to show that the expenditures of the Government have increased largely in the part which we can control, reaching $270,000,000, so that now the expenditures of the Government on the basis of the estimates for the permanent appropriations will amount this year to $401,000,000. What have we to meet this?

Mr. HALE. What does the Senator mean by saying that the expenses in the ordinary running of the Government have increased, after the showing of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations? Have they increased except in those items where an increase was a necessity?

Mr. SHERMAN. I said before that I was not complaining of the Committee on Appropriations, because the chairman has clearly and fairly shown that these increased expenditures have been caused by laws that were upon the statute-books for the allowance of pensions and also for the other appropriations he has mentioned. I am not criticising anybody.

The revenues of the Government are estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury at $400,000,000; I believe there will be more than that, perhaps $410,000,000; and the revenues from the postal service will be added also, as they are included in the appropriations, amounting to $44,000,000, as stated by the Senator from Iowa, making $444,000,000, leaving a balance of $43,000,000, subject, however, to be drawn upon by any deficiency that may still exist for the payment of pensions or in any other branch of the public service.

I can only say that when I estimated the surplus at $50,000,000 in the beginning of the debate on the tax bill, I seem to have exceeded the amount that would probably be realized, although it is to be considered that all these appropriations are not usually paid. There are balances on all of them remaining in the public Treasury at the close of the year; and the revenues, I trust, will be somewhat larger than were estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury. But, after all, the magnificent surplus we had last year is fast wasting away. I blame no one for it, because I do not see how these appropriations could be avoided.

Mr. CONGER. Is not the amount of interest on the public debt being reduced as the debt is paid off?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is now $65,000,000. It is only by having a large surplus revenue and reducing the public debt that the interest is to be reduced.

Mr. HOAR. I think there ought to be one fact stated and put upon record about the Rochambeau papers, and I listened to what the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] said. When the Count de Rochambeau was over here the Senate passed a resolution authorizing the Librarian to receive these papers. It was stated, I think by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] that that resolution would bind the Senate in honor, bind our Government in honor, as far as we could, to purchase the papers if the price were a reasonable one, reasonable in regard to their value. The papers were left here under that resolution.

Allow me to say further that it is but four months to the next session of Congress, and the sum of $20,000 which is proposed is a price I understand which certainly will be agreed to by everybody as a reasonable price. So I hope it will not be understood by anybody that in consenting to this report now the Senate proposes to abandon the purpose of purchasing those papers. We have purchased the Franklin papers, which probably would have been lost to us altogether unless they were paid for at this time. I suppose the Committee on Appropriations thought perhaps there was as much of that kind of expenditure as there should be in one bill.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me, we presented to the House the statement now made by the Senator from Massachusetts, that we passed a resolution in the Senate in reference to the Rochambeau papers, and that we felt we were in some degree bound by that resolution, if not absolutely bound. But the House had not examined in detail into this subject, and they stated substantially what the Senator from Massachusetts now states, that the Rochambeau papers were in a safe place; that they had been kept safely for a long time, and that they would probably be kept intact for four months longer.

Mr. HAWLEY. Before making an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa, I wish to say that I concur with every word the Senator from Indiana uttered. I spent eight or ten hours looking over the Rochambeau papers, and it will be calamitous to the writers of our history if we do not procure them.

But I rose to ask the Senator from Iowa whether we had saved money enough to the Signal Service to continue its three observations a day, and whether enough of the appropriation of $310,000 made by the Senate remains for that purpose?

Mr. ALLISON. The difference between $250,000 and $310,000 was divided equally and that item stands at $280,000. That was one of the topics of serious difference, and we finally met the House half way. They met us in the same way.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Senator know, has he any information from the Signal Office as to whether they can maintain their three observations a day?

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that the House conferees made with some force the argument that a bureau which could have stolen from it $100,000 in a single year without knowing it must be managed rather loosely.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is an unjust method of dealing with that service.

Mr. ALLISON. I am only stating what the conferees on the part of the House of Representatives said.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not reflecting upon the Senator or upon anybody; I am reflecting upon the statement itself. I know that that is dealing with an indispensable public service which does command the confidence of the people and the country. I know there was gross neglect that enabled Howgate to carry off that amount of money; but I call attention to the fact that in the estimates for the current year that Department has asked for some $50,000 less than was asked for last year, and at the same time has shown indubitably that it has largely increased the public service, and benefited that service.

I showed before to the Senate when this matter was under consideration that the contract with the Western Union Telegraph Company called for $180,000 a year to get the three observations, and that the $60,000 was taken off with the idea or speculation that two observations a day would answer; that we were about to spend nearly a million dollars on that service and yet to save $60,000 would reduce the number of daily observations from three to two, which would reduce their value 50 per cent. I do not think they can get along with an excellent telegraph service for less than $310,000, and I am very sorry that the conferees agreed to any reduction. I think I ought to move that the Senate insist on that item. I will move that the Senate insist upon the words "three hundred and ten thousand dollars," in line 1221, on page 50.

Mr. BUTLER. I give notice that I shall move to insist on the amendment of the Senate in reference to the employes of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. This report must be voted up or down as a whole. You cannot pick out items.

Mr. HALE. The question is whether the Senate will concur in the report or not, and it must be put in that form.

Mr. ALLISON. If Senators do not want to adopt the report, they can vote it down.

Mr. HOAR. The items in a conference report cannot be separated.

Mr. SHERMAN. There must be one vote on it.

Mr. HOAR. The consent of the House to certain things may be based upon our consent to others. We therefore cannot except from that consent other matters in the report and reserve still our own view of something else.

Mr. HALE. It is a single question.

Mr. BECK. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is whether the individual items in the report may be reserved. The opinion of the Senate seems to be that the question must be put on concurring in the report as a whole. The Chair is fully of that opinion on reflection.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to say, although not on the conference committee, that I know the service is a very hard one, and while some of us may think amendments in which we are particularly interested ought to have been retained, I am very well satisfied that the conference committee has done everything to obtain what the Senate desired to go upon the bill, and I think instead of any unkind feeling toward the conferees on the part of the Senate, considering the vast amount of labor which they performed, and the earnestness with which they have insisted, if they have not arranged to retain all that we want in the bill, so far from any excitement or any unkind feeling toward the conferees of the Senate, they are deserving of our thanks for what they have done. I am satisfied from what I have seen of the labors of that committee that they have done the best they could, and that they are entitled to our thanks for their services.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words before any vote is taken, as I happened to be one of the conferees. First, a word about the appropriations. They are much larger than ever before. I do not know that they are extravagant, but the chairman of the committee will find himself mistaken if the usual amount of deficiencies is not presented for this year's service that is presented generally. For instance, we passed a law the other day requiring the system of letter-carriers to be rearranged and redistributed. The Post-Office Department demanded $280,000 more on that account, and we gave them $200,000. We gave $80,000 less than they told us they were going to spend. That little item was passed the other day, and is now in this bill. So with a great many other things. I have no doubt there will be the usual deficiencies in addition to what the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] said, about twenty or twenty-five million dollars deficiencies for pensions. It may be seven million, eight million, ten million, it may be twelve million, I do not know; nobody knows. The deficiencies will be coming in as usual, though I believe we have endeavored to avoid the occasion for deficiencies as much as we could. But they will come just as naturally and necessarily as they always have come.

The Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] for what purpose I do not know, undertook to show that the $126,000,000 of permanent appropriation was inflexible and had to be spent, and therefore there was no getting away from that. That I deny. I take the debt statement before me of the 1st day of July. In the list of permanent appropriations making up the $126,000,000 is the item of $65,000,000 for interest on the public debt. The public debt is made up, according to the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, of less than $450,000,000 of 3½ percents, payable now.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will find the computation made in detail in the Book of Estimates, giving the amount of each debt.

Mr. BECK. I know. I have the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for this year, which makes precisely the same statement that the Senator from Ohio made, giving each of the items. I have it in my hand. But that does not make it necessarily true, and I will state the reason: $65,000,000, the Secretary of the Treasury said in his annual report, was the interest on the public debt. The debt statement of the 1st of July shows this condition of things: less than $450,000,000 of 3½ percents, the interest upon which is, say, $15,750,000; $250,000,000 of 4½ percents falling due in 1891, the interest amounting to $11,250,000; $738,897,790 of 4 percents, maturing in 1907, the interest on which is $29,555,911, or a total interest of about $56,000,000, instead of $65,000,000, as stated in the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury. There can be no mistake about this.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator omits, for instance, the interest on the Pacific Railroad bonds, which amounts to $3,877,410. That is at the bottom of the statement.

Mr. BECK. It is kept separate altogether and refunded, and it forms no part of the sinking fund that we have to keep now for supplying provision to pay our interest and to lay aside a reserve fund.

Mr. SHERMAN. The interest upon this railway debt is paid just like any other interest of the Government. The amount received under what is called the Thurman act is counted as part of the current revenue of the Government.

Mr. BECK. Certainly the interest is refunded in that way.

Mr. SHERMAN. Still it is counted as part of the fund of $400,000,000.

Mr. BECK. The interest of the public debt on the 1st day of July, if Senators will look at the debt statement, will be found to be as I stated, about $56,000,000 instead of $65,000,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. That cannot be so, because here is the matter in detail; here are the regular estimates upon which all your appropriations are founded for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883; and here is the whole amount in detail worked out, showing that the interest on the public debt is $65,000,000.

Mr. BECK. The Senator will surely understand, he does understand, that when the Secretary made those estimates he did not know how much of the public debt would be paid off during the past year. We have paid $146,000,000; I believe nearly $150,000,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. This statement was made at the same time as the statement from which the Senator read.

Mr. BECK. We paid $13,860,027 during the month of July.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Kentucky, as I understand it, is reading from the debt statement of July, 1882.

Mr. BECK. I am.

Mr. ALLISON. The estimate the Senator from Ohio relies on was made up in 1881, based upon the public debt then existing, a large portion of which has since been paid.

Mr. BECK. That is just what I am stating.

Mr. SHERMAN. As a matter of course this estimate was based upon probable payments to be made during this fiscal year.

Mr. BECK. And during the last month we have paid nearly $14,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to ask the Senator from Ohio if it was possible for the Secretary of the Treasury to know last September when that estimate was made up how much of the public debt would be paid between that date and the 1st day of July?

Mr. SHERMAN. He could estimate it with great accuracy, and here it is.

Mr. ALLISON. How much did he estimate would be paid before the 1st of July?

Mr. SHERMAN. He estimated the amount due on each class of debt, specifying the amount of each.

Mr. ALLISON. But how much could the Secretary of the Treasury estimate would be paid between September, 1881, and July 1, 1882?

Mr. SHERMAN. He made an estimate according to the ordinary amounts they were paying.

Mr. ALLISON. Do we not all know that we have paid largely beyond any estimate made by anybody last fall?

Mr. SHERMAN. How much?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly $70,000,000 beyond what was estimated.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is entirely mistaken. That would not make anything like the difference stated here.

Mr. BECK. Nearly $14,000,000 was paid last month. Of course the interest stops on that when it is paid. Therefore the claim that they have $65,000,000 interest to pay this year will prove to be I think at least nine million more than we shall be compelled to pay. I am willing to admit the $3,000,000 interest on the bonds of the Pacific railroads. That would still leave six or seven million dollars. Then the sinking fund is claimed to be a fund of $45,611,000. We have now so adjusted our debt that we can only pay $710,000,000 before 1907, or an average of $28,000,000 a year between now and that time. We are paying off the public debt at the rate of $150,000,000 now. So if we continue to pay at that rate for a year or two longer we cannot pay on an average $20,000,000 toward any so-called sinking fund, or if we do we shall have paid off $450,000,000 of 3½ percents and the $250,000,000 of 4½ percents before 1891, and from 1891 to 1907 we can pay nothing on the sinking fund.

I say, then, that the pretense that we are obliged to provide $45,600,000 annually as a sinking fund, when we can only pay an average of $28,000,000 now, even if we cease paying at the rate of $150,000,000 a year to-day, when, as I said, we paid $14,000,000 last month, is, as I have always claimed, an absurdity. Therefore we can reduce our taxation, but the trouble is that to the extent of $17,000,000 we are called on to pay more to the sinking fund than is required, though we have to pay about eight or nine million dollars less interest every year.

In the statement which I have before me, just furnished by the Senator from Missouri, $57,360,000 is the total of interest for the year just closed, instead of $65,000,000, showing that I was correct about it.

Mr. RANSOM. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question for information? Take the interest debt, the sinking fund, the running expenses, and all the expenses of the Government, what does he make the grand aggregate to be?

Mr. BECK. All the expenditures?

Mr. RANSOM. Yes, altogether. The Senator from Ohio made it $401,000,000. I desire to know what the Senator from Kentucky makes it?

Mr. BECK. I have not at this moment the exact facts before me in regard to it. I have the record of the Treasury in a table which I will hand to the Senator from North Carolina. He can look over it. He will find it there somewhere.

Now a word about this conference report. The first forty-four amendments of the Senate were substantially agreed to by the House, the item of $25,000 for lighted buoys being the first point where they made a serious stand, and, if I may use the word, compelled us to recede. Then came the board of health items, which I hope the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] will call attention to, which we insisted upon until it was painfully apparent that there was no possibility of obtaining an agreement.

The best we could do was to obtain an agreement from the House conferees to increase the appropriation made by them "for aiding State and local boards of health and for local quarantine stations in carrying out their rules and regulations, and to prevent the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases in the United States" from $25,000 to $50,000. That the House conferees agreed to. Beyond that they would not agree to anything; and rather than report a disagreement on that single item we made the report that we have, accepting their proposition of giving $50,000 in aid instead of $25,000, and striking out all the amendments the Senate had put in in regard to stations.

Then we came to another serious matter in regard to the $300,000 which the Senate had inserted to be paid into the treasury of the Cherokee Nation with the proviso—

That the Cherokee Nation, through its proper authorities, shall execute conveyances satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior for the tracts occupied by the Pawnees, Poncas, Nez Percés, Otoes and Missourias, and Osages, so that these lands can be secured to said tribes in accordance with treaty stipulations and agreements.

That condition the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate had made very clear to us ought to be inserted, but upon argument with the House conferees we found that they had not only serious difficulty in agreeing with us, but denied, after having made a careful examination, that that was a proper item to insert. After hearing the argument of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House I saw that he had good reason for believing that there ought to be further investigation made in regard to that item, and for one I was constrained by reason of the argument made to us by the conferees on the part of the House to say that it was but fair that this should go over until December, until they could satisfy themselves whether this was a proper amendment or not. I yielded after a full and fair argument on the other side, calling in gentlemen from the Senate at whose suggestion this item was inserted, and I believed with the House it was right we should agree with them on that point, so as to give them further time.

We had some difficulty, also, in regard to the construction of a new building for the Pension Office, though after a good deal of consultation and some modification the House conferees yielded, and that item is inserted.

The next item about which we had much trouble was the pay of the Senate employes, about which a good deal has already been said, and I need say no more than just to repeat that it was impossible to get the House conferees to consider it at all. We had drawn up a report making this one of the points upon which we would report a disagreement; but it being very late in the session, and the Senate having as absolute control over the report presented in this form as if we had presented a separate disagreement, we concluded to present the fact that it was impossible to agree, and there is no power, as the Senate knows, to require the conferees of the other body to agree to what we want. Therefore, we were obliged to come and tell the Senate the trouble. The House conferees would not yield to it; I do not believe they will yield to it. I do not believe reporting an additional disagreement would forward it; indeed it would impede the final disposition of the bill. Under those circumstances the Senate conferees were compelled to yield.

Mr. RANSOM. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him one question on the point on which he is now speaking?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANSOM. I understood the Senator from Iowa to say that the House conferees insisted that their employes should receive a month's extra pay, so as to equalize their compensation with that of the Senate employes, and that was the ground upon which they put their opposition to the amendment of the Senate on this bill to give our employes a month's extra pay. I can understand that to some extent, but I cannot see, and I should like for the conferees on the part of the Senate, if they can, to tell us, when it is admitted that the session employes of the Senate and the session employes of the House receive identically the same per diem, where is the equalization in giving the session employes of the House a month's extra pay and not giving it to the Senate session employes? In other words, I cannot conceive, with great deference to the conference committee of the Senate, that if the House conferees claimed and had passed a proposition to pay to their session or daily employes a month's extra pay, they could resist that same proposition when made in behalf of the Senate employes, both of whom receive the same identical compensation. I do not see how the House conferees could resist that proposition. They might resist extra payment to the officers who receive annual salaries, but how they could resist that simple proposition I cannot conceive.

Mr. BECK. If the Senator were to hear those gentlemen argue as to the number of days they sat and the number of Saturdays they were working when we were playing, as they called it, and the number of night sessions they had when the Senate had none, and the amount of extra work they did, the number of extra hours they were engaged, (which I do not propose to go into the merits of,) the Senator would soon understand many of the difficulties that he does not quite see now. I have no feeling about this report. Let the Senate vote down the report, and then let the Senator from North Carolina go and meet those House conferees once. He would then come back and tell us understandingly, if he goes through the same trouble that we have had for the last nine hours, that he cannot compel them to yield to him, right or wrong, or whether they have good reasons or bad reasons. I assure the Senator that it is my belief that they never will yield on this point.

Mr. RANSOM. If the Senator from Kentucky will allow me one moment, it does seem to me that the attention of the conference committee has not been drawn to the point which I made in reference to the House employes, because I understood the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Iowa, to state most distinctly that the House resisted our amendment upon the ground that they had simply made the compensation of the employes of the two Houses equal by their additional month's pay.

Mr. BECK. We generally pass a resolution to that effect.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that this is a bill appropriating many millions covering various items of appropriation.

Mr. RANSOM. I am not finding any fault with the committee of conference—very far from it.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that the Senate amendment to which he refers did not apply to our present employes unless they were in employment on the 29th of October last or on the 4th of March, 1881. That was the trouble with it. We undertook the business of perfecting it in the conference, and the moment we undertook that, that moment the House conferees insisted that we should not have this sum, and they put their opposition on various grounds. The ground I stated was one of them. Their provision for their employes in the mean time having been agreed to by the Senate it was not before the conference, and therefore we had not anything to quarrel with them about, and we had to yield.

Mr. RANSOM. I comprehend that, but I know the Senator from Iowa, the Senator from Kentucky, and the Senator from Maine could make an argument, and could make an impression upon the conferees of the House, even if they did not have anything to quarrel over.

Mr. ALLISON. We all made very good arguments, and I am sorry the Senator from North Carolina was not there to hear them, but they seemed to be unavailing.

Mr. RANSOM. I have no doubt it would have been very instructive and pleasant to have heard them.

Mr. HALE. We did the best we could, but we were confronted with what may seem to be an amazing thing to the Senator from North Carolina, with the consideration that there were some things of some importance in the bill besides this one item relating to the employes of the two bodies.

Mr. RANSOM. I know that. I know that there are millions in it, and matters of great importance, but I see this fact before me to-night, that I have heard a very strong argument made here by two of the conferees on the part of the Senate in opposition to the principle of the Senate amendment, especially an argument from the Senator from Maine, who opposed to-night in some strong and able words the amendment of the Senate itself, which the conference committee of the Senate certainly would have considered themselves instructed to stand up for. Yet both the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Maine to-night have made arguments against the amendment of the Senate giving this extra compensation to the Senate employes.

Mr. HALE. My remarks applied to the employes of both Houses, not to ours.

Mr. BECK. And so did mine, very distinctly.

Mr. RANSOM. The argument applied that way, but the bill leaves out the employes of the Senate while the employes of the House receive the extra pay.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from North Carolina is a member of the Committee on Appropriations as well as I am, and if he intimates that I was endeavoring to give away the employes of the Senate I want the Senate to understand that he is very much mistaken. My argument was against the principle of paying men salaries that were not sufficient, and then making it up by a month's extra pay, that it was annoying to the Senate and annoying to the House. I would be glad if this controversy had come before, as I said, in order that we might so adjust these salaries that there would have been no demand for extra pay by the House or by the Senate employes. I have sat in conference night after night, I think the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] sat with me three weeks once, trying to adjust this very matter, and finally we had to yield.

Mr. RANSOM. If I said anything intimating that either one of the Senators gave away the Senate amendment I certainly should not have said so, because that is not a suggestion that any Senator with propriety can make; but I did think it right to draw the attention of the Senators themselves to the fact that they had pointed out arguments to-night in favor of the position of the House upon this question.

Mr. BECK. That I again deny, and I want a record of that.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I shall vote against the report of the committee of conference, and I hope it will not be concurred in. I shall vote as long as I am here against every report of a committee of conference which ignores the power of the Senate to control its own employes and their compensation. I fail entirely to see the force of the suggestion that the lateness of the hour of a session alters in any respect the constitutional duty and obligations of a Senator on the rightfulness and expediency of a public measure.

I fail to see also how the Senate can with any degree of dignity accede to any demand on the part of the other House, which is required to concur with it in every act of legislation. The very fact that the House makes a persistent demand for submission on the part of this body in the exercise of its constitutional powers presents a reason, and a reason that cannot be denied, why this body should resist the demand for submission on the part of the House. The Constitution requires a concurrence of action in these two bodies.

I also fail to see the force of the suggestion that there are important measures in this bill, more important than this item concerning the employes of this body, as a reason why we should in this respect do that which the judgment of this body has affirmed to be wrong, to surrender the conclusions which they have legitimately arrived at in the course of legislation.

Sir, there is nothing in these reasons. They are reasons that the Constitution forbids to have any force in the opinion and judgment of Senators.

In reference to this question of compensation, I wish to express my dissent from the opinion of the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Maine. Before they fix a law that there shall be no extra pay they must prescribe by law that there shall be no extra duty. They must limit the power of the President to convene extraordinary sessions here; they must limit the sad contingencies of death and public distress and public calamity which make a demand for extraordinary service and extraordinary duty on the part of the employes of this body. So far as I have observed them, without reference to party, they are an unusually intelligent, accommodating, industrious, and faithful body of public servants, and it does not comport with the dignity of this body to allow the other branch of the national Legislature to affirm that they have not rendered faithful public service and to estimate that service as against the judgment and opinion of this body.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I have no criticism to make upon the conferees of the Senate upon this bill. From the statements the various gentlemen have made I must believe that they have done the best they could in conferring with the conferees of the House; yet there is a feature in this bill given up by the Senate conferees that I cannot do justice to myself without stating to the Senate that their action thereon furnishes to my mind a sufficient reason why I shall vote now and hereafter against concurring in any report based upon the principles that have controlled the conferees of the two Houses.

Mr. President, there is a section of this country which unfortunately is liable and subject to very fatal diseases. In 1878, to say nothing of prior years, there was a fatal contagion which settled upon the city in which my home is situated and a number of towns and cities around me. According to the best estimates which have been made not less than one hundred thousand of our people were stricken down from a condition of health to a bed of languishing and disease, and twenty thousand of our people were sent to their graves. According to the best estimate that a committee of this body in connection with a committee of the House of Representatives upon a laborious research and a careful investigation of the question could arrive at, not less than $200,000,000 of the material wealth of the country was sacrificed by reason of the epidemic of that year, to say nothing of the impaired health and the number of our people who were sent to premature graves.

In the winter of 1878-79 Congress passed an act creating what is known as the National Board of Health. The President nominated the civilians and detailed the public officers who under the law were to constitute that board. I beg to say that from an intercourse of three years with that board, in point of ability, in point of purity of character, in point of reputation challenging public and private confidence, they are the equals of myself and others who have the honor of occupying seats upon this floor.

Under the act of June 2, 1879, they established their rules and regulations and undertook the work of enforcing them. They have given security, at all events they have commanded the confidence of the entire people of the Mississippi Valley, and as I think an overwhelming majority of the people of that valley think they have given security to that valley from the fatal consequences of the importation of contagion and spread of epidemic diseases that had decimated many of our towns and cities heretofore.

I beg to remind the Senate of the fact that with the memories of the fatal consequences of that epidemic fresh in the minds of the two Houses of Congress, at my request and at random, for I had no data upon which I could make an estimate, I asked the Senate to appropriate $500,000 to enable that body to execute its rules and regulations as a means of preventing the importation of contagion from foreign countries and from one State to another.

The Senate and the House of Representatives, with the fearful memories of the period of 1878 upon their minds, did not hesitate by a large majority to appropriate to the board $500,000. The board was organized; it proceeded to establish its rules and regulations and to execute them, and the average cost to the country for the first three years of its existence was about $158,000. The $500,000 appropriated has never been expended, and the operations of the board have only cost the country about $158,000 per annum.

For the present fiscal year I called the president of the executive committee and the secretary of that board before the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman. We carefully investigated; we reduced the estimates to a minimum, amounting in the aggregate to about $121,000 for the fiscal year. I introduced an amendment to the House bill in detail, specifying item by item, and the number of dollars it would cost to maintain the machinery and the organization of the National Board of Health for the current year, and the sum that would be probably necessary to enable it to aid State and municipal boards in enforcing their rules and regulations intended to prevent the importation of epidemic or contagious diseases into the country from foreign countries or into one State from another. The Senate cut down the estimates I have named and appropriated in the aggregate about $98,000. Upon that I had hoped and believed the National Board of Health would be sustained, but in conference the Senate committee have given away every single Senate amendment in respect to the National Board of Health, and in compensation for conceding and giving away each and every Senate amendment upon that subject they have got an additional appropriation of $25,000 to aid State and municipal boards.

Now, Mr. President, I beg to suggest to our conferees that the $25,000 is wholly worthless unless the other items of appropriation that I have asked for are granted. Unless they are given the organization must go down, it must be abandoned, and you will have no organization to determine when and where and how this $25,000 shall be applied. The whole organization must be abandoned, and the franker and the better method of dealing with the question, if that is the policy of the House and the policy of the Senate, would be to have stricken out the Senate amendments and adopted an amendment in lieu abolishing and wiping out at once and forever the National Board of Health. It cannot be maintained upon the appropriations granted by the House; it is utterly impossible, and the idea of attempting to cripple it and render it utterly powerless in this indirect way is what I utterly repudiate and object to.

I shall vote against concurring in the report of the committee of conference, because I want the Senate to insist upon the Senate amendments for the benefit of the National Board of Health, and if they cannot be maintained, then I ask them, as the representative of that board upon this floor, to incorporate in lieu of the Senate amendments a manly declaration that the board is abolished and waste no money on it. It is utterly absurd to make appropriations minced out in less than half the amount that is necessary to sustain the machinery of the board and to enable it to perform the functions that the law imposes upon it and to enable it to perform efficiently and well the duties that the country has a right to expect of it.

Many Senators have not seen in the cities of their homes what it has been my misfortune to see in the city in which I live, for long, weary, and sad months at midday the whole city as silent as the grave, the pall of death hovering over a whole population, and when you walked down the main business thoroughfares at midday, where in other times you were wont to see every evidence of animation and business enterprise, not a single door that was not locked and barred of a business house, except the drug-store and the doctor's office, and not a sound to be heard to break the sad silence of the hour but the dull sound of the wheels of the hearse bearing to the tomb the last victim, followed only by a single carriage, with one or two or three of the bereaved family, whose father or mother or daughter or son was being borne to the tomb. It has been my misfortune to sit for long and weary weeks running into months and to look out of my window upon a sickened city that was as still as the silent home of the dead, with no sounds to break upon the ear except those that I have already noticed.

If it had been the fortune of other Senators to witness scenes like these, to feel as I have felt the utter misfortune that swept down upon the city of my home and the population with whom I was identified, and several surrounding cities and towns equally unfortunate at the same time, I do not believe there is a Senator upon this floor who would hesitate for one single moment or stickle as between the pitiful sum of $50,000 that it is proposed to give to maintain this board of health and the sum of $125,000, or even $500,000, if it is to be believed or hoped the action of that board shall even contribute in the smallest degree to the prevention of the introduction of the fell destroyer which has taken off so many of our people, and which in 1878 and 1879 produced that condition of affairs that absolutely paralyzed commerce, destroyed trade and business, excited and challenged the charity of the whole world, and during that dark period of our misfortune the whole civilized world poured into our lap their charities in sums aggregating hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. President, the mouth of the Mississippi River is the gateway to the valley of the Mississippi. It is a known fact that the yellow fever is raging to-day in Vera Cruz, at Havana, at Matanzas, and at other points in the West Indies and on the Gulf coast. I am perfectly satisfied, from the most careful examination that I was capable of giving this subject for the last three years, that if we will by our action so regulate commerce as to prevent the importation into this country of contagion, so far as yellow fever and cholera are concerned, we shall never have another case of either in this country as long as time lasts. Yellow fever, I am perfectly satisfied, is an exotic disease, not a disease indigenous to this country. It has been brought here invariably, when we have had epidemics of the disease; and I believe the whole medical fraternity agree in the fact that cholera is not indigenous, and no case of cholera ever originated in this country.

Under the rules and regulations of the National Board of Health we have had no importation of either of these diseases for the last three years; and if the powers necessary are given to that board, with such poor, pitiful sum as is necessary to maintain it, I have not the shadow of a doubt that it not only can but it will throughout the future prevent the importation from foreign countries into this country of these contagions and prevent the importation from one State into another, if perchance they should by accident get into the country at all.

Why, Mr. President, let me refer the Senate to a single fact. In 1878 you had no National Board of Health. In 1879 we had an epidemic of yellow fever at New Orleans and Memphis, just after the organization of the National Board of Health, but before it had the machinery perfected and in full operation; but the board of health was organized, and immediately upon the appearance of yellow fever at New Orleans and Memphis the board of health took charge of it. It was absolutely confined to the city of Memphis, and not a case was allowed to escape that city, and it was tramped out absolutely in the city of New Orleans. Notwithstanding the raging of the epidemic at these two cities, commerce, under the regulations of the National Board of Health, enjoyed a freedom that resulted, according to the reports made at one single point, Cairo, Illinois, so that the tonnage from that point by river and rail to and from the South, the infected regions, amounted to over 100,000,000 tons more than it did during the same period for 1878, when there was no National Board of Health in existence.

Now, sir, strike down the board, leave the whole country to rely, as they have had to rely throughout our whole history till recently, upon municipal, State, and local boards, and what will be the result? You cannot trust the local board of New Orleans, of Vicksburg, of Memphis, or of any other place. There is not a local board of health to-day in existence in any State, town, city, or village that is not in sympathy with and interested in the commerce of the town where it is located. Being in sympathy with the commercial men of the city, it will take risks, it will not announce the fact until absolutely forced to do so by the raging of an epidemic; it will not report a case of contagious disease; it will postpone the hour of recognizing or of announcing to the public that there is a contagion, if there is an epidemic raging, until the epidemic announces itself.

The national board has no such sympathy; it resides at a national point; and through its own agents it reports the facts just as they are.

I beg to remind the Senate of the fact that there is not a transportation company by river or rail throughout the South and West that has not petitioned for the maintenance of this board and giving it ample powers and ample appropriations to carry out its rules and regulations. Why? Because the whole country everywhere has confidence in the reports that the national board makes. When the National Board of Health says there is no epidemic in New Orleans everybody is willing to trust himself on the steamers to New Orleans, and the trains to New Orleans are allowed to go scot-free. So in regard to every other point.

I beg to remind the Senate of the fact that, with the exception of the State board of health of Louisiana, located at New Orleans, I do not know a board of health, I do not know a sanitary organization in all this land that does not approve of and ask for the maintenance of the National Board of Health. I have on my table at my house to-night a pile of petitions and memorials from State and local boards of health and sanitary organizations; they have teemed upon me by the hundred, piles looming up quite to this height, [indicating.] Every board of health, so far as I know; every sanitary organization in the whole country, so far as I know—and I do know affirmatively that a very large number of such boards and associations have petitioned that this national board shall be maintained and that appropriations to enable it to perform its functions efficiently and well should be extended to it.

For these reasons, and believing as I do believe that there is no appropriation amounting to such a sum as I have mentioned that is made by this or any other bill which Congress has appropriated money to, that there is no object to which Congress has appropriated money that is so valuable, that benefits the whole American people to the same extent as the amount of money that I ask for the maintenance of this board of health, I must oppose the adoption of this report. If I am mistaken about it of course I must abide the decision of the Senate. I shall bow to it regretfully, because I do believe as earnestly and as consistently as I have ever believed any single fact in my life that it is one of the most important institutions to the American people that has been established for many years; that it is as worthy of the support of the American people as any institution that we have created or that we appropriate money for the support of.

I do not desire to detain the Senate longer.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I thoroughly coincide with every word that has been so eloquently and properly expressed by the Senator from Tennessee, and I only rise now to ask the conferees on the part of the Senate what explanation they have to give—they have an explanation, of course—why this great question was allowed to go out of the bill, why this appropriation was allowed to be subordinated to the objection of the House. I regard it as one of the greatest and most important questions provided for in this bill, and while I am very well accustomed to submit to whatever the House says upon such subjects, I really have a curiosity to know what reason was given and accepted for the rejection of this appropriation. I desire to know whether it is because there is no need of it, whether it is because the provisions accompanying this appropriation will not accomplish the object.

In other words, I wish to know why those charged with the management of this bill on the part of the Senate have surrendered this great trust which the Senate reposed in their hands. I suppose it will be done, as they have agreed to it; I suppose we shall have to surrender; but I should like to know, and I ask in all good faith, why it is that this question affecting the health, the safety, the prosperity, the great success of this country has been surrendered at the dictation of the House?

I ask for an answer. If I cannot get an answer of course I shall have to go without it; and then I will say to the country and to the Senate there is no answer; and there is no reason and there is no justice in the surrender that has been made.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator desire an answer now?

Mr. VOORHEES. I do, of course. I am asking in perfect good faith.

Mr. ALLISON. I was going to answer as soon as the Senator got through.

Mr. VOORHEES. I want an answer.

Mr. ALLISON. I see the Senator from Kentucky on the floor.

Mr. BECK. Let the chairman answer.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will repeat briefly the question: is it because there is no need of this appropriation, or is it because the machinery of the bill does not make it effective, or what is the reason?

Mr. ALLISON. The House of Representatives appropriated a sum of money for the maintenance of the machinery of this board here locally; they appropriated $25,000 to aid local boards of health; they placed under the control of the President of the United States $100,000, to be used by him in his discretion in case of epidemic or contagion. These sums are retained in the bill with the addition of $25,000 more to aid local boards of health.

Mr. MORGAN. Does that make $200,000?

Mr. ALLISON. That makes in all about $177,500. I may be mistaken a few thousand dollars in the sum.

Mr. HARRIS. There is a distinction between a contingent and an absolute appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. In addition to that the Senate inserted in the bill a proposition for the maintenance under the National Board of Health of quarantine stations at four places. The House in reply to us say "these quarantine stations are only necessary in case of contagion, and when contagion comes we put $100,000 in the President's hands to be used at these quarantine stations or elsewhere for the purpose of protecting the people of this country against contagion."

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. ALLISON. I am giving now the argument of the House. That was what they said to us. They said in addition that the House of Representatives believed that this National Board of Health ought not to exist as it had existed during the last year, that they are for curtailing its power, and the House of Representatives had three times, they told us, insisted upon the curtailment of the power of this board. They said to us further, I will remark in response to the Senator from Indiana, that in the very regions of country which are chiefly affected by these contagions the members of the House of Representatives were against this board. They said they were in accord and in sympathy with the views of the House upon this question. So it became a question with us whether we should give up this bill and have a disagreement, or whether we should finally agree on this point.

The provisions in relation to this board of health were passed by over and over again. The committee of conference began its session this morning at nine o'clock. Of course there were intervals when we were obliged to come into the Senate, but we did not finally close our report until nearly seven o'clock to-night, and this board of health provision was the last one that we surrendered. We twice insisted on a disagreement; but finally, at the hour of seven, when the Senate had taken a recess until eight, when it became perfectly apparent that unless this bill should pass before we adjourn to-night we should be obliged with a doubtful quorum in the House of Representatives to extend the joint resolution which we have extended over and over again continuing the appropriations for the want of this bill, we concluded the arrangement made in the report.

I ask is it fair toward the Senate committee of conference when we have stood by these appropriations as faithfully and diligently and as honestly as we could, to now insist upon a categorical and specific answer with reference to every reason that operated upon us in regard to the surrender of these appropriations?

I will say to the Senator from Indiana and to the Senator from Tennessee that the committee of conference on the part of the Senate stood with absolute fidelity in favor of every provision inserted by the Senate in this bill and we discussed them at length and in detail with the House conferees, and finally yielded as we are obliged to yield in these matters of difference between the two Houses in order to secure an agreement. The Senate is potential, as we know, but in order to pass a law you must have the concurrence of both Houses, and where there is disagreement there must be concession and conciliation somewhere, and in that spirit we finally and at the very end of the conference yielded this question of the board of health.

Mr. HARRIS. Did I question the fidelity of the Senate conferees in any manner or by any word?

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Iowa will understand perfectly well that the great importance of the question justified the inquiry which I made.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to ask the Senator from Indiana a question. Does he think that it is a wise thing to allow this bill to fail rather than have this amendment suggested by the Senate made?

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not; but at the same time it is allowable to ask the reasons why a great measure like this has been cut down.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to that.

Mr. VOORHEES. I thought there was some criticism indulged in on the part of the Senator from Iowa at the inquiry.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator's method of inquiry was a little vigorous, if I may use that expression.

Mr. VOORHEES. I did not intend it so, I am sure; but I do say that this question of the board of health assumed such importance that I desired to know what provision had been made in lieu of that which we had provided, and what reasons there were for dropping ours out? That was all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I look, sir, upon this action as absolutely a nullification of a law of Congress. This board of health was established by Congress not to cure pestilence, not to take charge of it after it came to the country, but to keep it out, and the insufficiency of the appropriation absolutely destroys the board of health. The object of this board was to protect the country against those four great scourges of the human race, the yellow fever, the small-pox, the cholera, and the leprosy, all contagious foreign diseases, none of them indigenous to the country, but all imported into the United States. In order to do this it was necessary that quarantine arrangements with stations of refuge to which infected ships and cargoes could be sent should be provided, and it requires money to do all this. What good is the $100,000 the Senator from Iowa talks about? What good will that do if pestilence gets into the country? You would spend $20,000,000 when it got here to extirpate it.

I know something about this. I have received letters and petitions and memorials from various boards of health and sanitary commissions all through the West, from Saint Louis, from Chicago, from Indianapolis, from Cincinnati, from Louisville, all protesting against withholding from the National Board of Health the amount of money necessary to enable them to keep these diseases out of the country. They have established stations of refuge for New York City on the lines of railroad running to the Northwest, and you Senators of the West and Northwest know how your country has been scourged in past years by immigrants bringing the small-pox. They have established stations, and the medical gentlemen all say these stations have brought the small-pox within manageable limits. If you take away from the Board of Health the power and withhold from them the money necessary to establish these stations, you will be overrun with the small-pox. The boards of health of Saint Louis, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, and Louisville say so. The States cannot provide for it.

We know that the cholera is now raging in Asia and has advanced already into Eastern Europe, and by the steady and slow progress which it makes toward the west it must visit us at no very distant day. We know that the yellow fever is rife upon the islands of the West Indies. We know that it is in Mexico. Suppose a ship arrives in New Orleans with the yellow fever on board, what can the local board of health do with it? They have no place to put that ship except to anchor it in the Mississippi River, and vessels coming in and out are liable to catch it. This National Board of Health has established stations to which such ships and their passengers may be carried for quarantine so as not to contaminate other vessels coming into a port. It is absolutely impossible for the local boards of health to protect the country from the importation of diseases from abroad. Nothing can do that but the National Board of Health.

I know we are liable to the small-pox and the yellow fever the coming season, and I am willing to vote the sum of $125,000, which is all that is asked to continue this National Board of Health. All the local boards demand it except the board at New Orleans, and a majority of its members are in favor of it, but it happens that the president of that board is opposed to it. I know another thing. We have a service called the Marine-Hospital Service which is opposed to it. They say the medical staff are quite sufficient to attend to all this matter. Their business is to take sick men and put them in hospital; it is not to keep disease out of the country. They say it will be cheaper to leave it to them; I have heard them talking that way to members of Congress of both Houses, saying we have got a staff that can do all this. Does not anybody know that to keep epidemic and contagious diseases out of the country you have got to have places to put vessels in?

I know the prejudice that has been gotten up against the National Board of Health, which in my judgment is the most valuable institution that has been established by law for years. I know of nothing so beneficial to our country; I know of nothing that gives such assurance of health to our country to keep away the pestilences that with our modern facilities of communication with the nations of the earth may be brought into this country. China, Japan, and all the countries are as near to New York now as New York was in my boyhood to the city of Louisville. With our telegraphs, with our rapid modes of communication, with the facilities and the cheapness of transit from every quarter of the earth to this country, we are liable to be infected every year by these dread pestilences that strike terror to the heart of all nations of the earth. The local boards cannot keep them out. Are we not a nation? Have we not a right to protect the health of all the people? Ought not we to do it? I say we ought. What has this National Board of Health done for the country? Why, sir, when it was organized, this dread pestilence of yellow fever was feared throughout the whole South. They have put an end to it; and they have restrained the spread of small-pox throughout the West and the Northwest, and they will keep these pestilences out of the country if we continue their power, and continue the appropriation to enable them to do it; but my word for it, the State boards cannot do it; and there is not a State board in this Union except the board at New Orleans that is opposed to the continuance of the National Board of Health. The boards at New York, Richmond, Norfolk, Boston, Chicago, Saint Louis, Memphis, and all through the whole United States have petitioned and memorialized Congress to continue the appropriations, and not destroy the National Board of Health by withholding from it the supplies necessary to continue its watchful care over the health of the American people.

Mr. BECK. I wish to say but a word.

Mr. PLUMB. I rise to make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BECK. Only one word. Questions are asked about this matter, showing that there must be a misapprehension. The Senator from Indiana and my colleague both seem to think that no appropriations are made for this board, that the House has acted outrageously, and that the Senate conferees have acted outrageously in agreeing with them in part. I want to place on the record what the House did. The House provisions now agreed to by the conference are, first:

For pay and expenses of the members of the National Board of Health, $10,000.

That the Senator from Tennessee says is $5,000 more than they want.

Mr. HARRIS. That is true. They need but $5,000 for that purpose.

Mr. BECK. Next the House put in:

For pay of secretary and disbursing agent, and pay of clerks, messengers, and laborers, $5,500.

Mr. HARRIS. We need at least $17,000 for that.

Mr. BECK. The House differed with the Senator from Tennessee. The Senate voted to give $15,000. Next:

For rent, light, fuel, furniture, stationery, telegrams, and postage, $2,000.

That was given. Then the House provided, and it is in this bill—and that would seem to be somewhat of an answer to the speech of my colleague:

And the President of the United States is hereby authorized, in case of a threatened or actual epidemic, to use a sum not exceeding $100,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in aid of State and local boards or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same.

Whenever this National Board of Health advises the President that the yellow fever or small-pox or anything else is approaching he is not to wait until it comes to the country, but where we are threatened from Asia, Africa, Europe, or anywhere else, the President of the United States can take out of the Treasury of the United States $100,000, and use it at his discretion in preventing and suppressing the spread of the disease by establishing quarantine anywhere and everywhere he sees fit. That $100,000 is now in the bill, and that is all the National Board of Health ever asked for that purpose, all that anybody ever asked, all that the Senator from Tennessee asked, and it is now the law if this report is agreed to. Then the House further provided:

For aid to State and local boards of health and to local quarantine stations in carrying out their rules and regulations to prevent the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases in the United States, $25,000.

The conferees on the part of the Senate urged and implored to increase this item, and it took a long time to obtain that much of a concession; but we got it raised to $50,000. But the House insisted upon striking out the quarantine at Ship Island and at Sapelo and Hampton Roads, for which we proposed to appropriate $45,000. As I said, we got $25,000 more "for aid to State and local boards of health and to local quarantine stations in carrying out their rules and regulations to prevent the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases," making it $50,000, and that is now in the bill if the conference report is adopted. Adding that $25,000 to the $100,000 that the President can use whenever the National Board of Health tells him there is danger anywhere, and making ample provision for the pay and expenses of the National Board of Health, even $5,000 more than the Senator from Tennessee says they need, and giving them $5,500 for clerks, messengers, and laborers, with $2,000 for rent, fuel, and lights, surely it cannot be said that we have neglected this board.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Kentucky thought $10,000 was too little when the bill was under consideration for the item left at $5,500, and it was at the Senator's suggestion I moved the amendment.

Mr. BECK. I did, and I believed it was proper to establish each one of these stations. I am only telling now what is in the bill. It is not a bad bill. It is not liberal enough, according to the judgment of the Senator from Tennessee and according to my judgment, but we have inserted $50,000 to aid local boards and $100,000 to be used if any danger approaches from any quarter, with pretty fair allowances for the support of these gentlemen. When we met upon the differences between the House and the Senate and we were going into details the House said these men ought not to be authorized to establish permanent quarantine anywhere, that was not part of their duty, and they objected to it, for they said it would grow and grow up into a system and the National Board of Health would be like a good many other boards and commissions, enlarge and usurp power.

I am giving the argument of the House. They submitted the question to the House on the Senate amendments, and by a vote of three to one the House, as the RECORD shows, voted down the Senate amendments and told their conferees by a vote of three to one to resist our amendments. They came thus fortified with the vote of the House at their back and with the votes of men from Mississippi, Louisiana, and Florida, and from the infected region demanding that they should not put these powers in the hands of these men. Notwithstanding all that—

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask if he refers to the Representatives from Mississippi?

Mr. BECK. I am stating only what was said in conference to us.

Mr. GEORGE. That is not my information.

Mr. BECK. I will take back the name of any State if her Senator objects to its being used. The Senator from Indiana asked me to give the reasons, and I was trying to do it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I made no reflection on the conferees.

Mr. BECK. We were advised of the action of the House.

Mr. GEORGE. There is no support for that statement as to Mississippi.

Mr. BECK. Two-thirds of the House stood by their conferees. We had drawn up a disagreement to present this as a separate matter, but upon further consultation among ourselves we thought it best to lay the whole matter before the Senate. We got every dollar for this board of health that we could by any sort of persuasion, and that is all we could do.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President—

Several SENATORS. Vote! Vote! Vote!

Mr. HARRIS. You may cry "vote." I have some rights here. I do not expect anything else but the assertion of my rights, and those I will assert here and elsewhere, and the cry "vote" will not silence me. I have very little to say, however; but that little I intend to say.

If the conferees on the part of the Senate are guided by the spirit and animus of the speech of my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] I know the fate of the National Board of Health. I have asserted here more than once, and I now repeat, and let it be not misunderstood, that with the appropriation agreed upon by the Senate conferees and made by the House the National Board of Health will go out of existence at once and forever, and I believe and I have a right to believe that that is the intention. If such is the will of the two Houses of Congress, I shall submit as gracefully as any American citizen can; I shall yield to it submissively, greatly against my will and my wishes and my judgment, but yield to it because it is the will of the American people as expressed by their representatives in the two Houses of Congress.

But the Senator from Iowa said the argument relied upon by the House was that we do not need any National Board of Health until we have an epidemic. That is a total misconception of the principle upon which the National Board of Health was created. One of its duties, and one of the least important of its duties is to deal with epidemics when epidemics present themselves and blast and blight and destroy the country; the highest and the most important duty that devolves upon that board of health is to prevent the introduction of contagion into the country from other countries, and into one State from another, to prevent the existence of an epidemic.

I would give very little for the powers that I invoke if they could not stand at the gate where a contagion can enter this country, take root and spread and blight and destroy the health and the lives of our people, and there keep it off. There is where the agencies of the National Board of Health should be stationed.

The idea that you need a National Board of Health only when you have an epidemic! I had as well ask the Senate to abolish the Army and the Navy because it is an admitted fact that we are at peace with all the world. We have no war; so we need no Army and no Navy! Why not abolish them if that argument be legitimate or even respectable?

But as many Senators are anxious for the vote, I do not intend to detain the Senate longer than to say that I ask my friend from Kentucky, I ask my friends from Iowa and from Maine, conferees and representatives on the part of the Senate, if I shall be successful, as I have not any great amount of hope of being, in defeating the conference report, to go back. I tell them the board of health cannot exist upon the appropriation here made, and I ask them to vote it out of existence.

The manly way, the frank way, the proper way to put it out of existence is to strike out your amendments and agree in conference upon an amendment that shall abolish the board of health. That meets the question frankly and squarely, and as the Senate and the House ought to meet it. Do that, or give enough to enable the board to perform the functions which the law requires it to perform, and to perform them fully, efficiently, and well. All I ask is to do one thing or the other.

I shall ask no other Senator to take that position, but so far as I am personally concerned, deeply impressed as I am with the importance of maintaining this institution, if my single vote could control it, I would sit here and vote against agreeing to the conference report until you called the Senate to order in the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress, and I would sit here until the 4th of March required you, Mr. President, to pronounce the Senate adjourned sine die before I would agree to the report that now is before us for our consideration. Such is my appreciation of the importance of this question, but I ask no gentleman to coincide with the opinions I entertain.

I speak feelingly because I have suffered deeply from the evil that this board has the power to avert. No other power exists under the authority of this Government that can avert it and can give the security that the people of the great valley of the Mississippi have a right to expect and demand at the hands of their representatives in the Senate and in the House.

Mr. PLUMB. This day's sitting has extended already half an hour into Sunday. It is not the short session by any means, but a session already extended over eight months. I do not think there is any necessity that the Senate should continue this session into the Sabbath at all. I do not think it tends to the wisdom of legislation; I do not think it is respectable. I do not think it is in any way proper at the end of a session of this kind that we should get into so remarkable a hurry that we cannot adjourn for Sunday. I think every consideration of decency and propriety requires the Senate to adjourn. I therefore move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will withdraw that in order that we may take the vote on this report.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not advised that there is any single thing connected with the running of this Government that requires the passage of this bill before Monday. If some belated individual getting a salary of $1,200 should have a day's vacation, it would not hurt him or hurt the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to say that I have a reason why I think this conference report ought not to be agreed to. Amendment numbered 171 provides for the discharge of a sacred obligation of the Government, not only one obligation, but of a number, an obligation which is due to the Cherokee tribe of Indians, and an obligation which is due to a number of Indian tribes located on the Cherokee lands in the Indian Territory.

We have had something to say about the Poncas heretofore during the last two or three years, a tribe of Indians that were taken by force from their homes in Nebraska and located in the Indian Territory. They have been placed on land down there without one single iota of title. They are in danger to-day, as they have been for months and for years, of having their homes taken away from them by settlers. That danger is increased from day to day. It is a matter not only concerning them and our obligations to protect them in honor, but it is a matter which concerns the security and peace of that frontier. And yet the Senate committee have given away without any cause whatever, it seems to me, that amendment. I do not think it is proper that a report which does not include that amendment and affirmative action upon it should be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HOAR in the chair.) The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 6683) to authorize the construction of bridges over Ogeechee, Oconee, Ocmulgee, Flint, and Chattahoochee Rivers in the State of Georgia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to have the Senate take up the resolution for the payment of a thousand dollars to a contestant. ["No; no."]

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at twelve o'clock and thirty-two minutes a. m., Sunday, August 6) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, August 5, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KASSON. I ask that by unanimous consent the House go to the Speaker's table to dispose of the few House bills which are there with Senate amendments. I understand there are only five or six such bills.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent. The Chair will submit the proposition. Is there objection to going to the Speaker's table for the purpose of considering House bills thereon with Senate amendments?

Mr. MARTIN. I object.

Mr. COX, of New York. How many bills are there on the Speaker's table with Senate amendments? I understand there are only a few.

Mr. BROWNE. There are three pension bills there of the House with merely verbal amendments.

Mr. COX, of New York. Who objects?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware objects.

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH PERSIA.

Mr. KASSON. Then I ask consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 6743) to establish diplomatic relations with Persia, which was unanimously passed by the House, and which was next day unanimously passed by the Senate with a single amendment, making the necessary appropriation, it being too late to put it into any appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendment be read, the right to object being reserved.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:
"And the sum necessary therefor is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. KASSON. I move to concur in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANK SOULE.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I ask the courtesy of the House to allow a Senate bill now on the Speaker's table to be taken therefrom and put upon its passage. It is the bill (S. No. 551) releasing Frank Soule, late collector of internal revenue for the first district of California, and his sureties, from liability to the Government of the United States. The bill relieves from liability Frank Soule and others who were the victims of a robbery. It has been reported favorably in four Congresses. Mr. Soule has now been relieved by death, and I desire to have the bill taken up and verbally amended so that it may relieve his heirs and put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. The right to object being reserved.

The bill was read.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I object.

ROBERT HALL.

Mr. HATCH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6891) granting a pension to Robert Hall; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS' REUNION IN ILLINOIS.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, for the purpose of moving concurrence in the Senate amendments, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 205) granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at a soldiers' reunion to be held by the Soldiers' Reunion Association of the State of Illinois in the year 1882.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In line 2 strike out "or arsenal."
In line 5 strike out "cannon."
In line 5 strike out "muskets."
In line 6 strike out "cannon."
In line 6 strike out "muskets."
In line 10 strike out "arsenal and."
In lines 13 and 14 strike out "arms, ammunition, and camp equipage," and insert "tents."
In line 16, after "quota," insert "of arms allowed by law."
Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution granting the use of tents at a soldiers' reunion to be held by the Soldiers' Reunion Association of the State of Illinois in the year 1882."

Mr. HOLMAN. Those amendments seem to strike out almost everything.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. HENDERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARY J. VEAZIE.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time Senate bill No. 566, for the relief of Mrs. Mary J. Veazie. I hope gentlemen will reserve their objections until the report, which is a short one, is read. I will not make any remarks myself.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $4,400 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay Mrs. Mary J. Veazie, of Natchez, Mississippi, for property taken for the use of the United States troops stationed at Natchez, Mississippi.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will have to ask for the regular order.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order is equivalent to an objection; and the bill is not before the House.

GARFIELD STATUE IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. MCCOOK, by unanimous consent, submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the use of the Rotunda and adjacent rooms be granted to the Garfield monument committee of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland from the 25th of November to the 3d of December, 1882, to hold a bazaar and reception, the object being to raise a fund to aid in the erection of a statue at Washington to the memory of the late President Garfield.

Mr. MCCOOK moved to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 35 and 36 to the bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been informed that the objection is withdrawn which was made to proceeding by unanimous consent to business on the Speaker's table for the purpose solely of considering House bills and joint resolutions with Senate amendments.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not object to taking bills from the Speaker's table, but what I object to is a special arrangement confining action to a certain class of bills.

The SPEAKER. If the House shall proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table, House bills and joint resolutions with Senate amendments would be the first in order.

Mr. RANDALL. Let each bill be taken up by itself, subject to objection.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will submit each bill in the order in which it is on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection.

INSPECTION OF FOREIGN PRIVATE STEAM-VESSELS.

The first business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 4684) to amend section 4400 of title 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulation of steam-vessels, returned from the Senate with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments of the Senate.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In line 6, after "sections," insert "4417, 4418, 4421, 4422, 4423, 4424."
In lines 9 and 10, strike out "4486."
In line 10, strike out "and" where it occurs the second time.
In line 11, after "4489," insert "4496, 4497, 4499, and 4500;" so that the clause will read:

"And all foreign private steam-vessels carrying passengers from any port of the United States to any other place or country shall be subject to the provisions of sections 4417, 4418, 4421, 4422, 4423, 4424, 4470, 4471, 4472, 4473, 4479, 4482, 4488, 4489, 4496, 4497, 4499, and 4500 of this title, and shall be liable to visitation and inspection by the proper officer, in any of the ports of the United States, respecting any of the provisions of the sections aforesaid."

Also add to section 1 the following:

"Provided, Where the term 'local inspectors' is used in the foregoing section it shall be construed to mean the special inspectors hereinafter provided for."

Also add to the bill the following:

"SEC. 3. The special inspectors of foreign steam-vessels shall perform the duties of their office and make reports thereof to the Supervising Inspector-General of Steam-Vessels, under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

"SEC. 4. That each special inspector of foreign steam-vessels shall execute a proper bond, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, in such form and upon such conditions as the Secretary may prescribe, for the faithful performance of the duties of his office."

"SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall procure for the several inspectors heretofore referred to such instruments, stationery, printing, and other things necessary, including clerical help, where he shall deem the same necessary, for the use of their respective offices, as may be required therefor."

"SEC. 6. That the salaries of the special inspectors of foreign steam-vessels and clerks provided for, together with their traveling and other expenses when on official duty, and all instruments, books, blanks, stationery, furniture, and other things necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act, shall be paid for by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The question was upon concurring in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. PAGE. I would like the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] to explain these amendments.

Mr. COX, of New York. If gentlemen will look at page 25 of the RECORD of yesterday they will find there the debate in the Senate upon this measure, and also the letters of Judge Folger, Secretary of the Treasury, and of James A. Dumont, Supervising Inspector-General, in favor of the passage of this bill. They will find the unanswerable statements of the honorable and distinguished statesman from Minnesota, [Mr. McMILLAN,] and his statements confirm our best judgments.

The Senate has placed certain amendments on the bill which recite certain sections of the Revised Statutes. Those sections, which were enumerated in the bill, have relation to general provisions against fire, &c., on foreign steamers, and additional security against disasters on the same class of steamers when laden with cotton, hemp, or hay, &c. All those sections have but one object, the protection of passengers and the imposing of penalties on those ships which go to sea without proper provision in this respect. This bill has had the sanction of the Senate, and substantially of this House, and all we now ask is that the Senate amendments may be concurred in.

I will say that this bill proposes to inspect foreign vessels, just as our own vessels are inspected by foreign authorities. No more, sir, and no less. Vessels like the Babama, on which twenty of our people went down in mid-ocean, and other like ship-coffins, are intended by this bill to be prevented from sailing from our ports unless they have had the same inspection as our own vessels. All that we ask is that foreign vessels, mostly old and rotten blockade-runners that go to the West Indies and elsewhere, shall have the same guard and inspection as our own vessels. No more, sir, and no less.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. The provisions of this bill have been carefully considered by the Committee on Commerce of this House, and passed by the House. They have also been carefully considered by the Senate and amended, and I think improved.

The bill only seeks to apply the inspection laws as to life-saving apparatus and means of safety to foreign vessels while in ports of the United States as they are now applied to our own vessels. I believe this is a good bill, and one which ought to pass. The amendments of the Senate are an improvement.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 254) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer to "Tip" Best Post No. 75, Grand Army of the Republic, of Montrose, Iowa, one piece of condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls, or field-piece, for monumental purposes, was taken from the Speaker's table; and there being no objection the following amendment was concurred in:

In line 6 strike out "or field piece."
Amend title by striking out the words "or field piece."

COMPILATION OF LAND LAWS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) for the printing of additional copies of House Executive Document No. 47, and subsequent land laws.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out all after "bound," in line 7, to the end of the resolution and insert "under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 5,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 for the use of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] who I believe has charge of matters of this kind, whether this increases the number to be printed?

Mr. SPRINGER. This resolution is for printing an extra number of House Executive Document No. 47, which is a compilation of all the land laws of Congress in relation to each State and Territory of the United States. It was compiled by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in pursuance of an act of Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does this increase the number authorized to be printed by the original resolution?

Mr. SPRINGER. The resolution provides for printing an increased number of this document in order to supply a demand which the Department has represented is continually coming in for this publication.

Mr. HOLMAN. But is the increase only as to the number to be distributed by the Interior Department?

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand now that the gentleman is referring to the amendment. That does not make any increase in the number as proposed in the original resolution. Its simple effect is this: the House bill provided for awarding 30 copies to each Delegate before the regular distribution began, as the Delegates represent a large territory especially interested in these books. The Senate has struck out that provision, and insists upon an even distribution. The amendment of the Senate does not increase the number proposed originally. I move that the Senate amendment be concurred in with an amendment adding the following:

Provided, That the copies for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives shall be distributed by the Secretary of the Interior in the manner provided for the distribution of the reports of the tenth census; and all copies not ordered to be distributed within two years after the passage of this act shall be sold by the Secretary of the Interior at the cost of publication with 10 per cent. added thereto.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that a work like this may well be left to distribution in the ordinary way, by members of the Senate and House. It is not a work of permanent interest suitable for libraries, but only of temporary interest. I trust, therefore, that the amendment will not be insisted upon by my friend from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. This work comprises two volumes; and if the distribution be made in the manner already provided with reference to the report of the tenth census, members will simply indicate to the Secretary of the Interior how they wish the copies distributed, and they will be sent out as indicated. The volumes as to which members after two years have given no direction will belong to the Government, and be sold.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the latter provision is proper enough; but the distribution, it seems to me, should be under the control of members, like any other ordinary document. These volumes are not like documents running in a series from year to year, in reference to which it may be important that a complete set should be sent to a single address. The amendment, I think, will impose upon members an unnecessary inconvenience.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the amendment will simplify the labor of members. After once making a trial of this new rule of distribution, I believe members will find it more convenient than the present. It will save them a great deal of unnecessary labor.

The question being taken on concurring in the amendment of the Senate with the amendment proposed by Mr. SPRINGER, it was concurred in.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIEUTENANT FREDERICK SCHWATKA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4594) authorizing full pay to Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, United States Army, while on leave to serve in command of the Franklin search expedition in the Arctic.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In lines 7 and 8, page 1, strike out "and commutation of quarters."

In line 10, same page, strike out "via" and insert "to."

In lines 10 and 11, same page, strike out "to North Hudson's Bay."

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move concurrence in these amendments. The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS' REUNION, IOWA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the joint resolution (H. R. No. 263) granting the use of cannon, tents, and muskets at soldiers' reunions to be held in the State of Iowa in the year 1882, returned from the Senate with amendments, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "depot," strike out "or arsenal;" after the word "such," in line 6, strike out "cannon;" in line 7, after the word "tents," strike out "muskets, and so forth;" after the word "said," in line 8, strike out "cannon," and in the same line, after the word "tents," strike out "muskets, and so forth;" in line 11, strike out "arsenal;" and in line 14, after the word "said," strike out "arms, ammunition, and camp equipage" and insert "tents;" and at the end of the resolution add "of arms allowed by law;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

"That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to send from some convenient quartermaster's depot, to be used at soldiers' reunions to be held in the State of Iowa in the year 1882, such tents as can be conveniently spared; said tents to be returned after holding of said reunion in like good condition as when received: Provided, That all transportation of said articles to and from the place of the reunion to the depot shall be without expense to the Government: Provided further, That the adjutant-general of the State of Iowa, or other proper accounting officer, shall receipt for said tents in the name of said State, and that such of them as shall not be returned shall be charged to said State against its quota of arms allowed by law."

Amend the title so as to read: "A joint resolution granting the use of tents at soldiers' reunions to be held in the State of Iowa in the year 1882."

Mr. CARPENTER. I move the House concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. CARPENTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONDEMNED CANNON, LOGANSPOUT, INDIANA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 6265) donating cannon and cannon-balls to Post 14 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Logansport, Indiana, returned from the Senate with the following amendment:

Line 11, after the word "condemned," insert "cast-iron."

Mr. DE MOTTE. I move concurrence in the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. DE MOTTE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMPANY B, FOURTEENTH INFANTRY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 6517) authorizing compensation to members of Company B, Fourteenth Infantry, for private property destroyed by fire on the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad, returned from the Senate with the following amendments:

At the end of section 1 add the following proviso:

Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall charge the amount so paid to said officers and soldiers to the said railroad company, and retain the same out of any money due or that may hereafter be due from the United States to said railroad company."

Strike out the following section:

"Sec. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to institute proceedings, either in the courts or otherwise, as he may deem best, to recover for the United States the value of the property so destroyed from the person, company, or corporation found liable therefor."

Mr. MCCOOK. I move the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. Those amendments are manifestly right and proper, and I hope they will be concurred in.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. MCCOOK moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONDEMNED CANNON FOR MONUMENTAL PURPOSES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 6593) donating condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes, returned from the Senate with the following amendments:

In line 11, insert "cast" after "condemned;" in line 23, insert "cast-iron" after "condemned;" in line 27, insert "cast-iron" after "condemned;" in line 30, insert "cast-iron" after "condemned."

Mr. PRESCOTT. I move concurrence in the Senate amendments. The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. PRESCOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NIORRARA MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 2997) granting right of way to the Fremont, Elk Horn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company across the Niobrara military reservation, in the State of Nebraska, and to restore certain portions of said military reservation to the public domain, and for other purposes, returned from the Senate with the following amendments:

In line 5, after the word "way," insert "one hundred feet in width;" and in line 8, after the word "Nebraska," strike out "said right of way to be one hundred feet in width" and insert "and such quantity of land, not exceeding one hundred and fifty feet in width by four hundred feet in length, in addition to such right of way, as may be necessary for depot or station-house and switches for said road, to be so selected as;" so as to make the section read:

"That the Fremont, Elk Horn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Nebraska, are hereby granted the right of way, one hundred feet in width, for their said railroad across and through the Niobrara military reservation, located in said State of Nebraska; and such quantity of land, not exceeding one hundred and fifty feet in width by four hundred feet in length, in addition to such right of way, as may be necessary for depot or station-house and switches for said road, to be so selected as not to interfere with any buildings or improvements thereon, and the location thereof to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War."

Strike out section 2. in the following words:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell to said Fremont, Elk Horn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company forty acres of land, at a price not less than $2.50 per acre, for depot and other railroad purposes, to be selected by said company from the wood and timber reserve of said reservation, said land to be devoid of timber: Provided, That the selection of said land for depot purposes shall first be approved by the Secretary of War."

And in lieu thereof insert:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, directed to restore to the Secretary of the Interior the custody, control, and disposition of the following described parcels and tracts of land embraced within the limits of the Fort Niobrara military reservation, in the State of Nebraska, as declared in executive order of December 10, 1879, and enlarged by executive order of June 6, 1881, to wit: all of sections numbered 29, 30, 31, and 32, and the west half of section numbered 33, all in township numbered 34 north, of range numbered 27 west, and all that part of section numbered 8, in township numbered 33 north, range numbered 27 west, within the said limits of said reservation."

Insert, as an additional section, the following:

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall dispose of said tracts and parcels of land under the public-land laws in the same manner as if said tracts and parcels had never been embraced within the limits of said military reservation; and such persons as have settled or made improvements thereon prior to December 10, 1881, shall have priority of claim thereto under the public-land laws: Provided, That they file their respective claims according to law at the proper land office within three months after the said lands become subject to disposition under the public-land laws."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting right of way to the Fremont, Elk Horn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company across the Niobrara military reservation, in the State of Nebraska, and to restore certain portions of said military reservation to the public domain, and for other purposes."

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the right to object until the original bill has been reported, so we may see the effect of the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to non-concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. REAGAN. Unless there is some serious objection to be urged against these amendments I hope they will be concurred in.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I will state the objection to these amendments. The original bill provides for granting a right of way to a railroad company through a portion of this reservation. This is very necessary, and the people so regard it. The House passed a bill giving authority for that purpose. The Senate have returned the bill to the House with an amendment incorporating a provision for opening up this reservation to settlement, and providing also that certain parties shall have a special right or priority to the entries.

Mr. REAGAN. That is, the persons who have made improvements there.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Military Committee, who had charge of a bill similar to the general features of these amendments of the Senate, have received from the settlers in that community a united protest against such a measure, and they feel that they should not be subjected to the trouble they anticipate to prove their claims against them. These amendments would enable parties to come in and present claims in competition with the actual settlers who have gone upon the lands and made improvements upon them. Some of these parties have gone up the line of the proposed railroad and staked off the land for two miles where they propose to make a village, and in this way succeeded in securing a sort of land speculation. The soil is sandy and not desirable for agricultural purposes. The men who have staked off the property are not residents there, but come from Fremont, Nebraska. They do not live in that section at all, and it is an injustice to the residents of the place who have made improvements in the vicinity to allow these parties to come in and take possession of the lands to which the right of entry should first be accorded to these actual settlers.

Mr. REAGAN. If they are not upon some actual settlement I do not see how it can affect the right of the settlers, who are protected already under the law, and these amendments of the Senate, as I understand, are for the protection of actual settlers.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not object to the amendment of the Senate if you will relieve the bill of that priority feature which is given to these men who have simply gone and staked off these lands in 1881, and have no right whatever to them.

Mr. VALENTINE. But there are men living there now.

Mr. REAGAN. It has been the policy of the Government to give priority to parties who have made actual settlements.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. But I do not want priority given to the men who have simply gone there and taken possession of the reservation without any authority, and have made no settlement.

Mr. REAGAN. There can be no priority given to them unless they are actual settlers under the law.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. And further, Mr. Speaker, I will say that there is not a single paper filed from that community with the Military Committee, which has had control of this matter, except a protest from the citizens there against these amendments.

Mr. REAGAN. But will not non-concurrence in these amendments give the railroad company this priority over actual settlers?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. No, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. I was so advised.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not so understand it. The only object I have in view is that all parties may be upon a level. I move to non-concur in all of these amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire a further conference?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Yes, sir; I ask the appointment of a further committee of conference on the disagreement of the House to these Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. DAVIS of Illinois, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. UPSON as managers at said conference on the part of the House.

SARAH J. CAMERON.

The next House bill on the Speaker's table with Senate amendment was the bill (H. R. No. 3414) granting a pension to Sarah J. Cameron.

The Senate amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 5, the word "Henry" and insert "Harvey."

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

JOHN F. ELLIS.

The next House bill on the Speaker's table with Senate amendments was the bill (H. R. No. 4888) increasing the pension of John F. Ellis.

The Senate amendments are as follows:

In line 3, strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty-six."

In line 3, after "month," insert "from and after the passage of this act."

Mr. BROWNE. I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROWNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH F. WILSON.

The next House bill on the Speaker's table with Senate amendments was the bill (H. R. No. 6249) granting an increase of pension to Joseph F. Wilson.

The Senate amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 7, "forty" and insert "fifty."

Mr. BROWNE. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROWNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RELIEF FROM CHARGES OF DESERTION.

The next House bill on the Speaker's table with Senate amendments was the bill (H. R. No. 5224) to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion.

The Senate amendments are as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out "1st" and insert "23d."

Page 1, line 10, strike out "who were" and insert "was."

Page 1, line 11, strike out "their" and insert "his."

Page 2, line 2, after "leave," insert "did not intend to desert."

Page 2, line 2, after "such," insert "charge of."

Page 2, line 22, after "two" insert "relief under."

Page 3, line 2, strike out "three" and insert "twelve."

Page 3, line 2, strike out "received a local bounty and" and insert "intentionally."

Mr. RANDALL. I do not see the chairman of the Military Committee present, but he and I had a conference on yesterday and I understood it to be his intention, as a result of his conference with certain members of the House, to move to concur in these Senate amendments.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH,] who left the Hall some time since, having to serve on a conference committee, and who knows something about this bill, is very anxious these amendments should not be concurred in and desires they should go to a committee of conference.

Mr. RANDALL. I but repeat the result of a conversation I had with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and also with Senator PLUMB, who came over to the House. It will be remembered I called this bill up and had it put upon its passage. The only real difference is the change from three months to twelve months as the period of service of the soldier. It was thought if the bill was sent back to the Senate we might not secure its passage at this session. But if we could secure it with the amendment making the period twelve months, and it was found in other respects to work well, then we might next year reduce the twelve months to six months or three months.

Mr. CALKINS. What is the amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. It is to change three months to twelve months as the period of the soldier's service.

Mr. PAGE. I think the bill had better be passed over for the present, as the chairman of the Military Committee is not here and others who know something about it are not here.

Mr. RANDALL. I know something about it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments in their connection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the bill, that it may be seen how the amendments come in.

The bill was read, as follows, (the Senate proposed to amend the bill by striking out the words within brackets and inserting the words in italics:)

Be it enacted, &c., That the charge of desertion now standing on the rolls and records in the office of the Adjutant-General of the United States against any soldier who served in the late war in the volunteer service shall be removed in all cases where it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, from such rolls and records, or from other satisfactory testimony, that any such soldier served faithfully until the expiration of his term of enlistment, or until the [first] twenty-second day of May, A. D. 1865, or [who were] was prevented from completing [their] his term of service by reason of wounds received or disease contracted in the line of duty, but who, by reason of absence from his command at the time the same was mustered out, failed to be mustered out and to receive an honorable discharge.

SEC. 2. That the charge of desertion standing on the rolls and records in the office of the Adjutant-General of the United States against any soldier who served in the late war in the volunteer service shall also be removed in all cases where it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War from such rolls and records, or from other satisfactory testimony, that such soldier charged with desertion or with absence without leave did not intend to desert, and after such charge of desertion or absence without leave voluntarily returned to his command and served in the line of his duty until he was mustered out of the service and received a certificate of honorable discharge.

SEC. 3. That in all cases where the charge of desertion shall be removed under the provisions of this act from the record of any soldier who has not received a certificate of discharge, it shall be the duty of the Adjutant-General of the United States to issue to such soldier, or, in case of his death, to his heirs or legal representatives, a certificate of discharge.

SEC. 4. That when the charge of desertion shall be removed under the provisions of this act from the record of any soldier, such soldier, or, in case of his death, the heirs or legal representatives of such soldier, shall receive all pay and bounty which may have been withheld on account of such charge of desertion or absence without leave: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to give to any such soldier as may be entitled to relief under the provisions of this act, or, in case of his death, to the heirs or legal representatives of any such soldier, the right to receive pay and bounty for any period of time during which such soldier was absent from his command without leave of absence: And provided further, That no soldier, nor the heirs or legal representatives of any soldier, who served in the Army a period of less than [three] twelve months, or who [received a local bounty and] intentionally deserted, shall be entitled to the benefit of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. PAGE. I ask that the bill be passed over for the present.

Mr. CALKINS. The bill is of too much importance to be passed over when reached at this period of the session. It is known to this House as well as to the country that there was a large class of soldiers at the close of the war, that is when the war practically closed, who left their regiments and returned home. They had no more idea of deserting their regiments than those who remained. They took a practical, common-sense view of affairs, and knowing that the war was practically over they returned to their homes, and many of them did not again join their commands until after they were mustered out. Those men who were thus absent without leave when their commands were mustered out have standing against them the charge of desertion.

Ever since that time, ever since the war closed, to the present time, this class of soldiers, many of them as worthy and brave men as were in the Army, have been knocking at the doors of Congress asking for relief. This is the first bill we have ever been able to get through both Houses, all bills heretofore having dropped between the two Houses. Now I say we ought not to hazard the defeat of this bill, though it does not meet our views in all respects. I am afraid if the bill is passed over we will never reach it again. I therefore move to concur in the Senate amendments. If it is found that the bill is not right, we can amend it at the next session.

Mr. CURTIN. The bill is perfectly right.

Mr. PAGE. It may be right, but, as I have stated, a member of this House who is now absent on a conference committee has requested that it should not be taken up in his absence. I should like to have it laid aside until that gentleman is present.

Mr. BROWNE. The objection to the amendment of the Senate, as I understand it, is that it denies the benefits of the act to all soldiers who served less than one year.

Mr. CALKINS. That is the objectionable feature.

Mr. BROWNE. Now, while I would rather the bill should pass in the form in which it now is than that it should fail, I can see no reason why a soldier should be discriminated against who has served a less term than one year. For instance, there were many of these soldiers who left their commands who went into the Army near the close of the war and served until the end of the war when it was practically impossible for them to have served a year.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Allow me to ask my friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] if it is not better to pass this bill and not risk losing all?

Mr. CALKINS. All of us agree to the statement of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BROWNE,] but the question that confronts us now is whether we had not better pass this bill rather than risk the chance that no bill pass.

Mr. RYAN. There is no danger that this bill will fail if we non-concur in the Senate amendments. If it shall go over until the next session, it will not be more than four or five months before it will become a law, and the objection of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] is a very important one.

Mr. BROWNE. I submit to the House whether it is not better that this bill should go over until the next session, rather than to make this arbitrary discrimination against soldiers who served less than twelve months.

Mr. RYAN. I think so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] moves to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. PAGE, (to Mr. CALKINS.) You had better withdraw that motion.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not want to jeopardize the bill. I believe I can see that it would be better to pass this bill than to take any risk. I believe the majority of soldiers who desire this relief are those who will come within the purview of this act; a few of course will be excluded from it. But we can at any time pass an amendatory act relieving these very soldiers just as easily as we can let this bill fail. Let us pass this bill, although it is not all that we desire.

Mr. RYAN. The class of soldiers discriminated against by the Senate amendment will not be provided for by this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] that there is no reason why those who served for less than one year should not enjoy the benefits of this bill as well as those who served for a longer period.

But I also concur in the views of the other gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] that it is better to take the bill as it now is, and accept the relief that is offered, than to risk the failure of the bill entirely during this session. We can hereafter by an amendatory act extend relief to those who served for less than one year. I fear if this bill goes over until next session it may fail altogether, because that will be a short session and there will be a great press of work upon the two Houses of Congress.

I think it is for the best interests of those soldiers who are in this unfortunate position for us to accept the relief which is now within our grasp and to concur in the Senate amendments. I will hereafter to the utmost of my ability aid in extending the provisions of this bill to those who served one year. But let us concur in these amendments and give relief at once to those who will be relieved by the passage of this bill.

I know a number of soldiers who have for years been appealing in vain for relief from the charge of desertion which stands against them on the records of the War Department. They are in want of the arrears of pay which is due them. I think it is but an act of justice to afford relief to those men and not keep them dancing attendance until we can grant relief to others. Those who are embraced in the bill are mainly those who while sick at home when the war ended did not report to their regiments, and others who, when the war closed, were so anxious to return to their homes and families they did not wait upon the formalities of a regular discharge or muster out. It is not intended to aid a wilful deserter from his military duty.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If it be true, as my friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] asserts, that this is the best we can do, then I am in favor of taking it. It will afford relief to a large class of soldiers, but it does not go quite far enough.

I cannot understand why the Government, that has shown itself so magnanimous in other respects, should now hesitate to correct the record of a soldier who fought ten, eleven, or within a day or two of twelve months faithfully and to the close of the war, and until there was not an armed enemy of the country anywhere within our broad domain, because forsooth he stopped this side of the camp where his company was mustered out, in order to see his mother, his wife, his daughter, or his sweetheart if you please, and is now proscribed and branded as a deserter, and his children outraged, when it is known that he never abandoned his flag for an hour. There is absolutely no apology for prescribing that a soldier shall have served twelve months in order to be entitled to the relief which the Government should afford him.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In a moment. It occurs to me that if we disagree to this amendment we can have a conference, and I doubt not that the Senate will recognize the justice of agreeing to at least some shorter term of service than twelve months.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let me ask my friend if it would not be the better course for us to accept the Senate amendment to this bill which originally passed the House by unanimous consent and let it apply to those who served for one year? Why not pass this bill now in its present shape and introduce at once and pass by unanimous consent another bill to extend relief to those who served less than one year?

Mr. RYAN. We would never get the other bill through.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will say to my friend the trouble is that we would not be able to get the second bill through. I can see no difficulty in having a conference. If we are unable to agree, we can then concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. PAGE. A conference committee could settle the whole business in three hours.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Undoubtedly. The measure as the House passed it is so manifestly just that I do not think the Senate will adhere to its amendment. My friend from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] is apprehensive that this bill may fail; but there is no possibility that it can fail.

Mr. CALKINS. I know that the Senate has some objection to the class which the amendment excepts from the provisions of the bill. The very fact that the amendment has been adopted by the Senate must suggest that there is some objection of that kind. It is not necessary to go into the merits of that amendment. The only question is whether we shall take the bill as now amended and trust to the future to remedy its defects, or whether we shall let the entire bill fail.

Mr. RYAN. There is no such alternative.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly there is no such alternative presented. This bill passed the House by a unanimous vote, there was not one dissenting voice here. This House is near the people, is immediately responsible to them, and we are advised of the wants of the men who have suffered from the dereliction of Congress in this respect.

Mr. CALKINS. My friend does not understand me. Of course I agree with the gentleman—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But I say that the alternative which the gentleman suggests is not presented. We need not adjourn without accepting this amendment of the Senate if we can do no better. The soldiers of this country who stood by the flag, who never abandoned it for one hour, ask that this measure become a law in the form as passed by the House. And it is common, even-handed justice.

Mr. CALKINS. I insist on my motion to concur.

Mr. PAGE. Is it in order to move that the amendment of the Senate be non-concurred in and a conference with the Senate asked?

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the motion to concur; if that motion should be voted down, it amounts to non-concurrence.

Mr. SPRINGER. If we non-concur and ask a conference with the Senate, this whole business can be settled within two or three hours, and we can obtain all that we desire on this subject. The object of the original bill was to obviate the necessity of special legislation in cases of this kind which were coming before Congress by petitions and bills, and crowding our Calendars. If we now pass this bill making the discrimination proposed by the Senate amendment, the individuals against whom the discrimination operates will all come here with their special cases and our files will be overwhelmed. Let us finish this business now in a satisfactory manner.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. CALKINS to concur, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 29, noes not counted.

So the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move that the House ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently announced the appointment of Mr. CALKINS, Mr. BUTTERWORTH, and Mr. TOWNSHEND of Illinois, as conferees on the part of the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 28) for the relief of John G. Abercrombie;

A bill (H. R. No. 2299) relinquishing the title which still remains in the United States to the lots or portions of ground which lie within the limits of the present city of Burlington, State of Iowa, to the said city of Burlington; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3489) for the relief of certain laborers employed upon Government works.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MUTCHLER, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence until Tuesday next.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request:

Mr. FORNEY, at the request of Mr. Joseph Wheeler, asks that the deposition of I. W. Battles in the contested-election case of Howe vs. Wheeler, be withdrawn from the files and delivered to Joseph Wheeler; a correct copy of said deposition to be placed on file with the clerk of the committee.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection this request will be granted.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to present a privileged report; but I will yield to one gentleman on each side—first to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

ADDITIONAL GROUNDS FOR COURT-HOUSE, SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6841) to authorize the purchase of additional grounds for the United States court-house and post-office building at Springfield, Illinois. I ask that the bill be read and that I be allowed to make a statement before objections be asked for.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase the ground adjoining the United States court-house and post-office building in the city of Springfield, in the State of Illinois, bounded on the north by Monroe street, on the east by Seventh street, on the west by Sixth street, and on the south by the alley in the middle of the block: Provided, That said additional ground can be purchased, and a good and valid title secured to the United States, for not exceeding $28,000. And there is hereby appropriated for this purpose, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $26,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary. The Secretary is authorized to cause the buildings now on said ground to be removed, and the lot inclosed and improved; and for this purpose he may use the proceeds derived from the sale of the buildings, and in addition the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, which sum is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the right to object, in order that the gentleman from Illinois may make his statement.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a photograph of the locality referred to in this bill, showing the dangerous proximity of private property to the building of the United States. I will state also that there is in the possession of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. DE MOTTE,] a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, a report of a sub-committee of that committee in favor of the purchase of the property as proposed in this bill. The recommendation of this purchase is signed by Hon. Samuel H. Treat, judge of the southern district, together with every officer of the United States court in Springfield, as well as the governor of the State of Illinois. These officers all concur in the representation that the Government property is at present in imminent peril on account of the dangerous proximity of private property.

Mr. BROWNE. How much will it cost to purchase this property?

Mr. SPRINGER. Twenty-six thousand dollars, which I can state from my own knowledge is a reasonable price.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I will inquire of the gentleman whether this is the same matter which was discussed on one of the appropriation bills a few weeks ago.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is. It was ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Then I object.

LOSS OF EXPLORING STEAMER JEANNETTE.

Mr. ROBESON. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. THOMAS.]

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the House Calendar for present consideration the joint resolution (H. R. No. 278) instructing the Secretary of the Navy to convene a court of inquiry to investigate as to the circumstances of the loss of the exploring steamer Jeannette.

The Clerk proceeded to read the joint resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope the gentleman will not object to this joint resolution. It is a matter which costs nothing.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey has a conference report of great public importance to submit.

Mr. THOMAS. But the gentleman from New Jersey yielded to me.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is an investigation into the loss of the steamer Jeannette, the circumstances of which are all known.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Indiana withdraws his objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the joint resolution be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to convene as soon as practicable a court of inquiry to investigate the circumstances of the loss in the Arctic Seas of the exploring steamer Jeannette, and of the death of Lieutenant-Commander De Long and others of her officers and men, including an inquiry into the condition of the vessel on her departure, her management up to the time of her destruction, the provisions made and plans adopted for the several boats' crews upon their leaving the wreck, the efforts made by the various officers to insure the safety of the parties under their immediate charge, and for the relief of the other parties, and into the general conduct and merits of each and all the officers and men of the ill-fated expedition, and to submit the finding of such court of inquiry to Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. In reference to that joint resolution I wish to say this: I do not think it is the policy of this Government to interfere with enterprises entered into by citizens of the country, but inasmuch as this involves the conduct of officers of the United States Navy there may be some excuse for this investigation. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no further objection, and the joint resolution is before the House.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to submit a conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 35 and 36 to the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment, amended as follows: Insert after the word "on," in line 2, page 13 of the bill, the words "during the current fiscal year," and strike out, in line 8, page 13 of the bill, the words "stores and" and insert after the word "property," in line 8, page 13 of the bill, the words "and stores;" and the Senate agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,

JOHN A. LOGAN,

H. G. DAVIS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

GEO. M. ROBESON,

J. H. KETCHAM,

JNO. D. C. ATKINS,

Managers on the part of the House.

The statement accompanying the report, under the rule, is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the naval appropriation bill submit the following statement in explanation of the accompanying report:

The effect of the action recommended on amendments 35 and 36 will be, if accepted by the two Houses, as follows:

On amendment 35: Inserts the following:

"Provided, That if the Secretary of the Navy shall find that work at all the navy-yards now maintained cannot be carried on during the current fiscal year with advantage to the service and economy to the Government for the amounts in this act appropriated for the maintenance of and civil establishment at the navy-yards, he shall not make any deficiency for these purposes, but he shall suspend work at those yards where he finds it can best be dispensed with, and shall close such yards and transfer all perishable property and stores therefrom to other yards for use therein, and report the facts and the reasons governing his action to the next session of Congress; and at the yards so closed only such officers and employees shall be retained as are necessary to preserve and take care of the property of the Government, and all other persons shall be transferred or discharged: Provided further, That the navy-yard at Washington, District of Columbia, may, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be maintained as a manufacturing yard for the Bureaus of Equipment and Recruiting and Ordnance, and that work may be continued in the rope-walk in the Boston navy-yard: And provided further, That nothing herein shall be held to interfere with the permanent improvement of any navy-yard as now authorized by law, or the expenditure for such purpose of any money appropriated by Congress therefor."

On amendment 36: Inserts the following:

"That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain on what terms can be had such additional lands and water front contiguous to the Norfolk navy-yard as are deemed necessary for the construction of a wet-dock and such other works as are demanded for the sufficient capacity and efficiency of that yard; and that he report the result of such negotiations to the next session of Congress."

GEO. M. ROBESON,

J. H. KETCHAM,

JNO. D. C. ATKINS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROBESON. I will say in explanation that the provision of the bill insisted upon by the House is agreed to by the Senate, with the insertion of the words "for the present fiscal year" and the words "stores and," so as to include stores as well as perishable property.

I move the adoption of the report.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. ROBESON moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SARAH ROBB.

Mr. CANNON. I rise, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of calling up some unfinished pension business. The bill (H. R. No. 6226) was passed by the Committee of the Whole House some time ago, but failed to pass in the House for want of a quorum. I now call it up and ask that it be put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Sarah Robb, widow of Hamilton Robb, late chaplain of the Forty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the House.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MAJOR W. R. KING.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (S. No. 2092) for the relief of Major W. R. King.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to pass to the official credit of Major W. R. King, disbursing officer for the Tennessee River improvement, the sum of $3,970.18, that being the unrecovered balance of $5,240.18 of public funds forcibly taken from A. G. Smith, receiver of materials on Muscle Shoals Canal, in the State of Alabama, by William Ryan and two other armed robbers, on the 11th day of March, 1881, and for which sum the said W. R. King is accountable.

Mr. OATES. I ask by unanimous consent, pending objection, that I may be indulged in a brief explanation, and then I believe the House will be satisfied the bill ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. OATES. Major King is the chief engineer in charge of the Tennessee River improvement, and as such chargeable with the disbursement of the fund appropriated for that purpose. Last year he sent A. G. Smith, a trusted agent and receiver of material for the work, with a check he had drawn on the sub-treasury at New York for something over $5,000 to be cashed in Florence, Alabama, for the purpose of paying off the hands on the Blue Water portion of the Muscle Shoals Canal, and while on his way with the money Smith was robbed. Major King got a detective and pursued the robbers with great vigilance, recovering from one of them some $1,200.

He stands charged upon the books of the Department with something over $3,900. The evidence is abundant and convincing to show that he used all manner of diligence to capture the robbers and to recover the money which had been stolen. No one could have averted the loss, for Smith had no opportunity of resisting. The evidence, as I have said, is convincing and overwhelming. The Committee on Claims examined the matter carefully, and on the strength of the evidence unanimously reported in favor of allowing the relief sought. The Senate have passed a bill for his relief from that charge, and I now ask the House to take up and pass the Senate bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill may be read, subject to objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to pass to the official credit of Major W. R. King, disbursing officer for the Tennessee River improvement, the sum of $3,970.18, that being the unrecovered balance of $5,240.18 of public funds forcibly taken from A. G. Smith, receiver of materials on Muscle Shoals Canal, in the State of Alabama, by William Ryan and two other armed robbers, on the 11th day of March, 1881, and for which sum the said W. R. King is accountable.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving still the right to object to this bill, I wish to ascertain from the gentleman from Alabama having charge of it whether or not efforts have been made to capture the robbers or whether any of them have been captured and punished for this outrage.

Mr. OATES. Ryan has been captured, tried, and is now serving a term in the penitentiary.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I understand this has been examined and reported unanimously by a committee of the House.

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is another question I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama. The officer having charge of these funds being a disbursing officer of the Government had a right to demand security from the persons intrusted with the custody of the funds under his control. Was there any such surety taken in this instance?

Mr. OATES. The evidence shows abundantly that A. G. Smith, who had charge of the money, was sent by Major King to the bank in Florence to obtain the money on the warrant, having an arrangement with the bank to cash the drafts; and the proof shows conclusively that Smith was one of the most reliable men, a man of most excellent character, such a person as was fit to be trusted upon such a mission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will be permitted to complete his statement.

Mr. OATES. I was about to add that the evidence shows it was impossible for Smith to have resisted the robbers. They fell in with him, covered him with their pistols, compelled him to surrender the money after disarming him, and carrying him with them. All of the statements have been fully corroborated by the evidence, and there are several circumstances so strongly corroborating the evidence that I may be permitted to say it would be sufficient were a man on trial for his life to warrant a jury in convicting him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. OATES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMERICAN SHIP-BUILDING, ETC.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) providing for a joint select committee to inquire into the condition and wants of American ship-building and ship-owning interests, for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read subject to objection.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a joint select committee of three Senators and six Representatives be appointed to inquire into the condition and wants of American ship-building and ship-owning interests, and to investigate the causes of the decline of the American foreign carrying trade, and to suggest any remedies which may be applied by legislation. Said committee shall have authority to sit during the recess, and shall submit their report at the opening of the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the right to object is waived, I hope the gentleman from Maine will explain to the House what good results we can hope for from this joint committee? I remember that we had a very similar committee under the leadership of a distinguished gentleman from his State on this same subject a few years ago, and a large body of facts were gathered together; but they never furnished any data on which to predicate legislation. I hope the gentleman will be permitted to state what this is, as to the facts proposed to be developed, and the necessity for the passage of such a resolution.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution is reported unanimously by the Committee on Commerce, and seems to them to be the only feasible method of reaching certain information and formulating some plan for reviving the American merchant marine engaged in the foreign carrying trade. The Committee on Commerce have been so engrossed with the other matters which have been pressing upon them that they of course have not had the opportunity to give a thorough investigation to the subject, as they would have otherwise desired to do. There should be a joint investigation on the part of the committee for both branches of Congress, and at the present favorable opportunity, when a crisis has been reached with reference to our foreign carrying trade, a plan should be formulated to save that trade and restore the American flag to the ocean. This seems to be, to the gentlemen specially interested in the subject, the most favorable method that can be presented, and I think there can be no objection to pursuing such a method for obtaining information to enable a plan to be devised and formulated to cover the entire subject.

It should be borne in mind, Mr. Speaker, that within two years there have been great changes in the condition of American commerce. New facts have been developed, a new situation is presented, and taking this situation as we find it I am sure that this House and the American Congress will not longer delay to take steps which will tend to the important result of restoring our flag to the commerce of the ocean.

I ask the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. There is an amendment reported by the committee which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

At the end of the resolution add the following:

"The actual expenses of such committee, including compensation of a clerk, shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives."

Mr. DINGLEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox.]

Mr. COX, of New York. I think we pay some one hundred millions every year to foreign nations for our freightage.

Mr. ELLIS. One hundred and thirty millions.

Mr. COX, of New York. Certainly more than one hundred millions. I think it would be very wise, Mr. Speaker, to have a committee to examine this matter. They can add perhaps to the experience of the commission at Long Branch, for I think we can never have our shipping interests revived unless we revise our tariff. But I will not debate that now. There are some twenty different subjects connected with shipping which my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] perhaps could suggest to the House where we might by legislation revive our old-time shipping and ship-building interests. I hope the House will pass this resolution and give us a chance to obtain this information.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman from Maine will see the propriety of limiting the compensation to be paid to the clerk. The terms of the resolution are very indefinite.

Mr. DINGLEY. What would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest that the compensation should not exceed $1,500 a year.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have no objection to a limitation being added to the joint resolution. I would suggest that the compensation of the clerk be $6 a day while actually employed.

Mr. HOLMAN. That will do.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the joint resolution the following:

"The actual expenses of such committee, including compensation of a clerk at the rate of $6 a day while actually employed, to be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives."

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DINGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HEIRS OF THOMAS TOBY.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 543) for the relief of the heirs of Thomas Toby, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs of Thomas Toby, deceased, of the city of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, the sum of $45,000, in compliance with the joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Texas approved March 30, 1881, making provision for the settlement of Thomas Toby's claim: Provided, That the said heirs shall file with the Secretary of the Treasury a duly certified copy of the said joint resolution and a full and complete release unto the State of Texas and to the United States of and for all claims whatever of their ancestor against Texas and the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the right to object until the gentleman from Texas explains the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I shall state briefly the grounds upon which this claim rests. Mr. Toby, whose heirs prosecute this claim, was a citizen of New Orleans during the Texan and Mexican revolutions. He supplied to the Republic of Texas supplies, munitions of war, and a large amount of money. At the close of the revolution Texas was indebted to him the sum which the heirs now claim.

The Republic of Texas was considerably, perhaps greatly, involved, and could not pay its debts at that time. After the annexation of Texas to the Government of the United States the creditors of Texas, at least this class of creditors, claimed that the Government of the United States ought to pay this particular class of claims, because the Republic of Texas had pledged the revenues of that republic for the payment of its revolutionary debt; and therefore they claim that, inasmuch as the Government of the United States had annexed Texas and had incorporated its custom-houses into their own, they were under an obligation to pay these debts in full.

The United States Government bought from Texas 66,000,000 acres of land and agreed to pay to that State the sum of $10,000,000 in stock bearing interest. They paid over to Texas $5,000,000 of this stock, and reserved $5,000,000 of stock in the Treasury of the United States in order to indemnify the United States against this class of claims. The matter rested in that way until 1855, when another law was passed by Congress. The stock had then accumulated, by reason of the interest, from $5,000,000 to $6,500,000. Congress in 1855 appropriated $7,750,000 to pay this class of claims, adding $1,250,000 to the $6,500,000 which the Government then had in the Treasury, on account of claims for Indian depredations. And the United States Government assumed the trusteeship over this $7,750,000 to pay this class of claims. They have now paid them all.

Mr. UPSON. With the exception of this claim.

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes; with the exception of this claim. There are $101,000 now in the Treasury of the United States belonging to this fund, which is justly the property and the fund of Texas; and this claim is believed to be the last which can properly attach to the fund.

The Legislature of the State of Texas has instructed its Representatives and Senators to advocate the payment of this claim, which is believed to be just. Texas never paid it because she put the money into the Treasury to do it in 1850. The last claim except this was paid in 1870. The money has lapsed into the Treasury, and therefore it became necessary to pass this law.

Mr. MANNING. The committee was unanimous.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Judiciary Committee have examined the matter fully and fairly, and unanimously report that this money ought to be paid. It is a just claim and ought not longer to be withheld.

Mr. UPSON. And it does not come out of money of the United States.

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will have to reserve the right to object, inasmuch as this sum is very considerable and the claim is very old, until there is a specific statement on this subject from the Secretary of the Treasury. I regret very much that this claim has not gone to some committee of the House accustomed to examine claims of this class.

Mr. REAGAN. It has been examined by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOLMAN. It does not belong to the Committee on the Judiciary, and it is almost incredible that a claim of this kind should have gone to that committee. I must insist upon a statement of the Secretary of the Treasury as a basis of action, for this matter is too old and too complicated for the House to understand it without such a statement. I must reserve the right to object.

Mr. REAGAN. During the Forty-fourth Congress, knowing that this balance was in the Treasury of the United States in trust for the benefit of the State of Texas, I went to the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Bristow, to ascertain if it could not be paid to the State of Texas, that State engaging to indemnify the Government of the United States should any claim against the fund be presented. The Secretary of the Treasury said that the money was there, but had been covered into the Treasury, and it would be necessary to get the authority of Congress to enable him to pay it over to the State of Texas. A joint resolution was introduced into the Forty-fourth Congress to pay this trust fund over to the State of Texas, and it was unanimously reported favorably by the Committee on the Judiciary of that Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must say that unless there is a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury recommending the payment of this money (for no committee of the House can understand it without such a statement) I shall be compelled to object.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to state further that the Committee on the Judiciary of the Forty-fifth Congress reported unanimously in favor of this bill, and the committee of the Forty-sixth Congress reported in favor of it. I can state to the gentleman that the Treasury Department recognizes the facts precisely as they have been stated here. Had it been thought that any one would have raised a question of this kind there would have been no difficulty in obtaining a statement from the Treasury Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. Such a statement was certainly before the Committee on the Judiciary, for they would not have recommended the payment of so old and complicated a claim without a recommendation from the Treasury Department. All I ask is that such a statement shall be presented here.

Mr. REAGAN. What makes the claim seem old is the fact that various joint resolutions were passed extending the time for the payment of these claims, and payments were made as late as 1870.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have here a statement of the payments made. Mr. REAGAN. The Treasury Department recognizes the facts as they have been stated here.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will read a statement of the payments which have been made.

Mr. HOLMAN. Paid to the State of Texas?

Mr. CULBERSON. No, sir; paid to the creditors. The State of Texas has never had a dollar of this fund in its hands; the Government of the United States bought the land and kept the money to pay the creditors. The records of the Treasury Department show the following disbursements and payments made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States out of said fund:

|----------------------------------|----------------|
| During the fiscal year 1856..... | $6,435,931 51 |
| During the fiscal year 1857..... | 1,008,583 94 |
| During the fiscal year 1858..... | 39,317 47 |
| During the fiscal year 1860..... | 46,642 13 |
| During the fiscal year 1861..... | 78,884 16 |
| During the fiscal year 1865..... | 3 85 |
| During the fiscal year 1867..... | 196 45 |
| During the fiscal year 1870..... | 10,782 87 |

Total..... 7,648,886 73

Leaving a balance of $101,113.27, which has been carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the right to object. All I am asking for is that a statement from the Treasury Department shall be presented showing the state of the account between the United States and Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. Here it is.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the right to object. I wish a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury showing that there is this balance in the Treasury and that this sum ought to be paid to this creditor. It is a subject that the Treasury Department knows all about, and of which we can know nothing except as we get information from the Treasury Department.

Mr. MILLS. There is nothing at all complicated about this matter. The gentleman from Indiana is too old a statesman in this country to affect ignorance of this transaction. It ought to be known to him that in 1850 there was a serious controversy between the Government of the United States and the State of Texas as to the State boundary. That controversy was settled by the celebrated compromise of 1850, in which the Government of the United States took from Texas a certain quantity of land, some sixty-odd millions of acres, and agreed to give that State $10,000,000 for the land.

At the instance of the creditors of Texas $5,000,000 of that money was retained in the public Treasury at Washington, and the Government of the United States assumed the duty of paying the creditors of Texas out of that fund. The fund was afterwards increased to seven and a half millions of dollars, I believe. The creditors of Texas then presented their claims to the Treasury of the United States, and a certain amount of them were paid.

At the next session of Congress, as all the creditors had not presented their claims, Congress in an appropriation bill continued the time for the further presentation of these claims. After the payment of all the creditors there was left of this fund $101,000 still in the Treasury belonging to the State of Texas.

One of the creditors of the State of Texas who has a claim on this fund did not present his claim to the Government until the remainder of the fund was covered into the Treasury. The State of Texas now asks the Government of the United States to pay the amount of that claim. That is all there is about it; there is no complication whatever.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the left, [Mr. HARMER.]

Mr. HARMER. I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will be permitted to withdraw his objection and offer an amendment providing that if this account is not as stated the Treasury Department shall not pay it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair indulged considerable discussion upon the proposition of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. CULBERSON.]

Mr. HOLMAN. If an amendment were accepted providing that the Secretary of the Treasury—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HARMER] has been recognized.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman from Indiana desires to offer an amendment which will obviate the objection to this measure.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has indulged discussion on the bill; and objection has been made.

Mr. REAGAN. We are willing that the gentleman should offer an amendment which will remove all difficulty, if the Chair will entertain the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no discretion.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. Our entire State is interested in this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is on the floor. Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I call for the regular order.

CORRECTION.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] desires, as the Chair understands, to make a correction.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I stated I had been informed that Mr. Harris, of Virginia, chairman of the Committee of Elections of the Forty-fifth Congress, had stated to a sub-committee of the Committee on Elections of this Congress that the committee of the Forty-fifth Congress had agreed to a report in favor of seating Mr. Haralson, contestant from the fourth district of Alabama. I am now satisfied I was misinformed, and that the statement did Mr. Harris injustice, and that in fact he signed the report (which was never made to the House) in favor of the sitting member, Shelley. I make this statement in justice to Judge Harris and such members of the committee as signed the report in favor of the Senate amendment.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEIRCE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 6743) to establish diplomatic relations with Persia; A bill (S. No. 96) for the relief of Joseph Conrad, of Missouri; A bill (S. No. 1440) relating to the registration of trade-marks; A bill (S. No. 1472) for the relief of Julia A. Nutt; and A bill (S. No. 2171) to remove the political disabilities of Frank C. Armstrong, of Maryland.

REPORTS OF CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the proceeding under the Pound rule for one hour.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain it.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with an amendment the joint resolution (H. R. No. 279) to provide for preparing the reports of contested-election cases in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That there be printed for the use of the Senate and House the usual number of copies of the digest of contested-election cases of the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses, together with a full index of the same, to be prepared by the clerk of the Committee on Elections; for the preparation and superintendence of which there shall be paid said clerk by the Clerk of the House of Representatives the sum of $1,000, and not more than $500 shall be paid before the work is completed.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 3, after the word "printed," insert "and bound."

Mr. PELLE. We were unable to hear the resolution read; we desire to understand it.

Mr. CALKINS. It simply authorizes the printing of a digest of the contested-election cases in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses, to be prepared by the clerk of the Committee on Elections.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is the usual publication.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERTISEMENTS FOR GOVERNMENT SUPPLIES, ETC.

Mr. SPRINGER. By direction of the Committee on Printing, I report back the bill (H. R. No. 6800) to amend section 3709 of the Revised Statutes with recommendation that the bill pass.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That hereafter executive proclamations and treaties required by law to be published, and all advertisements, notices, or proposals for contracts and supplies for any Department of the Government, or any bureau thereof, shall be published under such regulations as may be prescribed by the head of the Department, in such newspapers as may be designated by the President of the United States; and all such advertisements for any Department of the Government, and for the District of Columbia, shall be published in such daily newspapers in the District of Columbia as may be designated by the President of the United States, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the award of and compensation for the public advertising in the District of Columbia," approved January 21, 1881. And all advertising required to be done in the District of Columbia by the courts of said District shall be published in one daily newspaper, to be designated by the President of the United States; but in no case shall the compensation for any such service exceed the regular commercial rate of the newspaper selected. But nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the publication of advertisements or expenditures for the same in excess of existing provisions of law, except as herein provided for the District of Columbia.

Mr. PEELE. I ask whether this is a privileged matter?

The SPEAKER. It is a report from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. PEELE. But it is a bill to amend a section of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. I make the point that it is not a privileged matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] on the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I submit that the gentleman making the point of order should first be heard; he must show wherein his point is good.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desired to hear from the other side.

Mr. PEELE. I make the point for two reasons—

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman make a point of order against the committee as not being privileged to report this matter, or upon the matter itself?

Mr. PEELE. I think that under the rule this is not a privileged report. In the next place I can see no reason why the President of the United States should be required to designate newspapers for the publication of advertisements.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will make an explanation. This bill changes the existing law in this respect only: at present if any supplies are to be purchased by the Government or any public property to be sold, advertisements may be published in a remote part of the country, and contracts may be made or the property sold without proper publicity. This bill proposes to require the President of the United States to designate three newspapers in the District of Columbia, in which all these advertisements must appear, so that those who desire to purchase Government property or to furnish Government supplies may know, in all cases, where to find the advertisements. This is the only change proposed in the existing law.

Mr. ROBESON. I will ask the gentleman whether the privilege of the Committee on Printing is not confined to propositions for printing for the two Houses, and whether this bill is a proposition of that kind?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have not stated anything in regard to that matter. I was instructed to make this report.

Mr. ROBESON. I have no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. The report was made some time since and recommended. The question now is whether the gentleman has a right to report it for consideration as a privileged matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. The report was made heretofore and ordered to be printed and recommitted, and I desire now to report it for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is subject to the point of order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House take a recess for two hours.

The SPEAKER. There are some privileged reports which gentlemen desire to present. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his motion?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not if there are privileged reports.

CLERK OF COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS.

Mr. MARTIN. I am directed by the Committee on Accounts to submit the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay a sum equal to a month's pay to the present clerk of the Committee on Accounts of the House for clerical work to be done during the recess; the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Delaware whether this is a regular employé at this time, and this is service to be rendered in addition to his regular services?

Mr. MARTIN. The Committee on Accounts of the House is not permitted, as is the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to sit during the recess of Congress, and yet the pay-rolls of the House have to be approved by the chairman of that committee during the recess as well as during the session. The clerk of that committee has all these pay-rolls to transcribe, for it should be understood by the House that every bill audited and ordered to be paid by the Committee on Accounts is entered on the books of that committee. It has been the uniform custom heretofore to allow this clerk one month's pay in lieu of allowing the Committee on Accounts to sit during the recess, so as to pay this clerk for the extra work which is imposed upon him.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MARTIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, AUGUSTA, MAINE.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a request of the House which, if the facts were different, I should perhaps deem a little bit absurd at this stage of the session. But the facts of the case are these: last February my colleague [Mr. LINDSEY] was attacked by a disease of the heart, rendering abstention from public business necessary for the preservation of his life. He lingered here for some time, and then, under the advice of his physician, went home, where he now is. About that time the Senate of the United States passed a bill for the erection of a post-office building in the city of Augusta, which he was unable to attend to here. I think I can satisfy this House beyond all peradventure, every man of them, that the request should be granted, if I have consent to make it, and the Senate bill should be taken up.

The facts, Mr. Speaker, are these: the city of Augusta, owing to the establishment there of permanent lithographic and newspaper publishing works, is actually the fifth post-office in revenue in the United States in second-class matter.

It follows New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, and even this is an understatement of the fact, because these publishing establishments receive postage-stamps in payment for their wares to such an extent that the actual business transacted by that office places it immediately after Chicago, the third post-office in the Union.

The city of Augusta is a small city comparatively, of only eleven or twelve thousand inhabitants. It is the capital of the State of Maine. Nevertheless, being a city of that size, the post-office business has to be transacted in two separate offices, there not being a building large enough in which to transact it. The actual rents paid for inferior accommodations are $3,300.

It seems to me under these circumstances, this being a permanent increase of actual official earnings on second-class matter, being within $5,000 of what it is in the city of Philadelphia, the actual earnings being more than that, it makes out a case the like of which has not been presented to this House this session.

I ask to take up the Senate bill which provides for an appropriation of $150,000 and to modify it so as to correspond with the report of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House by reducing the appropriation to $100,000. I ask unanimous consent to take up and pass that bill as it is proposed to be amended, and I think under the circumstances it is a fair act of justice that the request should be granted.

Mr. ATHERTON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. REED. I should be happy to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. ATHERTON. I should like to ask whether there is any other building there except a post-office?

Mr. REED. There is no other.

Mr. ATHERTON. Is a Federal court held there?

Mr. REED. I will state, in further answer to the gentleman's question, that there is an arsenal there. Beside, Augusta is within four miles of Togus, where there is a soldiers' home, and the Augusta post-office has to handle all the mailable matter of that institution. There is also a pension-office there, which could be accommodated in the same building.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Maine will restate his request, as I did not hear it.

Mr. REED. I will repeat what I said. The request I make is in behalf of my colleague, Mr. LINDSEY, whose illness prevents him from personally making the request, and has for the last four or five months. It is that Augusta, which is the fifth revenue-paying post-office in the United States in second-class matter, having a revenue of $65,000 in actual cash, and transacting a business, as I have already explained, amounting to $108,000 a year, shall be permitted to have a public building erected there for the use of the post-office, internal revenue, pension office, and other Government purposes, and for that purpose that the bill of the Senate may be taken up and passed, simply amending it by providing an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose instead of $150,000. I ask this because there is no possibility of renting a building in that city wherein the business of the post-office can be properly transacted. It is now carried on in an unsatisfactory manner in two separate buildings, some three hundred feet apart, at great inconvenience, and for which a rental of $3,300 per annum is paid, while the accommodations are utterly insufficient.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCKENZIE. I do not rise, Mr. Speaker, to object to this bill, and will not object provided the House will permit me to have action upon a bill which I sought to have taken up a few days since for the erection of a public building at Owensborough, in Kentucky.

Mr. REED. I do not think the gentleman from Kentucky ought to make that request to me.

Mr. MCKENZIE. The objection to the request which I made came from gentlemen on that side of the House.

Mr. REED. I certainly have not objected.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Then, will the gentleman permit the bill to which I have referred to be taken up for consideration?

Mr. REED. I will say this to the gentleman, that I would not, for the sake of all the public buildings erected in Maine or elsewhere, mortgage my views in this manner upon any subject.

Mr. COX, of New York. I demand the regular order.

Mr. DINGLEY. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will withdraw his objection to this bill.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I will withdraw if objection is withdrawn to the bill which I have asked consent to consider.

Mr. ATHERTON. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. REED. Do I understand the gentleman from Kentucky as insisting upon his objection?

Mr. MCKENZIE. I have not insisted upon the objection. I simply called attention to the fact that I had made a request of a similar character, to which gentlemen on the other side saw fit to object. I had hoped they would withdraw that objection, and still hope they will do so.

Mr. REED. I understand, then, there is no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana to rise for the purpose of objecting.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; I rose to make an inquiry.

Mr. ATHERTON. I have objected.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I ask the gentleman from Maine again if objection is withdrawn to his bill whether objection will still be urged upon the one I have mentioned?

Mr. REED. That I cannot say. I ask unanimous consent on the merits of the bill I present. If that is declined, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the objection will be withdrawn, and that the gentleman from Michigan who objected to a measure which I sought to introduce some time ago will also withdraw his objection.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I have withdrawn the objection.

Mr. ATHERTON. I object.

Mr. ANDERSON. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that there are peculiar circumstances in this case—

Mr. COX, of New York. Regular order.

Mr. REED. Let me again repeat my request in behalf of my colleague. I do not ask this for myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands objection has been made from several quarters, and the regular order is demanded.

Mr. COX, of New York. I demand the regular order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate insist upon its amendments to the resolution of the House of July 25, 1882, to print 300,000 copies of the annual Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1881, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon. Further, that the Senate had appointed Messrs. ANTHONY, HARRISON, and VEST as managers of said conference on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate receded from its amendment No. 47 to the bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. No. 106) providing for the payment of mileage to Senators, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

Also, that the Senate agree to the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, granting the use of the Rotunda and adjacent rooms in the Capitol to the Garfield monument committee, Society of the Army of the Cumberland, for use in connection with said society on certain days in November and December next.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. No. 97) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of Acting Assistant Paymaster Edward K. Winship, United States Navy;

A bill (S. No. 1255) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska; and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. No. 126) to reimburse the Creek orphan fund.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House now take a recess for two hours.

Mr. BROWNE. I hope that will not be done. There are very important pension matters which should be considered, which will effect a great saving to the people of this country—

Mr. URNER. I desire also to submit several favorable reports from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on the motion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 31.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. BROWNE were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 76.

Mr. HOLMAN. For the present I withdraw the point as to a quorum.

So (further count not being called for) the motion for a recess was not agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes.

INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. BROWNE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 2172) to amend section 4702, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes. And if the House will indulge me just a minute or two I will try to have it understand exactly the amendments contemplated by this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 4702, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4702. If any person embraced within the provisions of sections 4692 and 4693 has died since the 4th day of March, 1861, or hereafter dies, by reason of any wound, injury, or disease which under the conditions and limitations of such sections would have entitled him to an invalid pension had he been disabled, his widow, or if there be no widow, or in case of her death without payment to her of any part of the pension hereinafter mentioned, his child or children under sixteen years of age shall be entitled to receive the same pension as the husband or father would have been entitled to had he been totally disabled, to commence from the death of the husband or father, to continue to the widow during her widowhood, and to his child or children until they severally attain the age of sixteen years, and no longer; and if the widow remarry, the child or children shall be entitled from the date of remarriage, except when such widow has continued to draw the pension-money after her remarriage, in contravention of law, and such child or children have resided with and been supported by her, their pension will commence at the date to which the widow was last paid.

"SEC. 2. That marriages, except such as are mentioned in section 4705 of the Revised Statutes, shall be proven in pension cases to be legal marriages according to the law of the place where the parties resided at the time of marriage or at a time when the right to pension accrued, and the open and notorious adulterous cohabitation of a widow who is a pensioner shall operate to terminate her pension from the commencement of such cohabitation."

Mr. BROWNE. A bill substantially the same as this was called up the other day by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CURTIN,] but in the confusion which prevailed he had no opportunity to make the House understand its precise purpose. This bill seems a long one; yet, in fact, its first section simply recites the law as it now is, down to the word "except," and only changes the law in that respect in these words:

Except when such widow has continued to draw the pension money after her remarriage, in contravention of law, and such child or children have resided with and been supported by her, their pension will commence at the date to which the widow was last paid.

Under the present law, in the case of the remarriage of the widow the children draw the pension money from the date of that remarriage. Notwithstanding in almost innumerable cases the widow in contravention of law has drawn the pension covering periods subsequent to the remarriage, she has also drawn the pension money that was due the children at the time when the children were living with her and were supported by her. This bill provides that in such cases the pension shall be paid for the benefit of the children only up to the date of the last payment to the mother; that is, in cases where the mother has drawn the pension and applied it to the maintenance of the children.

Thus it will be seen the bill saves so much money as may be covered by the periods in which widows marrying have drawn pension in contravention of law.

The second section provides that in proving in the Pension Office where a marriage exists it shall be determined by the law of the place where the marriage shall have been solemnized, except in the case of Indians and negroes, which is covered by another section. The reason why that is required is this: in numerous instances it has been ascertained that widows living in improper relations subsequent to the husband's death are drawing pension money; and when the question of adulterous connection is raised it is insisted a marriage exists as at common law, that the mere fact that the parties are living together and holding themselves out as husband and wife is sufficient evidence of the solemnization of the marriage.

This section therefore provides that in proving whether or not a marriage exists it shall be determined whether or not it has been solemnized in conformity with the law of the place at which it is claimed the marriage took place.

That section then provides that where widows drawing pensions on account of husbands whose lives have been lost as an incident of the service are living in improper relations, or in adultery, that during the period of this illicit cohabitation the Pension Office shall suspend the pension. I saw in the hands of the Commissioner of Pensions the other day a letter giving an instance in which the widow, or the woman who subsequently became a widow, had been living in improper relations with a man other than her husband for more than two years prior to the husband's death, was so living at the time of his death, is so living now, and has been for ten years. And yet during eight years of that time she and her paramour have been living on the pension given her in consequence of the death of the soldier husband. This bill provides that in such cases the Commissioner of Pensions, on due proof, may suspend the pension.

In many instances it is said, and I suppose there can be no doubt of the truth of the statement, that widows do not marry, but live in these improper relations simply because they know that a marriage suspends the payment of the money. If the cohabitation suspends the pension that obstruction to marriage will be removed.

This is all there is in this bill. It was passed unanimously by the Senate, and I think with this explanation there will be no objection to it on the part of any gentleman in this House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would inquire if the bill, except so far as the gentleman from Indiana has made an explanation, is a re-enactment of the present law?

Mr. BROWNE. Yes, sir; it is a re-enactment of the present law down to the word "except," in the fourth line from the end of the first section; what follows that word "except" is the only change made to the original law, so far as that section is concerned. The effect of the second section is as I have stated it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. BROWNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives to the bill (H. R. No. 2997) granting right of way to the Fremont, Elk Horn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company across the Niobrara military reservation, of the State of Nebraska, and authorizing the sale of a portion of said reservation; and agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. LOGAN, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. HARRISON.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 5224) to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion; had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. LOGAN, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. COCKRELL.

JOHN W. FORNEY.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time the bill (S. No. 2099) for the relief of the executors of John W. Forney. Before the bill or report is read I desire to say that Mr. Forney during his life-time was a resident of the district which I have the honor to represent here, and his widow and surviving daughters are now residents of my district. This bill relates to a matter purely within the province of the Senate, concerning one of its officers. But I do not rest the propriety of the passage of the bill upon that alone; I rest it upon its merits. I ask that the bill be read, and also the report if it is desired.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the executors of John W. Forney the sum of $27,684.70, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse the estate of the said John W. Forney for losses sustained by him while Secretary of the Senate in making good the deficit in the accounts of the financial clerk.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I think we had better have some explanation of this bill, reserving the right to object.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I ask that the report be read; it is very conclusive.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have the entire report read? It is very long.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let it all be read.

Mr. RANDALL. It had better be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the executors of John W. Forney, have considered the same, and respectfully report: The case is well stated in the petition, which we insert:

Petition for the relief of the estate of John W. Forney, deceased.

To the honor of the Senate of the United States of America:

The petition of the subscribers, citizens of Philadelphia, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, respectfully sheweth:

That John W. Forney, late of said city, died on the 9th day of December, A. D. 1881, leaving a last will and testament dated the 4th day of July, A. D. 1874, and admitted to probate by the register of wills in the county of Philadelphia aforesaid on the 23d day of December, A. D. 1881, and that letters testamentary were granted to the executors in said will named, (a copy of which is hereto annexed, marked Exhibit A.)

That your petitioners are the same persons named as executors in said will, which contains inter alia the following provision, to wit:

"Item 21. Inasmuch as during the time that I held the office of Secretary of the Senate of the United States I made good and paid into the Treasury of the United States, out of my own moneys, a large sum which it appeared had been misappropriated or taken by one of my subordinates out of the moneys for which I was officially accountable as such Secretary, but under circumstances and in a manner which did not reflect in any way upon my administration of said office for care and vigilance in regard to the public funds intrusted thereto, as fully appears by a report of a committee of said Senate appointed to investigate the matter, and such making good and payment by me was made promptly and without hesitation, and without question as to my legal liability to make good such loss, of which there was a strong doubt; and inasmuch as Congress has in several instances acted for the relief of those who have made payments into the Treasury under circumstances similar to my own, my will is, and I hereby direct, that it shall and may be lawful for my said executors and trustees at any time to take such measures in such way as they deem best and most expedient to obtain a repayment from the United States to my estate of the sum so paid by me; and I do this especially because some amount of the incumbrances now existing against my real estate, and of my indebtedness, and which may embarrass my executors and trustees in the settlement and management of my estate, and the trusts under this will, were created and had their origin in the efforts I had to make to raise the money for such payment into the Treasury as aforesaid."

And your petitioners, in accordance with the direction in said will, hereby make application to your honorable body for a repayment of a portion of the moneys paid into the Treasury of the United States as aforesaid, and submit herewith the following facts as set forth in the report of the Committee of the Senate to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses, to whom was referred a resolution of the Senate to examine and thoroughly investigate the accounts of John W. Forney, then Secretary of the Senate, from the date of his election, (a copy of which report being hereto annexed, marked Exhibit B,) together with certain additional facts relating thereto.

John W. Forney entered upon the duties of Secretary of the Senate on the 15th day of July, A. D. 1861, and remained in continuous service as such officer until the 4th day of June, A. D. 1868, when he resigned the office. In October, 1867, rumors appeared in the public prints alleging a defalcation or misuse of the funds of the Senate in the hands of the Secretary, and led to the passage of a resolution to examine the accounts of the Secretary. At the time of the appointment of the committee under the resolution, and during the progress of its work, it appeared, by reference to an official statement obtained from the Treasury Department, dated April 18, 1868, that the whole sum advanced to the Secretary before that time was $4,125,713.99, and that the sums passed to his credit in said Department on vouchers paid by him and audited there, together with the sums paid by him and not yet passed by the accounting officers, but examined by the committee and found correct, and, with the cash on hand, left the Secretary the creditor to a small amount, and that no losses were sustained by the Government through his action. On the contrary, the evidence taken by the committee completely vindicated him from such imputation.

It also appeared, however, that on the 23d day of December, 1867, there was an actual deficit in the Secretary's accounts adjusted and unadjusted of $35,486, and that to make good the deficit as soon as it came to his knowledge the Secretary raised and placed in the official safe in his office, subject to disbursement, the sum of $35,200.

The committee say: "While it was the duty of the Secretary to sign the requisitions on the Treasury, he in no case received or paid out the money drawn. The actual control and disbursement of the contingent fund of the Senate is with the financial clerk, who is one of the officers of the Senate and assigned to that particular duty by the Secretary. The financial clerkship is an office of much importance, and the person who fills it should be a man of high integrity and competency. He prepares requisitions upon the Treasury, from which all moneys are drawn, receives the money so drawn, has exclusive control of the safe in which it is kept, and makes all the disbursements therefrom."

It further appears that Mr. Samuel Wagner, of York, Pennsylvania, was the financial clerk in the office of the Secretary at the time the default occurred. The committee say:

"Mr. Wagner was selected by the Secretary as a man entirely competent and reliable to perform the duties of financial clerk. While discharging those duties he was esteemed by members of the Senate and by others with whom he transacted business as a very fit man for the place he held. He had been for a long time cashier of a bank at York, Pennsylvania, and his selection by the Secretary was apparently judicious. The trust reposed by the Secretary in him would seem, therefore, to have been reasonable and within the bounds of ordinary prudence. There is no evidence that he suspected his clerk of misconduct prior to December, 1867, or that circumstances were brought to his knowledge which should have induced distrust."

"There can be no doubt that the financial clerk is responsible for the larger part, if not the whole, of the $35,486. There is no evidence which points to any one except to the financial clerk as responsible for its loss or abstraction. He had exclusive control of the moneys when the default occurred; he acknowledged a misappropriation to his own use of $20,000, and admits that he is responsible for whatever deficiency existed at the date of his resignation."

And your petitioners further say that the said Wagner was promptly removed from his position as financial clerk immediately upon the discovery of his defalcation by the said Forney, and that all the real and personal property of the said Wagner that he possessed to the knowledge of the said Forney was secured by and surrendered to the latter for the purpose of applying to and liquidating the amount of money abstracted as aforesaid, and that the said Forney proceeded with diligence and prudence to realize the cash value of the property surrendered by the said Wagner as aforesaid; that at the time it was represented by him, the said Wagner, as ample to cover the loss occasioned to the said Forney, but it was subsequently ascertained to have been grossly exaggerated in value, producing and yielding to the said Forney about one-fourth only of the amount abstracted as aforesaid. (See affidavit hereto annexed, marked Exhibit C.)

And your petitioners submit for the consideration of your honorable body the following reasons why the prayer of this petition should be granted, namely:

First. The financial clerk was an official of the Senate with distinctly defined duties, and his appointment was authorized to be made by the Secretary simply for reasons of convenience and propriety.

Second. In point of fact and in accordance with law and usage the said Wagner had, as financial clerk, the entire and exclusive control and possession of the contingent fund of the Senate from the time the money was received by him from the Treasury Department, deposited in the office safe, to which he alone had access by means of a combination lock, until it was by him disbursed, the said Forney in no instance receiving or disbursing one dollar of said fund.

Third. The said Wagner, at the time of his appointment, was a gentleman of unblemished reputation and undoubted financial integrity. He had been a bank officer at York, Pennsylvania, for twenty years; was possessed of property, had excellent personal habits, was courteous, industrious, intelligent, and esteemed by all the Senators to be a model officer of trained capacity, and whose honesty was wholly unsuspected up to the hour of the discovery of the deficit.

Fourth. The defalcation of Wagner was the result of acts and circumstances of which the said Forney had no knowledge, direction, or control, and in which he was in no way implicated. He could not have prevented it by any exercise of ordinary care and vigilance, because his official occupations necessarily prevented constant personal supervision over the acts of the financial clerk, as to the moneys committed to his care. The said Forney himself caused an exposure of the wrong, and immediately made up from his private means, without apology, question, or quibble as to his legal or equitable liability therefor, the amount of the abstracted funds, thus promptly meeting and discharging the obligation created by the letter of his bond.

Fifth. While the official bond given by the said Forney, in the sum of $40,000, for the safe-keeping and disbursement of the contingent fund imposed upon him a strictly legal responsibility, namely, to account for every dollar drawn from the Treasury for Senatorial use whenever required, without hesitation or excuse for a failure to keep to the letter of his bond, yet this theory of official duty is not inconsistent with bills of relief subsequently enacted upon fit occasions for cause shown where, as in this case, the official who sustains a loss by the default of another is himself clear of misconduct or fault.

Sixth. The said Forney has always maintained that he was not equitably liable for the amount abstracted by Wagner, but preferred to pay the amount promptly into the Treasury in order to balance his accounts with that Department, and to depend upon the justice and generosity of Congress to refund the actual amount of his loss when he should apply for the same.

Your petitioners are advised and believe that the said sum of $35,486 so paid into the Treasury of the United States as aforesaid has not been nor has any part thereof been refunded to the said John W. Forney, nor to any one for him, by the said the Government of the United States, but that a portion of said sum, to wit, the sum of $7,801.30 was the entire amount realized out of the proceeds of the property surrendered by the said Wagner as aforesaid and applied by the said Forney in his lifetime in part payment of his said loss. (See Exhibit C.)

Your petitioners therefore pray that the United States will refund the amount of said loss, to wit:

|--|-------------|
| Amount paid United States Treasury by John W. Forney..... | $35,486 00 |
| Amount realized by him from sale of Wagner's property..... | 7,801 30 |
| Balance..... | 27,684 70 |

and that said balance of $27,684.70, being the actual loss sustained by said John W. Forney, be granted to the petitioners, executors as aforesaid.

And they will ever pray, &c.

W. W. WEIGLEY.
JAMES FORNEY.

PHILADELPHIA COUNTY, ss:

James Forney, being duly sworn according to law, doth depose and say that the facts set forth in the foregoing petition are true to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief.

JAMES FORNEY.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 3d day of April.

JAMES CROWE, Notary Public.

EXHIBIT A.

PHILADELPHIA CITY AND COUNTY, ss:

I, W. Marshall Taylor, register for the probate of wills and granting letters of administration in and for the city and county of Philadelphia, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, do hereby certify and make known that on the 20th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1881, letters testamentary on the estate of John W. Forney, deceased, were granted unto W. W. Weigley and James Forney, they having first been qualified well and truly to administer the same.

Given under my hand and seal of office this 22d day of December, 1881.

[SEAL.] WM. G. SHIELDS, Deputy Register.

We insert, for the further information of the Senate, the report of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, who investigated the matter at the time of its occurrence:

EXHIBIT B.

[Senate Rep. Com. No. 98, Fortieth Congress, second session.]

In the Senate of the United States, May 6, 1868, ordered to be printed.

Mr. Cragin, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, submitted the following report:

The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have, in compliance with the resolution of the Senate passed on the 15th day of April last, examined and thoroughly investigated the accounts of John W. Forney, Secretary of the Senate, from the date of his election to the present time, and beg leave to report:

That by reference to an official statement obtained from the Treasury Department, herewith presented, dated April 18, 1868, and marked A, it appears that the whole sum advanced to the Secretary of the Senate is $4,125,713.99; that the sum of $3,713,526.25 has been passed to his credit in said Department on vouchers paid by him and audited there; that the sum of $80,503.88 drawn from the Treasury was deposited by him and is now standing to his credit on the books of the Treasurer of the United States, subject to draft, as shown by the letter of the Treasurer dated April 20, 1868; that the vouchers paid by him since November 30, 1867, and not yet passed upon by the accounting officers of the Treasury, but ready to be transmitted to them, and which we have examined, as per statement herewith presented and marked B, amount to $311,704.08, making a sum total of $4,105,734.21, and leaving a balance to be accounted for of $19,979.78. The cash on hand and vouchers paid since this investigation began, and not included in statement B, amount to $19,524.07; and there is due the Secretary on account of his salary $809.74. It will thus be seen that he is a creditor to a small amount, and that no losses have been sustained by the Government through his action. On the contrary, the evidence taken by the committee completely vindicates him from such imputation.

The foregoing general summary of results exhibits the general condition of the account of the Secretary of the Senate, and complies with the demand of the resolution of instruction to the committee.

But, in view of the remarks made in the Senate when the resolution was adopted, the committee have bestowed particular attention to the question of an alleged defalcation or misuse of the funds of the Senate in the hands of the Secretary.

Inasmuch as that question had been a topic of remark in the public press, and was one well calculated to provoke serious doubts regarding the disbursement of the contingent fund of the Senate, it was clearly proper that it should be made the subject of investigation.

It appears that on the 23d of December last there was an actual deficit in the Secretary's accounts, adjusted and unadjusted, of $35,486. At that date, upon an investigation made by direction of the Secretary, the amount of the deficit was fixed at $25,530.43, but by subsequent corrections, reducing the amount, and by the addition of two items which did not appear upon the Secretary's account, but which were shown by the books of the Treasury Department, the above total of $35,486 was produced. Certain advances, however, made by the financial clerk to officers of the Senate, and the future allowance of some other rejected or suspended items, may possibly reduce this amount by about $3,000.

To make good the deficit, as soon as it came to his knowledge, the Secretary of the Senate raised and placed in the official safe in his office, subject to disbursement, the sum of $26,000, on the 26th day of December, and on the 16th, 20th, and 22d days of April of the present year further sums amounting to $9,200.

The Secretary is under bond in the sum of $40,000 for the faithful disbursement of the contingent fund according to law, and when the deficit in his accounts was ascertained in December he executed a new bond, with good and sufficient sureties, which was duly filed in the Treasury Department.

By the evidence taken it will appear that the actual control and disbursement of the contingent fund of the Senate is with the financial clerk, who is one of the officers of the Senate, and assigned to that particular duty by the Secretary. He prepares requisitions upon the Treasury, from which all moneys are drawn; receives the money so drawn; has exclusive control of the safe in which it is kept, and makes all disbursements therefrom.

The Secretary signs the requisitions on the Treasury, but in no case receives or pays out the moneys drawn. It will therefore be seen that this financial clerkship is an office of much importance, and that the person who fills it should be a man of high integrity and competency. It is stated to the committee by the witnesses that the duties are too great for faithful and prompt discharge by one person, in view of the increased amount and variety of expenditures in recent years, and that this fact will explain in part the delay in making settlements at the Treasury, and the difficulty in ascertaining through the financial clerk the exact condition of the Secretary's account at a given date.

Mr. J. S. Bowen, the present postmaster of Washington City, was financial clerk from the 1st of June, 1862, until the 1st of April, 1863. He was again called into the Secretary's office in December last to assist in the investigation of the accounts, and since the 23d day of that month has acted as financial clerk, and has rendered valuable service in investigating and placing the accounts in order.

Mr. Samuel Wagner, of Pennsylvania, became financial clerk in the office in April, 1863, when Mr. Bowen left, and continued to act until the 23d of December, 1867, when he resigned and left the office. There can be no doubt that he is responsible for the larger part, if not the whole, of the deficit of $35,486. He had exclusive control of the moneys when the default occurred; he acknowledges a misappropriation to his own use of $20,000, and admits that he is responsible for whatever deficiency existed at the date of his resignation. But his explanations are not entirely satisfactory, inasmuch as they leave unaccounted for the misappropriation or loss of some $12,000 of the aggregate amount before mentioned. His suggestion that there may still be corrections to make which will reduce the amount of defalcation to a large extent is not supported by any evidence before the committee, while there is reason to accept the statement from the Treasury Department and the exhibit by Mr. Bowen, herewith reported, as substantially accurate.

Mr. Wagner was selected by the Secretary, as a man entirely competent and reliable, to perform the duties of financial clerk. While discharging those duties he was esteemed by members of the Senate and by others with whom he transacted business as a very fit man for the place he held. He had been for a long time cashier of a bank at York, Pennsylvania, and his selection by the Secretary was apparently judicious.

The trust reposed by the Secretary in his financial clerk would seem, therefore, to have been reasonable and within the bounds of ordinary prudence. There is no evidence that he suspected his clerk of misconduct prior to December, 1867, or that circumstances were brought to his knowledge which should have induced distrust. His absence in Europe during the summer of 1867, and his engrossing employments when at home, perhaps prevented that careful supervision of his subordinates which under other circumstances would have been possible. The committee think, however, that he should have insisted upon and secured a more prompt settlement by his subordinates of his accounts at the Treasury Department. It is no doubt true that in such cases delays of settlement give occasion to delinquency and tend to produce it, and the explanations given of the unsettled state of the accounts toward the close of 1867, though entitled to due consideration, do not constitute a complete excuse. There had been an unusual accumulation of accounts, mainly caused by several adjourned sessions of Congress, many bills of outlay were unapproved or unadjusted by the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and the financial clerk was probably overworked. But, notwithstanding these facts, the committee cannot think that unsettled items of disbursement should have accumulated to the extent shown by a communication from Mr. Taylor, Comptroller of the Treasury, to the Secretary of the Senate, under date of October 30, 1867, to be found in the evidence herewith reported.

Mr. Wagner repeats to the committee under oath the statement made by him when the deficiency was discovered in December. It is in brief that, being indebted to a Mr. Blagden in the sum of $20,000, and being called upon suddenly for payment, he took that sum from the contingent fund of the Senate (in the safe under his charge) and applied it upon the debt. He explains his conduct in a manner quite usual with defaulters who misuse public or trust funds, to wit, that the demand upon him was unexpected; that he was not prepared to meet it; that the public moneys under his control were conveniently at hand, and that he expected to replace the amount abstracted before its absence from the safe would be discovered.

Beyond this statement of Mr. Wagner as to his misappropriation of the $20,000 the committee are unable to ascertain what became of the money covered by or included in the deficit, unless the small items of advances and rejected or suspended items before referred to should be taken into account. As these would probably amount to only about $3,000, there remains $12,000 wholly unaccounted for. There is no evidence which points to any one except to the financial clerk as responsible for its loss or abstraction. He disavows all knowledge as to this part of the deficiency, though not his responsibility therefor. But this question incurs the loss to the Secretary rather than to the Government. The Secretary incurs the loss and must bear it without remedy, unless he shall be reimbursed by the transfers of property made to him by his subordinate. In any event there can be no loss to the Treasury.

Upon the whole case, the committee recommend that the relief prayed for be granted.

The creation of the office of financial clerk indicated the expectation of the Senate that the funds of the Senate should be received and disbursed by him.

The other duties of the Secretary were enough to employ his whole time, and rendered it impossible for him to receive or disburse these moneys himself or to supervise his financial clerk in these functions.

Mr. Forney was fully justified by the character and experience of the financial clerk in appointing him and in confiding in him. It was wise and prudent to give him the sole charge of the safe and not to allow any other person to go to it.

While the Committee to Audit the Contingent Funds think the accounts should have been settled more frequently with the Treasury, and that unsettled items of disbursement should not have been allowed to accumulate as they did, yet it does not appear that greater strictness in this respect would have prevented this default.

We think the Secretary might and should have established a system of checks by books kept by a separate officer and by frequent personal examination of the clerk's balances. But Mr. Forney found no such system in existence when he came into office. He did all that ordinary prudence had been considered to demand from the beginning of the Government.

We therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has been read?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I think I shall not object, but I hope the practice will not obtain of passing bills without examination by committees of this House. This bill has not been examined at all by any committee of this House, and I think it is a bad practice to pass bills without such examination.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a matter, as I said before, between the Senate and one of its officers. Being peculiarly a Senate matter, I did not wish to encounter the delay which would result from a reference of this bill to the Committee on Claims of this House. The parties interested are really in need of the money. I am informed that the Senate Committee on Claims reported this bill unanimously, and it was unanimously passed by the Senate.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOEHM BROTHERS, OF NEW YORK.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I desire to ask consent that the Committee on Ways and Means be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2201) to refund a duplicate tax to Boehm Brothers, of New York, and that the claim be referred to the Court of Claims. I therefore submit the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the claim of Boehm Brothers, of New York, for $10,234.08, being the amount of a duplicate tax alleged to have been paid by said Boehm Brothers upon three hundred and fifty barrels of whisky and fifty barrels of alcohol, be referred to the Court of Claims to be heard and determined.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SEPTEMIA RANDOLPH MEIKLEHAM.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6304) granting a pension to the sole surviving grandchild of the author of the Declaration of Independence, and that it be considered in the House at this time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to place the name of Septemia Randolph Meikleham, widow of David S. Meikleham, deceased, and the only surviving grandchild of Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, on the pension-roll, and pay to her a pension, during her natural life, at the rate of $5,000 a year, from and after the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has just been read?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, Mr. NEAL, and others, objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

LABORERS IN HOUSE FOLDING-ROOM.

Mr. URNER. I am directed by the Committee on Accounts to report a substitute for a resolution which was referred to that committee.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution of the House of March 30, 1882, providing for the appointment of twelve additional laborers in the House folding-room for the purpose of folding speeches, be so amended as to further extend the period of their employment of sixty days; and that the six men employed in the House post-office during the session only be continued for the same period.

Mr. CONVERSE. Is this a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. It is reported from the Committee on Accounts and relates to the employes of the House.

Mr. URNER. Who are to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. CONVERSE. Has the resolution been referred to that committee?

The SPEAKER. It has been referred.

Mr. CONVERSE. I understand that this resolution originates with the committee.

The SPEAKER. It is a substitute for a resolution referred to that committee.

Mr. URNER. The original resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts on motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. THOMPSON.]

Mr. CONVERSE. Is there a report? If so I would like to have it read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. P. B. THOMPSON—

"That the resolution of the House of March 30, 1882, providing for the appointment of twelve additional laborers in the House folding-room for the purpose of folding speeches be so amended as to extend the period of their employment for sixty days?"— respectfully report that they have considered the same and report the following substitute and ask that it do now pass:

Resolved, That the resolution of the House of March 30, 1882, providing for the appointment of twelve additional laborers in the House folding-room for the purpose of folding speeches be so amended as to further extend the period of their employment for sixty days; and that the six men employed in the House post-office during the session only be continued for the same period."

Mr. CONVERSE. There is no reason set out in that report why the employment of these men should be extended for sixty days.

Mr. URNER. I will explain the reasons which have been submitted to the Committee on Accounts by the Doorkeeper of the House for the adoption of this resolution. The original resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts on motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. THOMPSON.] The number of speeches that have gone through the folding-room during this session I am informed is unprecedented, more than double the number in any previous session. There are now about 300,000 speeches in the folding-room, and they are coming in at the rate of 20,000 a day.

It is utterly impossible for the present force to complete the folding of these speeches during the present session; and according to computation it will be necessary that their services be retained for sixty days. In order to make their work effective it is necessary that these additional men in the post-office be retained in order to send out the speeches.

Mr. CONVERSE. I wish to make one suggestion. Congress is about to adjourn; and the retention of these employes for sixty days is nothing more nor less than employing so many men for the Repub-hican Congressional committee to run their campaign. No other reason for the resolution can be offered. I object to its adoption.

Mr. URNER. In reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] I wish to say, in the first place, that this resolution was offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. THOMPSON,] who is the secretary of the Democratic Congressional campaign committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is it on that account that you propose to continue this force?

Mr. URNER. I am informed that the present Doorkeeper has made no discrimination in sending out speeches, but has sent them without partiality upon the order of Democrats as well as Republicans. These speeches have been paid for by members. They are entitled to have them sent out according to custom. It is utterly impossible for the Doorkeeper with the present force to do this during the present session; and it is absolutely necessary for the Government to supply him with the means of doing so, the work being for the benefit of Democrats as well as Republicans. One gentleman, a Democrat, has had, as I am informed, 400,000 speeches folded. Some others have had 100,000.

Mr. CONVERSE. Those gentlemen have paid for the folding of their own speeches, and I think that the 2 per cent. which gentlemen on the other side have collected from their employés ought to be enough to pay for sending out their own speeches.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the gentleman know whether the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has been ordered to the number of 200,000?

Mr. URNER. I do not know as to any particular speech. I have a communication from the Doorkeeper on the subject. If the folding of any speeches has been paid for by individual members, it was simply because they wanted to distribute them more rapidly than the folding force could get them ready. But such individual folding has been but little. In fact, the Democrats have availed themselves of the services of the folders in the employ of the House to a greater extent than the Republicans. These speeches, I repeat, are sent out without regard to party. There is no party in this resolution. I will add that this is a unanimous report.

The question being on the adoption of the resolution reported as a substitute by Mr. URNER,

Mr. CONVERSE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 70, nays 57, not voting 162; as follows:

YEAS—70.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey, with Mr. HERBERT.

Mr. HEILMAN with Mr. BLAND.

Mr. LINDSEY with Mr. LADD.

Mr. HUMPHREY with Mr. BRAGG.

Mr. HALL with Mr. WISE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HUBBS with Mr. SHACKELFORD.

Mr. BARR with Mr. DAVIDSON.

Mr. FARWELL, of Illinois, with Mr. MULDRON.

Mr. ORTH with Mr. SPARKS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, with Mr. COOK.

Mr. CORNELL with Mr. DOWD.

Mr. SCRANTON with Mr. BEACH.

Mr. LACEY with Mr. BENJAMIN WOOD.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. COBB.

Mr. CASWELL with Mr. MOULTON.

Mr. CHACE with Mr. SCOVILLE.

Mr. MOORE with Mr. MATSON.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, with Mr. MORSE.

Mr. PETTIBONE with Mr. ATHERTON.

Mr. HOUK with Mr. DUGROW.

Mr. NEAL with Mr. GEDDES.

Mr. MORRISON with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. CUTTS with Mr. KENNA.

Mr. DWIGHT with Mr. NOLAN.

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. CURTIN.

Mr. DARRALL with Mr. BLOUNT.

Mr. KNOTT with Mr. WHITE.

Mr. STONE with Mr. HEWITT of Alabama.

Mr. MASON with Mr. MOREY.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, with Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina.

Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. SPEER.

Mr. NORCROSS with Mr. WILLIAMS of Alabama.

Mr. PHISTER with Mr. HAMMOND of New York.

Mr. SKINNER with Mr. FLOWER.

Mr. URNER with Mr. McLANE.

Mr. RANNEY with Mr. KING.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, with Mr. WHITTHORNE.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, with Mr. HEWITT, of New York.

Mr. DUNN with Mr. LORD.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, with Mr. MANNING.

Mr. JACOBS with Mr. HARDENBERGH.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. BUCKNER.

Mr. SPAULDING with Mr. JONES of Arkansas.

Mr. RYAN with Mr. LE FEVRE.

Mr. WARD with Mr. AIKEN.

Mr. CROWLEY with Mr. HAMMOND of Georgia.

Mr. MILES with Mr. SINGLETON of Illinois.

Mr. O'NEILL with Mr. ERMENTROUT.

Mr. BAYNE. I was temporarily absent, and I now ask, by unanimous consent, to record my vote in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. That request under the rules cannot be submitted to the House.

Mr. KNOTT. I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. WHITE.] If he were present, I would vote "no."

On motion of Mr. URNER, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The yeas are 70, nays 57.

Mr. CONVERSE. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the motion to adjourn in order? If so, I submit that motion.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I hope that will not be done, as we will have a conference report here in a short time.

Mr. HOLMAN. If there is a possibility of having a conference report I withdraw the motion.

Mr. ROBESON. I have just come from the other end of the Capitol, and they expect to get through with the sundry civil appropriation bill in about an hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then let us take a recess for an hour.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask by unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. The House is dividing.

Mr. WILSON. Can I submit a report from a committee?

Mr. HOLMAN. Nothing is in order while the House is dividing. I demand the regular order.

Mr. URNER. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The motion to take a recess pending a division when no quorum is developed is not in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the gentleman from Maryland withdraw his resolution.

Mr. URNER. Is it in order to move that there be a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. URNER. Then I make that motion.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope my friend will withdraw that, for the pairs will make a quorum if they vote.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope some necessary action will be agreed to on the part of members, otherwise the House may be led into an awkward situation. We ought not to get into any snarl that we cannot get out of. There remains some necessary business that must be done; we must get through with the appropriation bills, and that cannot be done if we are left without a quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the situation of the sundry civil bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. It will be here in an hour.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us take a recess for an hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask by unanimous consent that the House take a recess for one hour.

Mr. MCCOOK. I object.

Mr. HASKELL. I will move that there be a call of the House, hoping it will be voted down, and then we can take the vote over on the adoption of the resolution when there will be a quorum by gentlemen who are at present paired casting their votes. The House divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 56.

So the motion that there be a call of the House was disagreed to.

Mr. PEELLE. I want to take a bill from the House Calendar by unanimous consent. [Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. Nothing is in order while the House is dividing. The question again recurred on the adoption of the resolution reported by Mr. URNER.

The question was again taken; and there were—ayes 67, noes 62, not voting 160; as follows:

YEAS—67.

On motion of Mr. URNER, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess for an hour. We may as well wait an hour for the action of the Senate on the appropriation bill rather than adjourn.

Mr. WELLBORN. I think that is proper.

Mr. URNER. Before that, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that resolution for the present, and will offer it again on Monday.

There was no objection, and the resolution was accordingly withdrawn.

WILBUR F. KELLOGG.

Mr. URNER. I am directed by the Committee on Accounts to report back the following resolution with a favorable recommendation.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Wilbur F. Kellogg the difference between his salary at $720 and that of a messenger at $1,000 per annum from the 6th of January to the 13th of June, 1882, the sum of $135.33.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. JOYCE, report that they have considered the same, and ask that it do now pass.

Mr. ELLIS. That is a very satisfactory report. [Laughter.]

Mr. URNER. If any gentleman desires any explanation of the subject, I will give all the information the committee had, and on which they based their action.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. URNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. URNER. I am also instructed by the Committee on Accounts to report back two resolutions which have been referred to that committee and ask that the Committee on Accounts be discharged from their consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Claims. The first of these resolutions is one directing the committee to inquire how much was due a certain employé, who was borne on the rolls of the House on the 1st day of July, 1879. That being prior to the present Congress, the Committee on Accounts, believing that they had no right to appropriate the contingent fund to any claims originating prior to the present Congress, ask to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims. They find, however, the amount due to be $60.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 181) for the relief of John Wallace.

Mr. URNER. I move that the Committee on Accounts be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. URNER. There is also another resolution, to pay James Gauler, expert in handwriting, for certain services, which I am also directed to report back and move that the Committee on Accounts be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent now to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 241) for the relief of John T. Hennaman for immediate consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. While I do not wish to object to particular cases, I must insist that the roll-call just taken disclosed the fact that no quorum was present in the House for the transaction of any business.

Mr. TALBOTT. Let me say to the gentleman that this bill has been unanimously reported from the committee; a similar bill passed the House of Representatives of the Forty-sixth Congress. It is simply to pay back a tax on tobacco which was assessed and collected twice, and ought to be refunded.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no doubt as to the merits of the case to which the gentleman refers, and that it should be passed under proper circumstances; but there is no quorum present, as shown by the last vote.

Mr. TALBOTT. This is unanimously reported from the committee, and has already passed the Senate. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move that the House take a recess for one hour.

Mr. WILSON. Let me make a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House take a recess for one hour.

Mr. ELLIS. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ELLIS. The gentleman from Maryland was recognized by the Chair. Now, I wish to ask if he can be taken off the floor by the motion of the gentleman from Indiana without his consent?

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the House take a recess is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. ELLIS. But he had not the floor to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. He had the floor for the purpose of objecting to the unanimous consent asked by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. ELLIS. But he did not object. He simply made a motion for a recess.

The SPEAKER. The motion for the recess is in the nature of an objection. The request of the gentleman from Maryland was one requiring unanimous consent. The motion for a recess is in the nature of a demand for the regular order.

Mr. ELLIS. But he did not call the regular order. He simply made a motion for a recess. Now my point of order is that he did not have the floor for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks otherwise. Pending the submission of a proposition for unanimous consent the motion to adjourn or take a recess is in order. The gentleman from Maryland had the floor, not for the purpose of holding it to make a speech, but simply to ask unanimous consent to take up a bill from the table. The right of the gentleman from Indiana to make the motion he did is unquestionable under the rules.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted, as follows:

To Mr. HASELTINE indefinitely.

To Mr. PHELPS for one week from Monday next, on account of sickness in his family.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave to print remarks in the RECORD on subjects local to his State was granted to Mr. CASSIDY. [See Appendix.]

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. ATKINS, the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1587) for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others, and it was recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

CHILI-PERUVIAN INVESTIGATION.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILSON. Some months ago a resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs instructing them to inquire into the Chili-Peruvian matter. A sub-committee was raised to investigate the legal power of the House to require answers to certain questions. The sub-committee were not able to get together, and I was directed by the chairman of the committee to ask to have printed the views on the legal question, which I have prepared to go with the report of the committee. The committee was authorized to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there will be no objection to the gentleman's request.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

TREATY OF 1819 BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND SPAIN.

Mr. WILSON also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1969) to provide for the complete execution of the ninth article of the treaty of 1819 between the United States and Spain; which was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSON also, from the same committee, reported a resolution as a substitute for said bill; which was referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] that the House take a recess for one hour.

The question being taken; there were—ayes 40, noes 30.

Mr. BAYNE and Mr. ELLIS. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers; and appoints the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BAYNE, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 34, noes 20.

Mr. UPSON. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Pennsylvania will resume their places as tellers.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Would not a motion to adjourn be in order? If it be in order, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ROBESON. That motion is not in order. We are waiting for a conference report.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us receive the sundry civil bill first.

Mr. PEELLE. I ask unanimous consent that we take a recess for one-half hour.

Mr. NEAL. I object.

The tellers resumed the count, and reported—ayes 41, noes 35.

Mr. ROBESON. Is it in order to ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess until five o'clock to await the report of the committee of conference on the sundry civil bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess until five o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Before the recess is taken the Chair will submit one or two personal requests.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. BRUMM, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. TYLER to withdraw from the files papers in the case of Frank A. Page, there being no adverse report thereon.

C. E. CARMON.

Mr. PEELLE. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads the petition for the relief of C. E. Carmon, postmaster at Lyons, Ohio, and to move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be laid upon the table. This is reported back because it is covered by the provisions of the general bill for the payment of loss of postage-stamps by burglary and fire.

There being no objection, the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with the order of the House, made by unanimous consent, the House is in recess until five o'clock p. m.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at five o'clock, p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, informed the House that he had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 2402) to quiet title to certain land in Washington, District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. No. 5222) to restore the Fort Benton military reservation to the public domain, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 288) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution to provide temporarily for expenditures of the Government; and

An act (H. R. No. 720) to fix the compensation of the master armorer at the national armory in Springfield, Massachusetts.

LITTLE SISTERS OF THE POOR, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. NEAL. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 1612, to provide for the closing of an alley in square 751 in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, and for the relief of the Little Sisters of the Poor, be now taken from the Speaker's table and considered at this time. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and instructed, on the petition of all the owners of property abutting on that part of the fifteen-foot-wide alley in square 751 in the city of Washington, running north and south, between North H street and a wider alley in the center of said square, to declare said part of said fifteen-foot-wide alley closed: Provided, That the owners of the land abutting on that portion of said alley to be closed in said square shall, as condition precedent to such action on the part of the commissioners, file in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia a plat, to be approved by the commissioners, dedicating to the use of the public, as a public alley, an area of ground equal to the area of the alley-way declared to be closed, or sufficient for the purpose of connecting said alley in the center of the square with East Second street.

Sec. 2. That the owners of the property abutting on the portion of said alley which may be closed as aforesaid shall be held to have acquired all the right and title of the District of Columbia or the city of Washington in and to the portion of the alley which may be closed under the provisions of the first section of this act, and which may be included within the extension of their several bounds to the lines of the new alley.

Sec. 3. That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to release lots 3 and 4 in square 751, owned and occupied by the Little Sisters of the Poor, from the payment of the special taxes heretofore levied against the same and now remaining unpaid.

Mr. NEAL. I move to strike out section 3 of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill as amended was then ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NEAL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN M. DORSEY AND WILLIAM F. SHEPARD.

Mr. CASSIDY. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 214, for the relief of John M. Dorsey and William F. Shepard, be taken from the Speaker's table and passed at this time. It is a bill to pay the claim of citizens of my State, which claim I know to be as honest as the sun, as are also the claimants. A similar bill has passed the House three times and passed the Senate five times, but has never passed both Houses of the same Congress.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $9,021.33 to John M. Dorsey, and the sum of $3,746.66 to William F. Shepard, in full settlement for beef and supplies furnished certain volunteer troops by said Dorsey, Shepard, and one S. B. Wallace, while said troops were engaged in quelling the Indian disturbances in the Territory of Utah, now the State of Nevada, in the year 1860.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve my right to object to that bill until I can inquire if it has been reported upon by a committee of this House.

Mr. CASSIDY. It has been reported favorably three times in this House, and it has passed the Senate five times.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has it been reported during this session?

Mr. CASSIDY. It has been reported during this session, and I now have the report in my hand.

Mr. CANNON. What committee does it come from?

Mr. CASSIDY. From the Committee on Claims, and the House bill to the same effect is now on the Calendar.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to the reading of the report, but with a mere handful of members here—

Mr. CASSIDY. It is impossible for me to get up the bill in a full House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Besides all that there is a large Calendar.

Mr. CASSIDY. I have not asked many favors by this House, and I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will have to insist upon the regular order.

PUBLIC LANDS IN RAILROAD LIMITS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of business under the POUND rule. The pending business at the close of the hour yesterday is the bill (H. R. No. 3699) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant additional rights to homestead settlers on public lands in railroad limits," approved March 3, 1879; which was called up by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STRAIT] by instructions of the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill and the report were read on a former occasion and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. DUNNELL. My colleague [Mr. STRAIT] is absent from the Hall at this time. I would like to hear the report read. It is a unanimous report of the Committee on the Public Lands, and I do not think the bill can well be objected to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this the regular order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. CONVERSE. Objections have not yet been called for.

The SPEAKER. Not yet.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report was read.

Mr. DUNNELL. The object of this bill is simply to provide that entries may be made under the general law of even-numbered sections as now of odd sections of any quarter-section or section of land that may not have been entered under the homestead or pre-emption law within the limits of railroad grants. It is certainly in the interest of settlers. It simply extends the operations of the law to sections granted to railroads which they have not got hold of. It requires a year's settlement and cultivation. The bill was originally introduced into the House by myself, and it has been in the charge of my colleague, [Mr. STRAIT], a member of the Committee on Public Lands. I am certain it has merit and ought to pass this House, and I hope there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. CONVERSE. I would like to state that this bill involves at least 6,000,000 acres of land.

The SPEAKER. Four members rising to object, the bill is not before the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LYNCH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

HELEN M. SCHOLEFIELD.

The SPEAKER called the list of committees under the POUND rule, and when the Committee on Claims was called,

Mr. RAY said: I understand that the gentlemen who the other day objected to the consideration of Senate bill No. 249, to pay a small sum of money to the widow of Paymaster Scholefield, do not now persist in their objections. A similar bill has been favorably reported by the Committee on Claims of the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be paid, out of any moneys in the Treasury appropriated or hereafter to be appropriated to the payment of the Army, to Helen M. Scholefield, administratrix of the estate of C. M. Scholefield, deceased, late an additional paymaster in the Army, the sum of $544.32, being the amount due to the said paymaster on the final settlement of his accounts, after deducting from the amount charged to him the sum of $10,000 which stands to the debit of the said paymaster on the authority of an alleged voucher for that amount presented by Major J. Ledyard Hodge, late paymaster, and bearing date August 10, 1864, the validity of which voucher the Government has failed to establish in a suit brought and finally determined in the United States district court at Utica, New York, in April, 1876, for the settlement of the accounts of the said Major C. M. Scholefield, as such additional paymaster, with the Government; and upon the payment of the said sum of $544.32, as herein provided, the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized to balance the accounts of the said Major C. M. Scholefield, as paymaster, with the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has been read?

Mr. RANDALL. I objected to that bill on a former occasion, since which time I have given it a very thorough investigation, and I find that it does not, as I then apprehended, release the sureties from any obligation to the Government, and therefore I do not now object.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] hold that the parties do not owe the Government $10,000, as claimed by the Government?

Mr. RANDALL. No; I want the Government to proceed against the sureties. I do not see that this bill interferes with the power of the Government in that respect.

Mr. RAY. Not at all.

Mr. McMILLIN. Whom does the bill seek to release?

Mr. RAY. No one.

Mr. RANDALL. It merely provides for the payment of a balance to the widow.

Mr. McMILLIN. If there is anything due the Government, then the Government does not owe these parties anything.

Mr. PRESCOTT. The facts are that J. Ledyard Hodge reported a voucher for $10,000 which he claimed had been executed by Major Scholefield, and which was charged against his accounts. If this voucher be charged against the account it leaves a balance of $9,500 due the Government. Subsequently the Government, for the purpose of determining this matter, sued the sureties on the bond of this paymaster upon this voucher, claiming the balance of $9,500. This suit was tried in a United States court before a judge and a jury, and a verdict was rendered in favor of the defendant on the ground that the voucher was a forgery. The Government applied for a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence and also on the ground that evidence had been improperly admitted on behalf of the defense. On this application the court granted a new trial, which was had two years subsequently, in 1876, the attorney acting at that time being Mr. CROWLEY, now a member of this House from New York, and who made the report in this case. On this second trial it was again found that the voucher was a forgery, thus leaving due this widow upon the books of the Treasury $543.32.

Mr. RAY. Just the amount that Scholefield reported when he went out of office. He died without having any knowledge of this false voucher.

The question being taken on the consideration of the bill, there was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PRESCOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendment of the Senate to the resolution of the House to print 300,000 copies of the annual Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1881.

TITLE TO POTOMAC FLATS.

The Committee on the District of Columbia being called, Mr. NEAL. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to call up and have put on its passage, with certain amendments, House bill No. 5965 to provide for the quieting of the title of the United States in certain lands therein described, and for the reclamation of the marshes in the Potomac River.

The bill, with the proposed amendments, was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 5965) to provide for the quieting of the title of the United States in certain lands therein described.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-

General of the United States to bring such actions and institute such proceedings in the supreme court of the District of Columbia as may be necessary for the purpose of quieting the title of the United States in and to lands bordering upon the Potomac River lying between Easy's Point and the property of the United States known as the Arsenal grounds, and also of so much of the bed of said river lying between said points as any person or party may have pretended or attempted to purchase, locate, or otherwise obtain possession of or acquire ownership in.

SEC. 2. That all writs issued in said actions shall be addressed to and served by the marshal of the District of Columbia, or of the State or Territory, or one of his legally appointed deputies, in which any one of said defendants may have a legal residence or may be found.

SEC. 3. That said actions shall be tried at the next term of said court held after the commencement of the same, unless they shall be continued upon the motion of one of said parties, who shall satisfy the court that, after exercising due diligence, for reasons beyond his control, he has not been able to prepare for trial, when the same may, in the discretion of the court, be continued until the succeeding term of said court; but no further continuance shall be granted on the application of said party. For the purpose of said trial said action shall be advanced upon the docket of said court ahead of all other civil business. Upon hearing, such judgments, orders, and decrees shall be made as may be just and equitable. Appeals may be taken by either party as are now allowed in similar actions, but all actions so appealed shall be heard and disposed of without unnecessary delay by said appellate court, and shall, on motion of said Attorney-General, be advanced upon the docket of said court.

Mr. NEAL. I will state for the information of the House that this bill simply authorizes the Attorney-General in his discretion to bring suits for the purpose of quieting the title of the United States to that portion of the bed of the Potomac River which is popularly known as the "flats," an appropriation of $400,000 having been made for the reclamation of the same. I had a consultation with the Attorney-General a day or two ago, and he believes it important that this bill should become a law.

The question being taken on the consideration of the bill, there was no objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] tells us that the bill is for the purpose of quieting the title of the United States to what are known as the Potomac flats. We have made an appropriation of $400,000 for their reclamation. Hence I think that the amendment I now propose is eminently proper. It is to add the following:

Provided, That none of the money appropriated for the improvement or reclamation of the Potomac flats or river front shall be expended till these suits are determined.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is right.

Mr. NEAL. I trust that the amendment will not be adopted. The appropriation of $400,000 is made in the river and harbor bill, which contains an express provision that the Attorney-General shall examine into these titles. This bill is an independent measure for the purpose of quieting the title not only with reference to that appropriation but for all future time. I do not wish to have the bill embarrassed by any amendment of this kind.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not think the amendment will embarrass the bill. It is eminently proper that the money we have appropriated should not be expended till we know to whom the land belongs. The appropriation was passed with the understanding that this was Government property.

Mr. NEAL. I want to inquire whether the amendment is in order?

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it in order when proceeding under the present rule to offer an amendment to a bill considered by consent?

Mr. NEAL. Another point of order I want to make is that the amendment is not germane to the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to inquire whether when proceeding under the Pound rule it is in order to consider any proposition by way of amendment?

The SPEAKER. An amendment would be in order if germane after a bill has been taken up for consideration under the Pound rule. The first bill presented to the House under this rule was a bill to which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] moved an amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. It seems to me that was not the intention of the rule.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. Whenever the House is through with whatever business it may wish to transact I desire that a recess be taken till eight o'clock this evening, at which time the conferees on the sundry civil appropriation bill will doubtless be ready to report.

Mr. KASSON. I hope the gentleman from New York will not bring us here unless he is certain the conference report will be ready.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that the House take a recess with the understanding business shall be confined to the reception of conference reports and messages from the President and Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not care—

Mr. RANDALL. I will state that my object is the convenience of members. There are some gentlemen who do not want to come here to-night. I will come here myself.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think we had all better come here to-night, for it is not impossible there may be a disagreement between the two Houses on the sundry civil bill. I do not know we shall agree, and all members ought to be present.

Mr. RANDALL. It is necessary of course we should come here to-night and pass the bill, as it needs to be enrolled preparatory to receiving the signature of the President.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should like to know whether there is any probability of our adjourning on Monday next?

Mr. HISCOCK. Whether we adjourn on Monday next or not, it is absolutely necessary this bill should be signed Monday next, and therefore it is necessary the bill should be passed here and engrossed and go to the President for his signature.

Mr. RANDALL. Has the time been extended until Monday?

Mr. HISCOCK. No; only till to-night.

Mr. COX, of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. HISCOCK. What is it?

Mr. COX, of New York. A great many members desire to go away, and I would like to inquire of my colleague whether he thinks the tax discussion which has sprung up in the Senate is likely to prolong the session? [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman from New York is entirely too innocent. [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I have suggested we take a recess until eight o'clock; but it may be possible to bring in the report before that time, and if gentlemen prefer we may take a recess until seven o'clock this evening.

A MEMBER. What is the necessity for taking a recess until eight o'clock?

Mr. HISCOCK. I have already stated to the gentleman why this bill should be passed and engrossed and sent to the President for his signature before Monday morning.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish to have his motion for a recess at once put to the House?

Mr. HISCOCK. I protest against any suggestion in favor of an adjournment of the House until the sundry civil appropriation bill has been passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] to amend the pending bill quieting the title to the Potomac flats.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that when the House concludes to take a recess it be until eight o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. McMILLIN.]

Mr. NEAL. I have made the point of order on that amendment that it was not germane to the bill, and therefore not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move the House take a recess from fifteen minutes before six until eight o'clock this evening.

Mr. NEAL. Let us put this bill through first.

Mr. ANDERSON. I suggest that the gentleman move to take a recess now.

The SPEAKER. The House is dividing on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. McMILLIN.]

The House divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 21.

Mr. BERRY. No quorum has voted.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until eight o'clock this evening.

Mr. SPRINGER. No quorum has voted.

Mr. WILSON. Before that is done I wish to say a word.

Mr. ROBESON. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the point there is no quorum is made.

Mr. ROBESON's motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. No. 2099) for the relief of the executors of John W. Foreney; and

A bill (S. No. 2092) for the relief of Major W. R. King.

AMERICAN CITIZENS IMPRISONED ABROAD.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State, submitted in compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 28th of June calling for additional information respecting the case of American citizens under arrest in Ireland.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 5, 1882.

And then (at five o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House at eight o'clock p. m. resumed its session.

REVENUE-MARINE BILL.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent at this time for the consideration of a resolution fixing a day next session for the consideration of the revenue-marine bill.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. No. 3983) to promote the efficiency of the revenue-marine service, now on the House Calendar with amendments thereto reported from the Committee on Commerce, be made the special order for Wednesday, December 6, 1882, after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, not to interfere with general appropriation bills or revenue bills.

Mr. McMILLIN. Who has this in charge?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I have submitted the resolution.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It is to reorganize the revenue-marine service; to make it more efficient, and to provide for the retirement of officers under certain conditions.

Mr. ATKINS. What time does the resolution fix?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. December 6 next.

Mr. ATKINS. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations present, but I would suggest at all events that no special order should be fixed for consideration of the bill unless it be made subject to appropriation bills.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It is subject to appropriation bills and also to revenue bills.

Mr. McMILLIN. Reserving the right to object, I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Ohio. Does this provide for pensioning those engaged in the revenue-marine service, or for the retirement of the officers?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It provides for the retirement of officers after a service of forty years with a portion of their pay.

Mr. McMILLIN. I thought so.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. But I beg the gentleman to understand that the bill will be subject to amendment when it comes up for consideration, and if it is wrong in any of its provisions it will be within the power of the House to amend it in any respect. I only ask that a day be fixed for its consideration by the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think it will be time enough to set a day for its consideration when the House meets in its next session, and we will then know better what action to take in that regard. This is simply in the direction of pensioning those who are not in the military service—

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It does not provide for pensioning them.

Mr. McMILLIN. But it is in the direction of pensioning them, and I shall never consent to it in any form. I certainly never will until the Mexican soldiers have justice done to them; and shall therefore have to object.

Mr. BERRY. I object to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the resolution is not before the House for consideration.

NOAH HINCKLEY.

Mr. PRESCOTT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6892) for the relief of Noah Hinckley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CONDEMNED CANNON, SALEM, OHIO.

Mr. McKINLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6893) donating four condemned cast-iron cannon and sixteen cannon-balls to Trescott Post No. 10, Grand Army of the Republic, at Salem, Ohio, for monumental purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF FROM CHARGES OF DESERTION.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire at this time to submit a privileged report. I present the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill to relieve certain soldiers from the charge of desertion.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 5224) to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 8.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 7 with an amendment as follows: Insert "six" instead of "twelve," so that it will read: "six months."

W. H. CALKINS,

BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,

R. W. TOWNSHEND,

Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN A. LOGAN,

F. M. COCKRELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to call the attention of the House to one item embodied in this report, in order to see whether we really accomplished what we intended to accomplish by the bill. This was intended to relieve soldiers who were simply technical deserters from the charge of desertion and to secure the issuance to them or their legal representatives whatever pay may have been withheld from them by reason of the charge of desertion.

Mr. HOUSE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio what he means by "technical desertion?"

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I mean where a party is simply absent without leave, but reported as a deserter. For instance, this condition of things has given rise to numerous bills for the relief of soldiers from the charge of desertion who really had no intention of deserting.

Mr. HOUSE. May not a man be a deserter who is absent from his command without leave?

Mr. CALKINS. A man may be absent without leave and yet not a deserter.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will give the gentleman an instance to show what I mean. For instance, a regiment is ordered, we will say, to Louisville to be mustered out. It goes down the Ohio, and at Cincinnati, if you please, there are a large number of soldiers who meet members of their families—their wives, mothers, or children—there, and who stop off, not with the intention of deserting from their command, but with the expectation of overtaking and rejoining the regiment at Louisville, to be mustered out with it. Now, this is after the war, remember. It may happen when they get to Louisville—and I speak now of a case in point—the regiment is ordered on to Little Rock. These men go on next morning, but are unable to overtake their regiment. The regiment is subsequently ordered back and is mustered out before they are able to reach their command. The result is they are returned as deserters, when they never thought of deserting. But the war being over they are found in this unfortunate situation.

Mr. REAGAN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. Is the bill not so framed as to cover real deserters as well as those who have been called technical deserters?

Mr. CALKINS. That is the only difficulty—whether it does not cover too much.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. After providing for all those cases this language is used, and I submit to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] whether it does not undo all the first clauses in the bill attempt to accomplish. After reciting that the Secretary of War may grant an honorable discharge in certain cases, that he may hear and determine, &c., it adds this provision:

And provided further, That no soldier, nor the heirs nor legal representatives of any soldier, who served in the Army a period of less than six months, or who intentionally deserted, shall be entitled to the benefits of the provisions of this act.

Now, the use of the words "intentionally deserted" where the soldier was a technical deserter, in my judgment, may prevent him from availing himself of the provisions of this act.

Mr. HOUSE. Who is to settle the question whether the soldier intentionally deserted?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The Secretary of War. But according to the language of this proviso if the soldier, although merely a technical deserter, did what he did "intentionally"—the qualifying word used here—he could not have the relief which this bill is drawn to afford. I fear that is the case, although I hope it is not.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 2002) to extend the fees of certain officers over the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

The bill (H. R. No. 6715) to correct an error in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

The bill (H. R. No. 6845) to amend the first subdivision of section 2568 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, title 34, "collection of duties on imports."

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) for the printing of additional copies of House Executive Document No. 47 and subsequent land laws, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

RELIEF FROM CHARGES OF DESERTION.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to say only a word in reference to this matter. The bill provides three classes of soldiers shall be relieved from the charge of desertion. The first class consists of those who served their time out and were not granted final and honorable discharges, because not present with their regiment at the time the regiment was mustered out.

Mr. HOUSE. Does the bill apply to those only who served their time out?

Mr. CALKINS. No, sir. I am stating the three classes who are to benefit by the provisions of the act. The second class consists of those who served until the 22d day of May, 1865, the day of the grand general reunion in Washington. The third class consists of those who were wounded or were suffering from disease and were in hospital when the regiment was mustered out of the service. Then the bill says, to make it doubly sure who are intended, that the Secretary of War shall not grant this relief to those who were intentional deserters. I think, disagreeing with my friend from Ohio, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH,] the relief is ample, and that there can be no difficulty about the meaning of the act.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to say to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] that the bill has been carefully prepared, both in the House and in the Senate, with a view to avoid allowing any actual or intentional deserter to receive an honorable discharge. The bill was passed by the House unanimously, I think, at the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] or it may have been the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. CALKINS,] I am not certain which; at all events it passed the House unanimously.

The Senate has amended the bill in only two material particulars. The bill as it passed the House provided that those who had served out their term of enlistment, or had continued in service until the 1st day of May, 1865, should it appear that they did not intentionally desert the service, should have an honorable discharge. The Senate has extended that time until the 27th of May, and restricted the number to be benefited by this bill.

The House provided that those who had served for not less than three months should receive the benefits of this bill. The Senate extended that term to twelve months. The committee of conference has agreed to the term of six months. The House conferees gave up three months, and the Senate conferees gave up six months; so that we practically gained three months on the Senate. I think the bill has been carefully guarded with a view of not allowing any actual or intentional deserter to receive an honorable discharge.

Mr. RYAN. I only want to say that, in my judgment, this bill, as now submitted, actually accomplishes nothing. The object of the bill as it passed the House was to remove the charge of technical desertion. The bill, as now presented, does nothing of the kind. It only provides that where the desertion is intentional there can be no removal of the charge of desertion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does my friend from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] want to remove the charge of desertion against those who intentionally deserted?

Mr. RYAN. I want to say that perhaps the intention of the gentleman is to carry out the object of the bill; but in my judgment he does not do it. Every desertion, whether technical or otherwise, is intentional. As a general rule you have nothing except the evidence of the rolls to show whether there was desertion or not.

It has been said here that where there was absence without leave there was a charge of desertion. In many cases that depends largely upon the officer in command, the captain of the company. Where a soldier left, disappeared without leave, the captain in his discretion might carry him on the rolls as absent without leave, or he might have him marked as a deserter.

Take the case which was put a little while ago, where the war was practically closed, and the soldier left his command for a day or two, expecting to return before his command was mustered out. The captain, when he found by the roll-call that he did not appear, marked him as a deserter.

Now, the soldier intended to do the very thing he did do. He intended to leave in violation of the rules, under circumstances which justified his being marked on the roll as a deserter. The soldier comes back a week afterward and finds that the regiment is mustered out. Now, this bill affords that man no relief under heaven.

I will take another case; I have in mind another instance. A soldier enlisted in an Illinois regiment and was wounded at the battle of Pea Ridge. He went into a hospital, and while there his command left. Soon afterward another regiment came along and he enlisted in that regiment under another name. Now, the very fact that he enlisted under another name indicated a purpose on his part to desert contrary to the rules of war.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Did he desert the service?

Mr. RYAN. You do not say anything in your bill about deserting the service; all you say is that the person to be benefited by this bill shall not appear to have been an intentional deserter. Now, let me go on. As I said, another regiment came along and he enlisted in that regiment under another name. He served honorably and faithfully in that regiment and died on the battle-field of wounds received while in that service. Now there is no relief for his representatives under this bill. And there are plenty of such cases.

Now, if the committee of conference had made provision as I have indicated, if they had not said "intentional desertion of service," it would have enabled the Department to have provided for that class of persons; but this bill in my judgment does nothing of the kind.

Mr. CALKINS. I now desire to move the previous question on the adoption of the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to say a word on this subject.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, [Mr. HENDERSON,] will be allowed to say a word or two.

Mr. CALKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want to say this: this bill seems in some way to have got out from under the control of or to have deserted the Committee on Military Affairs; still I feel an interest in the passage of the bill.

I will say to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] that it is almost impossible to so frame a general bill as not to admit of the removal of the charge of desertion in some cases where it ought not to be removed. The bill was prepared carefully by the Committee on Military Affairs, and with express reference to guarding against the possibility of having the charge of desertion removed from those who intentionally deserted the flag of their country. The case spoken of by my friend from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] is one of that class which I think ought to be and must be provided for by special law, for the very reason that if you undertake to pass a general law here which will embrace all those cases it will be so broad in its scope that it will admit of the removal of the charge of desertion from some who were willful deserters.

Now, I think this bill ought to pass in the shape it now is. I should have had no serious objection if it had passed this morning in the way it came from the Senate.

Mr. CALKINS. I now demand the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. CALKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I submit the report of the conference committee on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) "making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 6, 8, 34, 42, 45, 51, 52, 56, 57, 58, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 95, 96, 98, 105, 111, 112, 116, 136, 137, 138, 139, 143, 144, 146, 152, 159, 171, 180, 189, 198, 201, 223, 228, 230, 232, 233, 235, 243, 244, and 246.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 26, 32, 33, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40, 43, 44, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 53, 54, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 107, 110, 113, 114, 115, 119, 120, 126, 127, 129, 134, 140, 141, 147, 148, 150, 153, 154, 157, 158, 160, 161, 162, 166, 169, 172, 176, 179, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 199, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 210, 211, 214, 215, 216, 217, 219, 221, 222, 224, 225, 226, 227, 229, 231, 237, 239, 241, and 242, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 89: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted, and strike out in line 1, page 31 of the bill, the words "twenty-five," and insert in lieu thereof "fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 104: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment numbered 104, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$200,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 142: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 142, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the matter proposed to be inserted the following: "under authority of law;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 145: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 145, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 149: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 149, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000;" and add at the end of the amendment the following: "In full satisfaction thereof;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 151: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 151, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "And the cession by the State of Rhode Island to the United States of said island for use as a 'naval training station' is hereby accepted;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 155: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 155, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 6 of said amendment strike out all after the word "retired" down to and including the word "to" in line 7, and in line 10 strike out the word "which," and at the end of said amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That the total cost of said building shall not exceed the sum of $400,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 173: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 173, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 178: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 178, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said Senate amendment insert "$10,000;" and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 208: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 208, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following: "Provided, That no binding shall be done at the Government Printing Office for Senators, Representatives, or Delegates in Congress except that there may be bound for each Senator, Representative, or Delegate one copy of each book or document issued by order of Congress, but this provision shall not allow any binding as aforesaid to be done of books or documents issued by authority of and during any former Congress;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 212 and 213: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 212 and 213, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted and insert in lieu thereof as follows: "To supply district judges, district attorneys, and clerks of the United States courts who have not already received the same with the Revised Statutes of the United States and the statutes published since the first revision a sufficient sum of money is hereby appropriated: Provided, That all statutes heretofore or hereafter furnished by the United States to district judges, district attorneys, and clerks of the United States courts, under this or any other law, shall not become the property of these officers, but on the expiration of their official term shall be by them turned over and delivered to their respective successors in office; and the following provision in the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1881, namely,

'to supply district judges and district attorneys, who have not already received the same, with the reports of the Supreme Court and Statutes at Large of the United States, and also to furnish complete sets of the same, where there are none, to such points where United States courts are authorized to be held and to supply broken sets where there are missing volumes, a sufficient sum of money is hereby appropriated,' be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

Amendment numbered 218: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 218, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of said amendment insert the following: "To enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to pay Dr. John L. Hays for preparing pamphlet on the husbandry of the Angora goat, in conformity with the provision of the joint resolution approved July 1, 1882, $500, and the said pamphlet shall be printed at the Government Printing Office and paid for out of the appropriation for the Department of Agriculture;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 236: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 236, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Insert after said amendment as independent paragraphs, as follows:

"To pay James C. Courts, assistant clerk of the Committee on Appropriations of the House for extra services, $500.

"To pay Charles Carter for cleaning extra room of the House Committee on Appropriations, $60.

"To pay William H. Smith for services as assistant in the Library of the House of Representatives the difference between the pay of messenger and that of assistant from July 1, 1876, to December 12, 1881, $752.08.

"To pay Hon. ROBERT SMALLS for salary and mileage for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, $6,927.60."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 238: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 238, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "the," where it occurs the second time, in line 5 of said amendment, the following: "First session of the;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I shall not make any extended statement with reference to this report, but am ready to answer any inquiries that members of the House may desire to make with reference to the action of the conferees upon the various amendments. After having answered such inquiries, if any should be put, I shall move the previous question, merely stating that in round numbers we have reduced the appropriations as proposed by the Senate amendments $958,150.52.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. ATKINS addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the bill which we are now considering carries, in the aggregate, $25,589,358. It is the last of the appropriation bills. The aggregate of all the appropriations which have been made by this Congress for the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1882, including the bill now under consideration, amounts to $265,923,065.09. The aggregate of the appropriations for the last fiscal year is about $219,367,983.38. It will be seen by this statement, Mr. Speaker, that this Congress has increased the appropriations over the amount appropriated for the last fiscal year in the aggregate $46,555,081.71.

In speaking of the appropriations which have been made by the present session of Congress I include the river and harbor bill and I include the agricultural bill, neither of which emanated from the Committee on Appropriations, and I also include those special bills which have been passed and which carry an appropriation. Of this sum of $46,555,081.71, representing the difference in the appropriations by this session of Congress and those for the last fiscal year, $34,000,000 of it alone is the increase which this Congress has made in the appropriations to pay the claims of pensioners. It is not my purpose to discuss the propriety of the "arrearage bill," and my pension laws rendering necessary the increase, at this time. It is my purpose only to point out in what the increase consists.

In that increase again, Mr. Speaker, is included the sum of $1,742,432 to pay an increase in the clerical force of the Government to adjust the pension claims. The Committee on Appropriations find upon our statute-books the law granting the pensions, and we have not believed it to be our duty to prevent their payment by failing to provide the necessary clerical force to adjust the pending claims. A previous Congress and Democratic House with great unanimity passed the "arrearage of pensions bill" without providing the clerical force for its execution, and the last Congress substantially nullified the law by a failure to make the necessary provisions for the adjustment of the claims. We have believed—

Mr. COBB. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question in this connection?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will yield for a question.

Mr. COBB. Does not the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, know that Mr. Bentley, the Commissioner of Pensions, was called before the Appropriations Committee, and that every cent which he recommended as necessary for carrying out the law was appropriated? Does not the gentleman know that Mr. Bentley was called there and questioned as to how much money he wanted for the payment of pensions, and was not that amount appropriated?

Mr. HISCOCK. The fact was obvious to every member of the Committee on Appropriations that with the large increase of the pension list and increase of pensions an increase of force was absolutely necessary for the honest and reasonably prompt adjustment of the claims. It needed no Mr. Bentley to tell us that fact. It was patent to the Committee on Appropriations; it was patent to the Forty-fifth and was patent to the Forty-sixth Congress that when you increase the number of the claimants and the value of their claims there must be a corresponding increase of the clerical force given to honestly adjust them in a reasonable time, that the rights of the claimants and safety to and protection of the Government against fraudulent claims demanded it.

Mr. COBB. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations does not answer my question.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, if I have not answered it I can only make this further reply, that I do not question the assertion of the gentleman from Indiana, and if he says such was the case I do not dispute him; but I do not recollect the circumstances to which he refers, myself.

Mr. COBB. If the gentleman will allow me further, I would like to ask this question: whether or not the Commissioner of Pensions at that time was not the proper judge as to the amount necessary to carry out the law; and further, whether he would regard it as being right and proper for the Appropriations Committee to have brought in a bill appropriating millions of money that was not asked for by the officer in charge of that department.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Indiana entirely mistakes the question before us. I do not dispute but that the Appropriations Committee intended to appropriate money enough to pay all of the pensions and the arrears of pensions that would be adjusted and settled. But they failed to appropriate or to make provision for the proper necessary clerical force to honestly adjudicate the claims in a reasonable time. They defeated the bill, not by failing to make appropriations for the claims which would be allowed but by a failure to make provision for an additional force to adjudicate the claims themselves; and in this manner the law was nullified, has been nullified since it was enacted. The present Committee on Appropriations have taken the responsibility of providing an adequate force for the disposition of the claims, to have them heard, passed upon, and adjusted in a reasonable time, and to investigate them so thoroughly that fraudulent cases will be defeated.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask whether he was a member of the Committee on Appropriations of the last Congress?

Mr. HISCOCK. I was.

Mr. SPRINGER. Did the gentleman make any recommendation to that effect which was not adopted by the majority of the committee?

Mr. HISCOCK. I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that the Republican end of the Committee on Appropriations favored an increase of force. Whether we took an appeal from the committee to the House my memory at this time fails to serve me.

Mr. SPRINGER. Did the gentleman in any speech in Congress ask for any further clerical force for the adjudication and adjustment of pensions that was not granted?

Mr. HISCOCK. My recollection is that an attempt to increase in the House was made, and that it was voted down by the gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. SPRINGER. Show the record to that effect.

Mr. HISCOCK. I shall not stop now, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of finding in the record the vote of the gentleman from Illinois or of the party of which he is a member.

Mr. BUCKNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether he or the committee did not make this appropriation on the recommendation of the present Commissioner?

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I can say to the gentleman from Missouri that the Committee on Appropriations is thoroughly and heartily in sympathy with the Commissioner of Pensions in reference to providing the proper force for the adjudication of the pension claims.

In this excess of appropriations for the current year of $46,555,081.71 is included $7,302,575 of excess in the river and harbor bill over the appropriations for the last fiscal year. It is not my purpose, sir, to enter into an examination of the merits of that bill.

I shall briefly point out the items of increase, and the bill does not suffer by comparison with the one our Democratic predecessors gave the country. Three million one hundred and twenty-three thousand dollars of the excess for the improvement of the Lower Mississippi, a great national work to which the legislation of preceding Congresses has committed the country, and as to which I do not understand there is any division in the judgment of the country. The improvement of that great water-way is the right of the great States to which it affords a protection against railroad monopoly. Seven hundred and forty thousand dollars of the excess is in the increase of appropriation for the navigation of the same river and its tributaries, notably the Missouri, aggregating about $3,900,000. Baltimore receives $300,000 of the excess; Providence River, $65,000 of the excess; Charleston Harbor, $125,000; Savannah Harbor, $135,000; Galveston Harbor, $50,000; Oakland Harbor, California, $140,000; Buffalo Harbor, $25,000; Lynn Harbor, Massachusetts, $60,000; and $400,000 of the excess is for the improvement of the Potomac flats.

The items of increase I have indicated aggregate about $5,000,000 and I could point out others equally meritorious, though not so large, to account for the remaining $2,300,000 of the excess in appropriations of the bill of the Committee on Commerce of the present House as approved and concurred in by this Congress over the last year's bill. As compared with last year's bill, it is fair to say of it, it only appropriates $600,000 for new works not commenced by our Democratic predecessors. I did not join in its approval and concurrence. I believe the law appropriates too much money, granting every object it provides for worthy of aid, and in my opinion it provides for improvements that have no claims upon the Treasury of the General Government; but the law for the present year is far less objectionable in this respect than the last year's law.

Carry through the comparisons of amounts for the same specific purposes provided for by the two laws, and you will find the aggregate of excess of appropriations in the law for this fiscal year therefore for works of a national character and entitled to national aid account for the difference in amount between the two laws. An examination of the two bills will also disclose less appropriation for this fiscal year than for the last for works that in my judgment should not receive the aid of the General Government.

But, Mr. Speaker, my purpose now is rather to discuss the work of the Committee on Appropriations than of another committee of the House, and all my time can be properly devoted to that.

In the excess of appropriations for this fiscal year over last year there is an increase of $2,062,274 in miscellaneous bills. The laws referred to are for public works or for other public purposes which carry their appropriations with them. I am entirely willing that that schedule be subjected to the closest scrutiny of gentlemen on the other side or of the country. It is in excess of the aggregate of the sums which were granted by the last session of the last Congress in laws of like character, I think some $2,000,000. There is in it nearly $400,000 to relieve the sufferers from the spring overflow of the Mississippi and its tributaries. In it is included appropriations to pay honest claims against the Government. Scrutinize it and scan it as closely as you may and you will find nothing in it but what is honest and what ought to be appropriated for by Congress.

Mr. Speaker, there is also included in this excess the sum of $1,493,116.77, the increase which has been given by this Congress to the postal service of the United States. That, sir, is a service constantly increasing. There has not been the increase in the appropriation for this fiscal year over those of last year there was in the appropriation for the last year over those of its preceding year.

Without crippling the service, the Post-Office Department is now doing far more work, for the same expenditure, than in either of the three preceding years.

I am happy to say that in the present administration of the Post-Office Department the expense of certain branches of that service has been decreased so largely that the increase in the total appropriations is not in the ratio of the increase of service—absolutely necessary service, I mean—while the amount which can be expended for the service is largely fixed by law, depending upon the amount of work done. To illustrate, the amount to be paid for railroad transportation of the mail matter depending by law upon its weight and the space occupied, and the salaries of postmasters upon the receipts of their respective offices and not within the discretion of Congress, nevertheless the transportation of the mails outside of railroads is so far dependent upon the judgment and honesty of the executive officers of the Government that large sums may be wasted thereon; and the wisdom and economy of the Post-Office Department, exercised without impairing the star-route mail-service, has so lessened its cost that the increase in the cost of the whole service is not proportionate to the increase of the service now rendered. And I am assured the report of the work and expenditures therefor of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General for the fiscal year is more than likely to show the entire postal service for this year will cost less than for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882.

Ninety-one thousand seven hundred and eighty dollars of the increase is in the agricultural bill of the current year, as compared with that of last year. This Department is now far-reaching in its work, but further extension is demanded by the country, and $91,000 of increase for its support has been given by this Congress; $33,000 of the increase consists of permanent appropriations for which we have substituted annual appropriations.

Mr. Speaker, the aggregate of the annual appropriations for the last fiscal year, including the agricultural bill, which carries $91,780 more this year than last, and excluding the river and harbor bill, neither of which were prepared by the Committee of Appropriations, was $204,646,256.79; for the present fiscal year, $241,826,489.50; the excess, $37,180,232.71.

As I have already stated, we have given this year for the payment of pensions and arrearages of pensions under existing law, and the payment of which cannot be avoided at some time, $34,000,000; for clerical force to adjust them, $1,742,430; aggregate, $35,742,430. Credit our appropriations with this amount, and the showing is that we have appropriated for all Government service proper, to pay Government liabilities, for the construction of public buildings, except in a few minor instances, in which the bills carried their appropriations, (and they are included in the miscellaneous bill I have referred to,) $1,437,802.71.

Mr. Speaker, the excess in appropriations for postal-service for this year over last, as I have stated, more than accounts for it—that was $1,493,116.71, and leaves $45,314.06 in favor of this Congress, and to this you should certainly add the $33,080 annual appropriation we have substituted for permanent.

Mr. Speaker, at the risk of repeating myself somewhat, the aggregate annual appropriations for last year were $219,367,983.38. Included in this amount is a little more than $24,000,000 provided for by this Congress but chargeable to last year's service, and should have been appropriated for by the last Congress. In contrasting the appropriations for this year with last there should be added to last year the $33,080 for service which last year was paid from permanent appropriations, and this year by the annual appropriations.

for increase of service consequent upon the growth of the country, including the postal service increase of $1,493,116.77 and all the public-building bills—not the excess over last year.

If the Democratic Congress was economical this Republican Congress has been more so in all matters except in appropriations for rivers and harbors, and those appropriations are not chargeable to either party, but to the members of both parties who supported them.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will ask the gentleman from New York, as a matter of information—I did not hear the beginning of his speech—whether in his comparisons he has inserted deficiencies?

Mr. HISCOCK. I have.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then you cannot make it complete until the end of the fiscal year; till you know what yours may be.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will answer the question and reply to the suggestion which has been made by the gentleman from Georgia. We have provided in this Congress for a large volume of deficiencies; and, sir, I apprehend that in the next year, while there may be some deficiencies, as compared with those which we have provided for they will be inconsiderable. It has been our intention and we have striven to make full appropriations for the service; and I know of no instance in which we have given a less sum than we believed was necessary for the support and maintenance of the particular branch of the service for which the appropriation was made. And in many branches of the service the amount given has been increased in consequence of the investigation of the appropriations made for the last year, including deficiencies voted by this Congress; the first appropriation with the deficiency constituting the amount appropriated in most cases for the same service for this year. We have never given a less amount.

It is proper in this connection that I should call the attention of the committee to the $29,248,193.96 of deficiencies which we have provided for. There is included in the deficiency bill $1,192,206.80 compensation to postmasters. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] knows that the compensation to postmasters is regulated by the amount of postal revenue received at their offices respectively. He knows more than that; that they only turn into the Treasury the balance which is in their hands after defraying the expenses of their offices, respectively, including their salaries, and the gentleman from Georgia will concede that this is a proper and legitimate deficiency.

Mr. BLOUNT. And one that occurs almost every fiscal year.

Mr. HISCOCK. It has occurred almost every fiscal year, or it has occurred during the last four fiscal years. And I want to say more than that: deficiencies of this kind have gone over year after year, and we have been compelled in this Congress to provide for deficiencies two or three years old, I think.

Mr. BLOUNT. If my friend will allow me—

Mr. HISCOCK. But they are not included in the amount I have stated here and charged to last year.

Mr. BLOUNT. If my friend will allow me, I will say that the Forty-fourth Congress went back six, seven, and ten years for deficiencies which arose under the Republican administration.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will not dispute the gentleman on that point. I believe that the bill making appropriations for the Post-Office Department for this fiscal year contains ample appropriations for that service. And I believe that when the end of the year shall have been reached it will be found that instead of there being a deficiency for the support of the Post-Office Department a surplus will be turned into the Treasury.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Which Department is that, may I ask?

Mr. HISCOCK. The Post-Office Department. Another item of deficiency in the last fiscal year which we have provided for at this session was $1,120,000 for transportation of mail by railroad. It is a well-known fact that the compensation to railroads is fixed by statute; it depends upon certain conditions, the weight of the matter and space it occupies, and Congress has no discretion over the amount to be paid. This was a legitimate deficiency. It was an amount that under no circumstances could be charged over to the current fiscal year. It was a debt of last year and we provided for it in the deficiency bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him again?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will ask him if that deficiency does not arise from the fact that the Government was insisting that the amount claimed by the railroads ought not to be paid to them, and a decision in favor of the railroads made it necessary to put it in an appropriation bill?

Mr. HISCOCK. Such is not the case.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is due in part to the extension of our railroad system. I do not now charge bad faith to the Forty-sixth Congress for the insufficient appropriation made. To a large extent this item of deficiency was due to the fact that steamboat transportation of the mails has been dispensed with and railroad transportation substituted.

Mr. BLOUNT. If my friend will allow me, that was the understanding of the Committee on Appropriations last year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was the payment to the land-grant railroads included?

Mr. HISCOCK. That is not included in this sum.

Mr. HOLMAN. The sum of $125,000 is included.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think not.

Mr. HOLMAN. The deficiency bill contains an item of $125,000 for land-grant railroads.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes; but it is not included in the amount which I have given and am now discussing.

We have provided for a deficiency in the service of the last fiscal year for miscellaneous postal services, $75,000, made up of small items which I have not before me, but which were items over which Congress had no discretion, items which had to be paid.

We have provided for a deficiency, which is taken into account in comparing the bills of the current year with those of last year, of $1,036,867 for the Indian service. That aggregate is made up largely of appropriations to discharge treaty obligations existing between the Government of the United States and the different Indian tribes. In no instance has an appropriation been made and charged in this account against the last fiscal year which was not to discharge or perform some treaty obligation existing between the Government of the United States and various tribes of Indians, or to support certain tribes to avoid an Indian war, all expended last year.

There is included in the deficiencies I have charged to the last fiscal year $520,000 for Army transportation. So far as the item of Army transportation is concerned, Congress has substantially no control over it. In the bill which was presented by the Committee on Appropriations to this Congress, and which has become law, we endeavored to provide ample means, so that there shall be no deficiency at the end of the present fiscal year; and I believe we have accomplished that object.

It is said by some one near me that it cannot be helped. It can be helped. This deficiency to a large extent was due to there being imposed upon this service other expenditures than those which properly and legitimately belonged to the Army. There has been paid from the Army appropriations to clerks engaged in the investigation of claims the sum of $200,000 a year, which in part came from the appropriation for transportations and for contingencies of the Army.

In our appropriations we have adopted the theory of specific appropriations. We have upon another bill providing for that service defined the amount which shall be paid, and obviated one of the causes of this deficiency. It should have been corrected by a previous Congress, and would have been if it had understood the subject. There was a failure to investigate sufficiently to reach an understanding of it.

Another source of deficiency in the Army appropriations is this:

the Signal Service is paid in part from it without any limit upon the amount. It must have been known that such was the case. I believe that in the aggregate the sum of $600,000, in the discretion of one man, has been taken from the various appropriations in the Army bill for the support of the Army, for the Signal Service. We have made our appropriations definite and specific.

I believe that the expenditures of the money for the service of the Army has been made as economically and as carefully as they could be; and there has never been any difficulty in getting at the amount that should be appropriated for that service. But these deficiencies have been created by allowing other services to be attached to that without fixing any limit upon the amount to be expended for those services.

I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to go through with all the deficiency items which we have charged to the last fiscal year, making up the aggregate appropriations for that year's service, and which I have included in the comparison of the appropriations for the current fiscal year. Yet there are certain other items to which I must call the attention of the committee, and which are all so manifestly deficiencies that the most critical gentleman on the other side will not question it.

There is the item for expenses of United States courts, $253,056.70—witnesses' fees, marshals' fees—sums over which Congress has no discretion whatever. Yet there has been that large deficiency which it was necessary to provide for. We charged over to the last year $620,000 for the completion of the census; and I can confidently appeal to this Committee of the Whole to sustain us in holding that amount is properly charged to the last fiscal year.

I will call attention also to the item of public printing. The Forty-sixth Congress in its last session appropriated for public printing $1,700,000. I believe there had been expended during the preceding year in that bureau $2,100,000. I am tempted to use this instance to illustrate what sometimes has seemed to me true—perhaps I ought not to charge or insinuate it, but still the suspicion has crept into my mind—that it was a settled policy in the last session of the last Congress to make insufficient appropriations for the then next fiscal year. One million seven hundred thousand dollars was appropriated for the support of the Printing Bureau when I believe $2,100,000 had been used in the previous year. That Congress had the control of the printing; it controlled the volume of the printing and knew it had increased; yet it failed to appropriate up to the amount of the preceding year. The deficiency in that branch of the service alone which we were compelled to provide for was $865,000, and, sir, it was all expended to print documents ordered by a Democratic Congress.

Another item in this list of deficiencies is $16,000,000 to pay pension claims which were settled during the last fiscal year. I apprehend there will be no question upon the other side of the House that all pension claims allowed and payable last year by the insufficient force which was provided for the Pension Department by the last Congress should be charged over to the last fiscal year.

The aggregate of the list of deficiencies is, as I have said, $29,248,193.96. This is the aggregate of all the bills and resolutions which have been passed appropriating money for the last and preceding fiscal years. Of this amount about $24,000,000 must be charged to last year, and was rendered necessary by the insufficient appropriations for that year's Government service.

I may be pardoned, I trust, if I repeat that in making provisions for the present fiscal year we have done so after a full investigation of the needs of the service in connection with the deficiencies for which we have been compelled to recommend appropriations.

In this connection I will print the statements which I have before me. They show in detail the legislative, executive, and judicial, the sundry civil, and Post-Office bills classified for purposes of comparison, and the other regular appropriation bills for the years 1880, 1881, 1882, and 1883, with the deficiencies for each year, and also includes the miscellaneous acts making appropriations for those years, corrected at the close of the session:

Now, Mr. Speaker, I may be pardoned for saying a word in reference to the late day at which the appropriation bills have been presented to the House. This has been a long and laborious session; and, sir, it has not been the intention of the committee of which I have the honor to be the chairman to crowd its appropriation bills upon the attention of the House to the exclusion of other public business. We have recognized the fact that we came here not alone to pass appropriation bills to support the Government and enable it to discharge its various functions and duties, but that the country had the right to demand of us certain general legislation of great public benefit, and that it was our duty rather to hold back the appropriation bills than such general legislation might have consideration than to force the appropriation bills upon the House to the exclusion of that legislation if that exclusion would result in its defeat.

It was the duty of this Congress to reapportion the members of Congress to the various States. The last Congress failed in that great constitutional duty. It was a matter which we were to dispose of. The Constitution imposed it upon us. It took time; it took consideration. It received the necessary consideration at our hands; and a bill was perfected and passed with which I believe the whole country is satisfied.

Another important question has claimed the attention of Congress, the revision of the tariff. For years there has been an effort to readjust in some way the customs duties. The Forty-fourth, the Forty-fifth, and the Forty-sixth Congresses failed in all efforts in that direction, until it seemed to be the settled sentiment of the whole country that a tariff commission should be created to which this subject should be referred. The last Congress had failed to pass a law, though there was a public demand for such a measure. This Congress has considered the subject and disposed of it. No man can prophesy what result may come from it; but we have at least answered the demands of the country that the legislation should be had.

I shall not go through with all the various matters which have occupied the attention of this Congress; but there are one or two others to which I will refer. The Pacific coast has been for years agitated by Chinese immigration. The question within what restrictions or limits the Chinese should be allowed to immigrate to this country, other Congresses had confronted as we confronted it. We believed a policy should be determined upon and the subject be removed from politics, that the people of the Pacific States and of the whole country, however the question might be determined, would be better off if it were settled. This Congress has considered and disposed of that question. It is removed from politics. It has ceased to be a disquieting influence in the communities on the Pacific coast.

Sir, one other matter, perhaps in its effects not as widespread as the Chinese question, but more pernicious, more poisonous in my opinion, claimed the attention of Congress—the Mormon question. For twenty years or more that community, that government, has been allowed to have its Delegate seated on this floor. It almost seemed as if the Government of the United States was fostering the institution that it was under the protection of the Federal Congress. It had increased, it had strengthened until as an ulcer in our social and political system it was recognized and abhorred by every Christian community throughout the length and breadth of the land.

There came to us in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses appeals from our constituents to destroy and do away with this offense to our civilization, yet those appeals were denied. This Congress, sir, has answered the appeals of Christian constituencies. It has perfected the legislation which we believe will destroy the institution of Mormon, the Mormon hierarchy, as a political force and political body. Appropriation bills were not pressed against that legislation.

There is, Mr. Speaker, another matter we have taken time to consider. We believed it was the duty of an American Congress before it disposed of its business, before its last days were reached, to settle the question of the title of members to their seats. We believed it was our right to know whether the gentleman whose vote and voice might offset or defeat the vote and voice of another was entitled to vote and voice. We believed, for the settlement of grave business and political questions by the American Congress, it was the first duty of Congress to purge itself of members not entitled to seats, and to seat in their places those entitled to them. We believed it was a duty we owed to the country that men who were elected should represent the constituencies which had elected them; and we believed that it was a duty we owed to these constituencies. We believed every constituency had the right of representation upon the floor of this House, and that he who had received a majority vote in a Congressional district should be the one to represent it.

We encountered great delay, but still we did consider these matters and questions to the exclusion of the consideration of appropriation bills, and we did get a vote upon the election cases which the Committee on Elections could bring before us. We did as a Republican party dispose of them, and at the first, the present session of Congress, rather than defer them to the last days of the last session, then to be disposed of by paying the full salary both to the contestant and the contestee without regard to our own rights or the rights of constituencies.

There is one other matter I must not forget. Coming into power, we believed that it was the duty of Congress to investigate the subject of taxation. There were the old war taxes, levied and collected year after year. We believed it was the duty of the Republican party to consider whether an overburdened people could not be relieved from some of them. We considered the question in this House. We have given to it all the time needed for debate. We have accomplished this, if our action shall be approved by the Senate, we have removed from the people taxation to the amount of $25,000,000 a year at least.

Under our national banking law most of the charters of the bank were about to expire. Here was a question of pressing importance. That expiration, Mr. Speaker, with the consequent withdrawal of circulation threatened a contraction of the currency, a disturbance of business, and almost a financial convulsion in the great business centers. We believed that our time was demanded to provide legislation on the subject, that it was the business of a Republican Congress not to pass appropriation bills, adjourn and go home, but to devote itself to the business interests of the country, and that this was one question which demanded our closest attention.

It is not unfair to say, Mr. Speaker, that on this question as on others we were not aided by the opposition as a party. I concede, sir, that there were some patriotic men who joined hands with us in this legislation as they did in reference to other. But the fullest debate on this as on all questions was exacted, and in the end a law was passed by this House providing for the extension of bank charters, averting the financial panic and catastrophe impending.

I must beg the pardon of the House for having taken up so much of its time, not so much in the discussion of the details of the bill as of the details of all the appropriation bills which have come before the House, and in the discussion of those great questions which have been the occasion of delay in the presentation and consideration of appropriation bills, which in my judgment afforded ample justification for whatever delay may have taken place.

Mr. LYNCH. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York one question.

Mr. COX, of New York. Will the gentleman from New York tell me how much the appropriations for this year are in excess of those of last year?

Mr. HISCOCK. That has been already stated.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not understand precisely what the gentleman stated as to that.

Mr. LYNCH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. LYNCH. The gentleman from New York spoke of $6,000,000 appropriated in the river and harbor bill in excess of the appropriations of last year. Is it not true that nearly the whole of that excess is for the improvement of the Mississippi River below Cairo, and for the benefit of the Southern States generally?

Mr. HISCOCK. I think about $5,000,000.

Mr. LYNCH. You mean that that amount goes to the Southern States?

Mr. ROBESON. It is $4,000,000 more than last year.

Mr. LYNCH. For the Southern States?

Mr. ROBESON. For the Mississippi.

Mr. COX, of New York. I understand the appropriations for the current year are $78,000,000 more than those for last year.

Mr. HISCOCK. Without looking over my table I could not give the exact figures.

Mr. COX, of New York. I want to know, and I would like the gentleman to state it, because I take his judgment absolutely.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield now to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] for three minutes.

Mr. HERR. It occurs to me that this whole question of whether an appropriation is ten cents more than it was last year or not is all bosh, and that we lower ourselves as Representatives to be higgling about any such question. The question is whether the appropriations that we have made are proper and just and such as are needed to meet the wants of the Government and do the business of the country. And if the amount be $5,000,000 more than last year, and if that sum is actually necessary, what is the use of talking about it?

Mr. COX, of New York. The excess is $78,000,000.

Mr. HERR. Suppose it is $78,000,000. Suppose it was $300,000,000, if that was necessary. Why, sir, in 1861 we had to jump up $300,000,000 in excess of the former year in order to run the Government. It was necessary; we had to do it. And the question the business men now ask is whether we have appropriated what ought to be appropriated; whether we have appropriated the amount needed to run the Government.

What I rose to ask this House was, why this anxiety about a few dollars more or less being appropriated as compared with last year? It may be the navy bill is too small. It may be you ought to be ashamed of your reduction in that bill. For myself I am not afraid of appropriating money when it is needed for the service of the Government.

Suppose the Democratic party should have run this Government in a niggardly way, are we to imitate them in that respect? No, sir; we ought to provide for it like business men. What we want to do is to go before the people—and I think we can—and show them we have simply used the money which is necessary for the needs of the Government. On that I am ready to take the responsibility. It makes no difference to me how the amount stands as compared with this year or that year. Some people seem to think if there is a variation at all there must be something wrong. Why, sir, this Government has increased, and will continue to increase in its expenses as it does in its population and in its business. It always will continue to have greater needs. What is the use then of comparing one year with another? Why higgling about this like a lot of boys? Let us rather act in these matters like full-grown men.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent to publish my speech of the 6th of July as of to-day, with the necessary corrections.

There was no objection. [See page 6973.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I now yield to questions with reference to items of the bill or the matters in the conference report. I yield first to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS.]

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I wish to ask a question with reference to the Senate amendment numbered 129, appropriating for the erection of a building at Saint Paul for a quartermaster and commissary depot. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if the conference committee had before it any recommendation from the War Department for that appropriation?

Mr. HISCOCK. They did have.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Did they approve of it?

Mr. HISCOCK. They did. I will say this, that the House conferees were opposed to it. It is one of the concessions we made to the Senate. They seemed to have a scheme in reference to our military posts, one at that place and one at Leavenworth. They struck out the appropriation which we had made for Fort Selden, and we made that concession to them.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I wish to make this statement with regard to that appropriation. I am credibly informed that the commanding general of the military division of the West disapproved of that, and that the Secretary of War disapproved of it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think not the Secretary of War.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. And that the appropriation of $42,000 for the erection of buildings at that place, with a subsequent appropriation of from $7,000 to $12,000 to continue them, is something, as I understand, that the War Department and the Army do not want, and that it is not necessary.

Mr. HISCOCK. I can only say in reply to that I fully concur, and the House committee in preparing this bill fully concurred with the gentleman from Illinois. But in agreeing upon a bill with the Senate we have got to yield at least to them somewhat and admit that they are entitled to exercise similar judgment in matters of this kind. And this is one of the items that we yielded. I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman in regard to the action of the committee of conference upon the provision touching the decisions of the Supreme Court. Does the committee agree that full sets of those reports shall be furnished to the district attorneys as well as to the judges?

Mr. HISCOCK. In reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] I will say that we have struck out that portion of the bill entirely and repealed the provision in the sundry civil bill of two years ago.

Mr. HOLMAN. One other question—

Mr. HISCOCK. I beg the gentleman's pardon. We provide by this bill for the delivery to those officers of the Revised Statutes and the statutes passed since the revision.

Mr. HOLMAN. But not the reports of the Supreme Court.

Mr. HISCOCK. We repeal that law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I notice that there is a provision in the report of the committee of conference touching the binding of documents for members of Congress, which I do not recollect in the original bill. If I understood it correctly as it was read that provision authorizes members of the House and Senate to have bound at the Government bindery the documents published for each successive Congress.

Mr. HISCOCK. Each member is entitled to have bound volumes for the Congress of which he is a member.

Mr. ROBESON. One copy of each document.

Mr. HISCOCK. One copy.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that in addition to the bound copy to which each member is now entitled?

Mr. HISCOCK. No.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it expressly in lieu of the bound copy he is now entitled to by law?

Mr. HISCOCK. Under the provisions of this bill each member is entitled to have one copy bound.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of any publication during this Congress?

Mr. HISCOCK. Of the current Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, does my friend from New York think that is a wise provision, in view of the fact that under existing law each member receives a bound copy of all documents published by order of Congress?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not think it is a wise provision of law; but the Senate is accustomed to have bound what volumes its members please to direct to be bound, to be paid for from the contingent fund of the Senate. The effect of this bill is to put Senators upon a par with members of the House, and to limit them to one copy. The provision of the House bill was entirely acceptable to me, but we could not continue the contest over that question.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to ask the gentleman just this question: does the provision in this bill embrace one copy of every public document?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No.

Mr. HISCOCK. One bound volume.

Mr. ATKINS. Is not the gentleman mistaken? Is it not one copy of each publication?

Mr. BLACKBURN. One set.

Mr. ATKINS. One entire set of the publication.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask that that portion of the report may be read. And while the Clerk is looking it up I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE.]

Mr. HOUSE. I merely desire to inquire of the gentleman what has been the reduction in the amount of appropriations made by the Senate amendments for the National Board of Health?

Mr. HISCOCK. In reference to the National Board of Health, the conferees on the part of the Senate receded from all the amendments of the Senate, with an amendment increasing the amount which may be used in aid of State and local boards of health from $25,000 to $50,000. I now ask the Clerk to read that portion of the report about the binding of documents.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 208 and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following:

"Provided, That no binding shall be done at the Government Printing Office for Senators, Representatives, or Delegates in Congress, except that there may be bound for each Senator, Representative, or Delegate one copy of each book or document issued by order of Congress; but this provision shall not allow any binding so aforesaid to be done of books or documents issued by authority of and during any former Congress."

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] will see that this is in addition to the bound copy now authorized.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is so.

Mr. HOLMAN. And to be bound in any style that the member may think proper.

Mr. HISCOCK. And I will say in reply to the gentleman that notwithstanding that is the case it will result in a reduction of expenditures.

Mr. HOLMAN. How?

Mr. ROBESON. I can tell the gentleman.

Mr. HISCOCK. For the reason that the Senate is now accustomed to pay from its contingent fund for binding volumes of documents from the beginning of the Government to the present time, if Senators desire, and this stops that practice.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will not that continue to be done still?

Mr. HISCOCK. We believe that in this amendment we had a concession from the Senate, and a very large one.

Mr. HOLMAN. You do not prevent any payment from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. In that respect the bill as it went to the Senate certainly had my approval, as I doubt not it had the approval of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] But when we could not get all we asked, but could remedy an existing evil and thereby reduce expenditures, we accepted that reduction of expenditures rather than to have a disagreement.

Mr. VALENTINE. Economy and reform.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, it certainly does not devolve upon me to play the rôle of advocate or even apologist for the other side of the House in the matter of appropriations generally. I do not wish to take issue with a single statement that my friend from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] has made by way of arraignment of the other side; but as a member of the committee of conference upon the bill now under consideration, I would be dealing unfairly toward the other side of the House, I would fail to do justice to my associates upon the conference committee, and what is more I would be dealing unjustly by myself, if I did not say that I believe this is in the main a decent, a clean, and an honest sundry civil appropriation bill. I do not believe that there is a job in it. I do not believe that it carries a solitary paragraph which opens the vaults of the Treasury to either lobbyist or jobber. I have never seen a bill prepared with more care and deliberation. I have never seen a conference conducted upon stricter rules or a sharper basis. I have never seen conferees come nearer to forgetting the advantages that party might get in the adjustment of differences than has been illustrated in the treatment of this measure. This much I feel impelled to say.

Of course conference means compromise. There were two hundred and forty-seven amendments put upon this bill by the Senate; and upon most of these the House challenged the judgment of the Senate. We have within one day's time come here with a conference report which proposes to bridge over and adjust all differences. To that report I give my acquiescence heartily. The differences have been equitably and fairly adjusted. I do honestly believe that this report which the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, has submitted ought to be approved. I doubt not that the Senate will accept it; and I do believe that the House should take it.

Mr. CONVERSE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CONVERSE. I would like to inquire whether when the gentleman speaks of the fairness of this bill he includes in the remark that amendment made in the Senate which hands the treasury of the Territory of Utah over to the governor of the Territory?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who happens today to be the governor of Utah is a Kentuckian, personally and intimately well known to me for many years, one whom I esteem very highly. In answer to the gentleman from Ohio, I will say the provision of the bill in that regard as reported by the committee of conference does not meet my view, nor come up to what I demanded of the conference committee. I think that the committee erred on that point as they may have done on other matters. I was simply speaking of the bill as a whole.

Mr. ROBESON. But the provision of the bill is to carry out existing law; is it not?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the gentleman from New Jersey, and say no, I think not. I was perfectly willing as a member of the committee of conference that existing law should be enforced in that Territory under the recent act passed by Congress, but I did not see any necessity for ousting men from office when under the law of the Territory of Utah they would remain in all cases where the statute declared that the incumbent should hold until his successor was elected and qualified. I tried to get a modification to that extent and failed. I trust that in this statement I do not violate the secrets of the committee-room.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Allow me to call the attention of my colleague on the conference committee to the fact that it was agreed in the conference committee that what the gentleman proposes was effected by the law as it stood.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I mean to deal fairly in this matter, and I was going to say that while the amendment which I offered was voted down, every member of the conference committee insisted that the law itself provided for the case. I only sought to make it more specific, and to give it a construction which would prevent any such practices as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] has suggested as possible.

But, Mr. Speaker—and this is all I desire to say—in the main this sundry civil bill has been carefully prepared and fairly handled. I am willing to accept my share of the responsibility when I declare that I do not believe the Treasury of this country will suffer, that jobbers will profit by reason of the passage of the measure now submitted for consideration. It is an honest bill, which has been fully investigated and deliberately submitted for acceptance. Without regard to party, seeking no advantage from the stand-point of politics, I join my voice with that of the other conferees on the part of the House and ask that this report be accepted and crystallized into law.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now call the previous question.

Mr. CONVERSE. I would like to inquire whether we can have a separate vote on these several propositions after the ordering of the previous question?

Mr. HISCOCK. That cannot be had at any time.

The SPEAKER. Neither before nor after.

Mr. CONVERSE. Mr. Speaker, I desire at the proper period to move that the House concur in the Senate amendment relating to the Territory of Utah, with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to move to amend a conference report.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to offer and have read at the Clerk's desk an amendment, and I propose to ask the House to adopt it for the purpose of putting it on the record.

The SPEAKER. It will not be in order.

Mr. HISCOCK. It may be printed in the RECORD, if that will satisfy the gentleman.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to offer it now.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have demanded the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Whether the previous question is called or not the conference report is not open to amendment, but must be agreed to or rejected as a whole.

Mr. CONVERSE. Will the gentleman give me three or five minutes to be heard on this proposition?

Mr. HISCOCK. I dislike to refuse the gentleman, but the message comes to me from the Senate they are waiting for this report, and I must therefore insist on my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the conference report will be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 81.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are not ordered, and the conference report is adopted.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask for a division on agreeing to the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The conference report is not divisible.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask that a vote shall be taken, so I may know whether a quorum is present or not. I ask for a rising vote.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays were demanded after the vote had been taken, and the yeas and nays were refused. It is now too late for the gentleman to make the point that there is no quorum. The gentleman from New York moves to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted, and also moves that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. If there be no objection it will be agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

Mr. HISCOCK. The question then is on the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 19.

Mr. CONVERSE. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand the question of no quorum will be withdrawn if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] is allowed three minutes, and I will yield to him for that time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] makes the point there is no quorum, and the gentleman from Indiana also makes the same point.

Mr. SPRINGER. I made the point because the Chair said if there be no objection the motion to reconsider would be laid upon the table, and I objected.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand the point of no quorum is withdrawn. I will yield, therefore, three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CONVERSE.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the floor to yield, but the Chair will ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for a division, for the purpose of obtaining a yeas-and-nay vote on this measure. I am opposed to concurrence in the report.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. HOLMAN. I made the point for the purpose of procuring a yeas-and-nay vote on this question.

The SPEAKER. The House refuses the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am aware of that.

Mr. PEELLE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will be recognized for three minutes if there be no objection.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on the point of order that no quorum has voted?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands him to insist.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman will answer. Do I understand he insists on the point of order, no quorum has voted?

Mr. ATKINS. Why, there is no quorum in the city.

Mr. HOLMAN. If we have a yeas-and-nay vote there will be no point made of the want of a quorum.

Mr. ATKINS. Certainly the gentleman does not desire to defeat this bill, and if he asks for a yeas-and-nay vote no quorum appearing in the RECORD, it will so go to the country.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point of no quorum will not be made.

Mr. ATKINS. It will make itself.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will consent to the arrangement by which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] will be allowed three minutes, and then you can get the bill over to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on laying the motion to reconsider on the table, and on a division of the House the point was made that no quorum had voted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I believe, under the circumstances, I will not insist upon the question of a quorum.

Mr. CONVERSE. Mr. Speaker, I desire, then, to call the attention of the House briefly to this amendment of the Senate to the pending bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to interrupt him a moment? I hope now that the House will consent that the motion to reconsider the vote just taken be laid upon the table so that the bill may go to the Senate, and the gentleman from Ohio be permitted to continue his remarks thereafter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection; so the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

Mr. CONVERSE. Mr. Speaker, when the subject of appointing a board of commissioners for the Territory of Utah was before the House for consideration I made a statement that one of the purposes in contemplation was to place the treasury of that Territory in the hands of a returning-board. I did not then see the means by which that was to be accomplished, but under this Senate amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill it is evident that you put out of office the officers elected by the people of that Territory. The officers of that Territory, elected by the people there, have ever since the organization of the Territory proved themselves to be honest in the administration of all monetary affairs connected with it.

There have been no defalcations, frauds, or extravagance, and no charges of the misapplication of the people's money.

By this amendment you take the entire control out of their hands and place it in the hands of a governor appointed by the President of the United States. There is no requirement of law as to the qualifications of the treasurer whom he shall appoint. There is no requirement as to the bonds which shall be taken for the protection of the treasury. There is no requirement of law as to the appointment of the accounting officer called the auditor of public accounts, so that practically under this amendment you place, as I have said, in the hands of Governor Murray not only the treasury of the Territory and the collection of all taxes but you authorize him as well to appoint an auditor of accounts, the only auditing officer known under the laws of Utah Territory.

By this provision it seems to me that you have bound that Territory hand and foot, and given it over to carpet-bag governors and returning-boards to rob, as the Southern States have been robbed, by the same class of officers within the last few years.

The amendment which I desired to offer to the Senate amendment and which the House gave leave to have printed in the RECORD is as follows:

Provided further. That the foregoing provisions of law shall not apply to any officers who have not been guilty of polygamy, where under the laws of the Territory of Utah they can hold their respective offices until their successors are elected and qualified.

The letter of certain Federal officers in Utah, published in the Senate proceedings the other day, shows that the object of asking this appointing power to be conferred upon Governor Murray is to reach the offices of Territorial treasurer and auditor of public accounts. Those offices are named in the letter.

I only desire, sir, to put this statement on record and leave to the future to determine whether the statement be warranted by the facts which shall transpire or not. There could have been no objection to passing an amendment to the Senate amendment extending the term of office of the present treasurer and auditor of public accounts, who were elected by the people and are citizens and residents of the Territory, provided they were not and are not bigamists or polygamists. That amendment has been refused, but without debate, without opportunity for amendment; without apology a law has been enacted by an amendment on an appropriation bill depriving the people of the Territory of the officers elected by themselves and providing for the appointment in their stead men selected by a governor not elected by themselves, by a non-resident governor who has no interest in them, and has no interest in the Territory.

The law as it now stands is intended to place in his hands entire charge of the great and growing interests of that people. The men whom he selects to hold these important offices, to collect the taxes, keep and disburse the moneys, audit the accounts, may be non-residents like himself. But whether he selects residents or not, they may be his mere tools, without character and without the confidence of the people mostly interested. There is no appeal or review of his decision. An appointed governor's word becomes law to the people, from which there is no appeal.

I do not desire to say anything against the governor of Utah himself; but if the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] who passed a high encomium upon his character, will examine the files and papers in the office of the Bureau of Justice in this city he will find an examination made by the last Administration of Mr. Murray's proceedings as marshal of Kentucky which I think would induce him to modify his opinion. The governor's recent performance certifying that a man was elected Delegate to Congress who received only 1,300 votes while his opponent received 18,000 votes is not calculated to inspire confidence in either his judgment or his probity. But without regard to him, such power ought never to be taken from the people and placed in the hands of any one man. Neither ought he to be subjected to such temptation.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say one word in reply to the gentleman from Ohio in reference to this most "pernicious" legislation which has been recommended by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate and was unanimously recommended—unanimously, understand me—recommended to the conferees of the House by the conferees on the part of the Senate. And this recommendation came to us, Mr. Speaker, not from a divided body of conferees on the part of the Senate, but with the united accord of all of them commending to us that this amendment should go upon the bill of the House.

Mr. HOUSE. Does the gentleman from Ohio state the amendment correctly?

Mr. HISCOCK. It is to the effect that so far as vacancies are concerned the governor shall appoint officers to fill them.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have the amendment here in my hand, if the gentleman from New York will permit me to read it. It is on amendment No. 62, as follows:

The governor of the Territory of Utah is hereby authorized to appoint officers in said Territory to fill vacancies which may be caused by a failure to elect on the first Monday in August, 1882, in consequence of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882, to hold their offices until their successors are elected and qualified under the provisions of said act: Provided, That the term of office of any of said officers shall not exceed eight months.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, it is said that this provision gives the treasury of Utah over to Governor Murray and his appointees without any safeguards placed around it, or any demand that there shall be fidelity on the part of the officers intrusted with its custody. If that is true, then in the laws of Utah there are no guards against the dishonesty of the present officers of that Territory; for whenever an officer is appointed to fill a vacancy he takes that office under the statute, and whatever obligations are imposed upon his predecessor—who was originally elected or appointed as the case might be—apply to him as well. Is there any doubt about this fact? I appeal to the gentleman from Ohio to answer.

Mr. CONVERSE. There is doubt about it. There is no provision for giving a bond at all.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the treasurer of Utah was compelled under the Territorial law of Utah to execute a bond for the faithful discharge of his duties, that statute applies to the appointed officer. This is simply providing a new way to fill the office, and does not remove any of the guards upon the treasury, and does not lessen any of the obligations of the officer, does not remove any of the restrictions upon his power. This is all the reply I wish to make to the man's nest which the gentleman from Ohio has discovered in this amendment.

Mr. CONVERSE. I have only one thing to say in reply. I appeal to and am willing to wait for the future. I am willing my judgment should be tested by what shall take place in that Territory in the next ten or twelve months.

Mr. HISCOCK. Just one word in reply. The majority of Congress, at the other end of the Capitol and here, have adopted a policy with reference to Utah. I do not understand that that policy was established strictly upon party lines; it may have been pretty nearly, but not strictly and absolutely. And with that majority rests the responsibility. It accepted it. I say that majority that enacted and that is responsible for this legislation accepted the responsibility when it initiated and consummated the legislation, and it is entirely willing to trust to the future to vindicate it in respect to that legislation.

Mr. CONVERSE. There could have been no objection to leaving the officers in the Territory to hold the offices for the next eight months.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill having passed the House about fifteen minutes ago, and being now considered in the Senate, would it be in order to move the previous question on it in this House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR ACT.

Mr. HERR. I desire to ask unanimous consent to pass an amendment to the river and harbor act, which I will explain.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

Mr. HERR. Let me read from a letter our chairman has received from the Chief of Engineers, and I think the gentleman from Illinois will not then object.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman will not object. It only affects three small rivers.

Mr. ROBESON. The Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio, I suppose?

Mr. HERR. This is from the Chief of Engineers:

I have just discovered that the provision of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1881, relating to the acquirement of lands required for locks and dams is omitted in the act just passed, or at any rate I have not been able to find it. Can a joint resolution be passed giving authority to purchase such lands? If not, it may be that the work, especially on the river in Kentucky, where new locks and dams are required, may become impracticable. Please see and report.

I wish to say, by an oversight the clause which is usually put at the end of the river and harbor bill was omitted with reference to such purchases. It only affects perhaps three streams in the entire bill, and it would be great injustice not to have this clause added.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think if there is a river in the country which has been omitted it ought to be put in.

Mr. WILSON. If it gives no aid or relief to the Little Kanawha I object.

Mr. HERR. The gentleman from West Virginia does not object seriously, I suppose?

Mr. WILSON. I do.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 5224) to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion.

The message also informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 1612) to provide for the closing of an alley in square 751 in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, and for the relief of the Little Sisters of the Poor.

PRINTING OF AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire to submit a conference report, with the accompanying statement.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

The effect of the report is to agree to the amendment of the Senate, converting the resolution to a joint resolution, and agreeing to the appropriation proposed by the Senate for printing the Agricultural Report for the year 1881.

A. S. McCURE,
E. K. VALENTINE,
WM. M. SPRINGER.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to hear the report read.

The report of the committee of conference was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the resolution of the House of Representatives to print 300,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1881, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same, namely: "And $219,161.54, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to carry out this resolution." And also the amendment to the title of the said resolution, changing the same from a concurrent to a joint resolution; and the Senate agree to the same.

A. S. McCURE,
E. K. VALENTINE,
WM. M. SPRINGER,
Managers on the part of the House.
H. B. ANTHONY,
BENJ. HARRISON,
G. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I understand that report, the House conferees have yielded the disagreement and the resolution appropriates the whole $219,000 in addition to the sums heretofore appropriated for printing.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is absolutely correct.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. VALENTINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD BRIDGES IN GEORGIA.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. At the request of my colleague, Mr. COOK, who is absent, I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar and consider at this time the bill (H. R. No. 6683) to authorize the construction of bridges over the Ogeechee, Oconee, Ocmulgee, Flint, and Chattahoochee Rivers, in the State of Georgia, as reported with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The bill as amended will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Savannah and Pacific Short Line Railway Company be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct bridges over the Ogeechee River, in the county of Chatham; over the Oconee, in the county of Montgomery; over the Ocmulgee, in the county of Pulaski; over the Flint River, in the county of Dooly, and over the Chattahoochee River, in Stewart or Muscogee Counties, or such other county as said railroad company may desire or find most practicable in the final location of said road.

SEC. 2. That said bridges shall be so constructed, either by draw, span, or otherwise, so that a free and unobstructed passage may be secured to all vessels and other water-craft navigating said rivers.

SEC. 3. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States, or passengers or freight passing over said bridges, than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroad or public highways leading to the said bridges; and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States.

SEC. 4. That if any of the said bridges authorized to be constructed by this act shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, the draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats; and said company or corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset till sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge or bridges as the Light-House Board shall prescribe. No bridge shall be erected or maintained under the authority of this act which shall at any time substantially or materially obstruct the free navigation of said river; and if any bridge erected under such authority shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, obstruct such navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction; and all such obstructions shall be removed and alterations made at the expense of the owner or owners of said bridge: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers, or to exempt this bridge, erected under this act, from the operation of the same.

SEC. 5. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use, shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War, upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

SEC. 6. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said rivers as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War a design and drawings of said bridges to be erected, for his examination and approval, and a map of its location, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject, and in all things shall be subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War; and until said plan and location of said bridge or bridges are approved by the Secretary of War, said bridge or bridges shall not be built; and should any change be made in the plan of any bridge authorized to be constructed by this act, during the progress of the work of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 7. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved; and the right to require any changes in said structures, or their entire removal, at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration at this time of the bill just read?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I would like to inquire if that bill has been reported from any committee of this House?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. It has been before the Committee of Commerce of this House, and reported favorably by that committee.

Mr. WILLIS, (to Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio.) Reported from your own committee.

Mr. COX, of New York. It is a good bill, I am told.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the House Calendar and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EDWARD BELLOWES.

Mr. RAY. I desire to ask unanimous consent to have considered at this time the bill a copy of which I send to the Clerk's desk. It is the only bill which I have asked unanimous consent to have considered. I most respectfully ask that it may be considered now. It is a bill (H. R. No. 5674) for the relief of Edward Bellows.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Edward Bellows, upon the 18th day of July, in the year of our Lord 1866, was, by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of Senate, duly appointed and commissioned a paymaster in the Navy of the United States from the 20th day of February, A. D. 1866; and

Whereas, on the 28th day of January, A. D. 1869, the Secretary of the Navy issued an order declaring that said Bellows was dismissed the naval service, declared in such order of dismissal to be "in consequence of the facts appearing upon the record of the naval court-martial before which he was tried, in November, 1868;" and

Whereas, on the 23d day of January, A. D. 1880, the President of the United States, through the Secretary of the Navy, after investigation of the facts in the case, determined and issued an order declaring that said order of dismissal was illegal and void, and annulled and revoked, because issued contrary to the provisions of section 1624, article 36, page 282, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the name of said Edward Bellows was thereupon, by order of the President, restored to the list of paymasters on the Naval Register, next after that of Paymaster George A. Lyon, being the original relative position held by him on that list, and to which he is entitled by virtue of his commission, which position on said list the said Bellows has ever since held and now holds; and

Whereas, on the 16th day of March, A. D. 1869, while the said order of dismissal remained upon the records unrevoked, the President of the United States, under the mistaken belief that said order of dismissal was valid and according to law, and that the same caused a vacancy, by reason of said dismissal, in the list of paymasters, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appointed Leonard A. Frailey paymaster in the Navy, declaring such appointment to be "vice Bellows, dismissed;" and

Whereas by a recent decision and judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Charles M. Blake vs. The United States, (13 Otto, page 227,) said decision makes questionable the right of said Bellows to hold said office; and Whereas, including the said Bellows, the present number of paymasters does not exceed the number now allowed by law: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to nominate and, with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint the said Edward Bellows paymaster in the Navy of the United States, to take rank and position on the list of such paymasters in the position where his name now stands on the Register as above stated: Provided, That such appointment shall not entitle the said Edward Bellows to compensation during the time his name was not borne on said list, and during which he was not recognized as a paymaster in the service: Provided further, That after such appointment the said Edward Bellows shall be entitled to longevity pay upon his said commission of date February 20, 1866.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just read?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is so much noise and confusion in the Hall, and it is now so late, that it is almost impossible to legislate intelligently. I think, therefore, this bill should go over, and I will call for the regular order.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. RAY said: I understand that my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] simply desires to have explained, so that he may understand its purport, the bill which I called up a moment ago. I respectfully ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, [Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts,] from which committee it is unanimously reported, to make a brief statement in relation to it, because I think if it is understood by gentlemen of this House there will be no objection to it. It will take not a dollar out of the Treasury, and it will not add a single officer to the number now in service. By reason of a decision of the Supreme Court recently made, it is necessary to pass this bill in order to enable this man to get his pay in the office to which he has been appointed and confirmed.

Mr. MCCOOK. Does it not give him longevity pay from 1866?

Mr. RAY. It gives him no pay for the time he was out of office in consequence of the illegal finding of a court-martial. It simply leaves him where he stood before; that is all.

Mr. ARMFIELD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask for the consideration at this time of the two resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or such sub-committees as they may designate, are hereby authorized to sit during vacation for the purpose of considering and facilitating the proper business of the committee, in advance of the next regular session, to be convened at such time as the chairman of said committee may order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not distinctly hear the resolution as it was read.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is simply a resolution authorizing the Committee on Appropriations or its sub-committee to sit during the vacation, before the convening of the next regular session, for the purpose of facilitating public business, such as preparing the regular appropriation bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. That and nothing more.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is all in this resolution. I ask that the other resolution be now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be authorized to have printed or bound all documents for the use of said committee that they may deem necessary in connection with subjects in relation to appropriations being considered or to be considered by the said committee during the present Congress.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is the usual resolution.

The resolutions were adopted.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to say that at the request of many gentlemen, and after explanation by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORK] of the proposition submitted by him in relation to the river and harbor bill, I will withdraw my objection to its consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] to object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House now adjourn, unless the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HISCOCK] desires to have it remain in session for some particular purpose.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has gone to ascertain the condition of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

PENSIONS FOR MEXICAN AND FLORIDA WARS.

Mr. McMILLIN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions:

Whereas there have been introduced and referred to the Committee on Pensions several general bills granting pensions to the volunteers of the Mexican war and the widows of such as have died; and

Whereas this House has been in session about eight months, and the said committee has failed to act on or report back any of said bills: Therefore,
Be it resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be, and hereby is, instructed to report back within ten days a bill to pension the volunteers of the Mexican and Florida wars, and the widows of such as have died.

FEES OF OFFICERS IN NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I am requested to ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time the bill, (S. No. 2002,) passed by the Senate this evening, to extend the act regulating the fees of certain officers over the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona. I will ask that the bill be read, and will then make a brief statement by way of explanation.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the act of the Congress of the United States entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1853, and section 837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, is extended to the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and shall apply to the fees of all officers in such Territories; but the district attorney shall not, by fees and salary together, receive more than $3,500 per year; and all fees or moneys received by him above said amount shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before this bill is taken up I wish to ask my friend from Michigan two questions: first, what is the effect of this increase of fees upon the amount drawn from the Treasury; and, secondly, whether $3,500 is the sum now fixed by law as the maximum compensation of the district attorney, or whether this is an increase?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Chapter 16 of the Revised Statutes fixes the fees of United States marshals and district attorneys. Section 837 of that chapter provides as follows:

That the district attorneys and marshals for the districts of Oregon and Nevada shall be entitled to receive for the like services double the fees herein provided for.

That provision was inserted because of the expense of living in those States.

Mr. HOLMAN. There was a limitation upon the salaries, I believe.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. There is a limitation in the existing law, and also in the bill now proposed. The object of the bill is simply to apply the provisions of this section to the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona. For instance, the fee bill fixes five cents per mile as the general allowance for service of process, but in these exceptional localities ten cents per mile is allowed. I hold in my hand a letter of the Attorney-General, which I ask may be read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. We now have before the Committee on the Judiciary a question akin to this. As at present advised, I could not consent to the allowance of double fees for officers in those Territories. The fact is there is before our committee a general measure regulating the fees of all these officers throughout the country.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I hope the gentleman will allow the letter of the Attorney-General to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
 Washington, June 20, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter from A. L. Morrison, United States marshal for the Territory of New Mexico. From his statement you will see that the fees now allowed by law for the service of process is not sufficient to assure a proper administration of the law.

I have issued very stringent orders to prohibit constructive fees of all kinds, as you will see by the circular-letter herewith inclosed, a copy of which has been transmitted to every marshal and attorney in the United States.

Without charging constructive mileage as heretofore, I have reason to believe that the laws cannot be executed and order maintained in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona. I believe it would be more economical, besides insuring better service, to have the fees increased, as requested in my letter of the 17th of April last, than to permit the marshals in these Territories to cover actual expenses by the presentation of fictitious accounts.

In the interest, therefore, of public economy and of a just administration of the law, which it appears cannot be executed under the present fee-bill, I respectfully invite your attention to this inclosure, together with my letter to Hon. THOMAS B. REED, chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, above referred to.

I have been advised that you have this bill in charge, for which reason I have addressed this communication to you.

Very respectfully,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
 Attorney-General.

Hon. JOHN A. LOGAN, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
 Washington, May 12, 1882.

SIR: I have received your letter of 22d April, together with the report of Special Agents Tidball and Bowman, of this Department, relative to the conduct of Stillwell H. Russell, esq., late United States marshal, in rendering false actual-expense accounts.

By charging fare over railroads where the marshal has used passes, and by other dishonest practices of a similar character in the preparation of actual-expense accounts by those connected with the marshal's office, the United States has been defrauded out of thousands of dollars. In view of the enormity of these frauds, and my determination not only to purge the service of the men who committed them, but to make their example a warning to others, you are instructed to prosecute with all the rigor of the law not only the marshal but his several deputies who are shown by the special agents' reports to be implicated with him in these unlawful transactions.

There are several positive violations of law on the part of deputy marshals charging for mileage never traveled and for guards never employed, and on the part of private bankers in receiving on deposit warrants for public moneys, in violation of the Revised Statutes. It is my desire and purpose that every man who has violated the law and defrauded this Department shall be vigorously prosecuted and severely punished.

Very respectfully,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
 Attorney-General.

ANDREW J. EVANS, Esq.,
 United States Attorney, Austin, Texas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONVERSE. This bill simply places the officers of New Mexico and Arizona upon the same footing as those in Washington and the other Territories of the United States. I do not see any objection to the passage of the bill. It is right in itself; it ought to be passed, and passed now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio the effect of this proposition as to the increase of these salaries.

Mr. CONVERSE. The bill simply puts these salaries upon an equal footing with those of similar officers in the other Territories.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much higher are these salaries than those of similar officers in the States?

Mr. CONVERSE. I am not able to state accurately. I think they are not higher in the aggregate, but the fees per mile are somewhat higher. I think that in the aggregate these officers do not get as much as similar officers in the States receive for corresponding services.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I will ask my colleague on the Judiciary Committee [Mr. CONVERSE] whether a bill covering this subject is not now pending before our committee?

Mr. CONVERSE. That bill embraces the whole subject, but this bill is right and should be passed now.

Mr. COX, of New York. I object. Now I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. PEELE. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw the motion to adjourn till I can call up a Senate bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. I withdraw the motion to adjourn, and also my objection to this bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. Now I renew the motion to adjourn.

BRANNIN, SUMMERS & CO.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 522) for the relief of Brannin, Summers & Co. The gentleman who objected to this bill heretofore has withdrawn his objection. It has been favorably reported in five successive Congresses.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that gentlemen should not insist upon legislation of this character under the present circumstances. I must call for the regular order.

PAY OF COMMITTEE CLERKS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BREWER] desires to submit some privileged reports.

Mr. BREWER, from the Committee on Accounts, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the resolution of this House, passed on the 26th of January, 1882, authorizing the appointment of clerks of committees, be amended so as to authorize their payment for the period which has elapsed since the close of the last fiscal year, by striking from it the words "within the present fiscal year."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. How did my bill get out of the way?

The SPEAKER. The regular order was demanded.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; I demanded the regular order of business.

We are not in a condition to do business. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. BREWER. I hope not until I can submit a report from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order of business.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I made the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ROBESON. Let us take a recess for five minutes until the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations returns from the Senate.

Mr. BREWER. I ask the Clerk to read the resolution which I submit from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution of the House of March 3, 1882, providing for the appointment of twelve additional laborers in the House folding-room for the purpose of folding speeches be so amended as to further extend the services of their employment for sixty days; and the six men employed in the House post-office during the session only, be continued for the same period.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order, unless the motion to adjourn is insisted on.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have insisted on the motion to adjourn all the time.

Mr. ROBESON. I trust the gentleman from New York will not insist on his motion to adjourn; and if he will withdraw it I will move the House take a recess for five minutes.

Mr. COX, of New York. I insist on the motion to adjourn. The House refused to adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move to take a recess for ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to cut off the consideration of the resolution of the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; I do. I think the last clause may be correct; but taking it together I cannot consent to it.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on the motion that the House take a recess.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 30.

Mr. PEELLE. I ask to take up a bill for consideration.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, as the House is dividing on the motion that the House take a recess.

Mr. BERRY. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers Mr. BERRY and Mr. HOLMAN.

The House proceeded to a further division.

Mr. BERRY. I withdraw the point that no quorum voted.

The SPEAKER. Then the noes have it and the House refuses to take a recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced the passage of a bill (S. No. 2164) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe, in which concurrence was requested.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, FORT WAYNE, INDIANA.

Mr. PEELLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 670, to provide for the construction of a public building at Fort Wayne, Indiana. Before the bill is read I ask to make a statement.

Mr. BERRY. Of course subject to objection.

Mr. PEELLE. Subject to objection, as a matter of course.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter in which my colleague [Mr. COLERICK] is more interested than myself, but in consequence of sickness in his family he has been called home three or four times this session, and has not had the opportunity of getting the bill up on suspension day, as like bills have been called up and passed. I promised to do what I could in his absence to get the bill up, but could not succeed, and now to make good my promise I ask the present consideration of the Senate bill No. 670.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise procure a suitable site for a public building, which site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space not less than fifty feet, including streets and alleys, and cause to be erected thereon, at the city of Fort Wayne, in the State of Indiana, a substantial and commodious public building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use of the United States district and circuit courts, internal-revenue service, post-office, and other Government offices; the plans, specifications, and estimates for said building having first been prepared, examined, and approved as required by section 3734 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, upon calculations and specifications that will insure the completion of the building at a cost not to exceed the sum of $100,000: Provided, That no money to be appropriated for said building shall be used until a valid title to the site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Indiana shall have ceded to the United States jurisdiction over the same for all purposes, during the time the Government shall be or remain the owner thereof, except for the enforcement of the criminal laws of the State and the service of civil process therein.

SEC. 2. That for the purposes above mentioned the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEELLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now call for the regular order of business, whatever it may be.

Mr. EVINS. I now ask to take a bill from the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as a bill has just been passed for the erection of a public building in my own State, I shall not object to the next bill on that subject. Then I shall insist on an adjournment.

Mr. WILLIS. I appeal to the gentleman to allow this bill to come up.

Mr. RICE, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I insist upon recognition right here—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. EVINS. I ask unanimous consent of the House, Mr. Speaker, to take up for present consideration from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 1014) providing for the erection of a public building at Greenville, South Carolina, and put it upon its passage. I ask also to have the report read to the House. This bill has been reported twice to the House unanimously by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I am satisfied if gentlemen will wait to hear the report read they will withhold any objection they might otherwise feel inclined to make.

Mr. RAY. I desire to reserve all objections to the bill until it is read.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. HISCOCK, and Mr. HARRIS of Massachusetts, objected.

Mr. SMALLS. I hope gentlemen will not object to that bill, but will allow the report to be read at least.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. ROBESON. We tried to-day to get through a bill for a public building at Augusta, Maine, in behalf of a gentleman who has necessarily been absent from the House on account of sickness, and it was objected to.

Mr. EVINS. I did not object. I ask that the report may be read, and I believe there will be consent to the request I make.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has moved that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that motion, but will allow me to make a motion for a recess for thirty minutes.

Mr. EVINS. I hope the House will treat me fairly in this matter. Every gentleman introducing a bill of this kind has had the privilege at all events of having the report read.

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made by several gentlemen.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent leave to print was granted as follows:

To Mr. SMALLS, upon the Senate amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill in reference to coaling stations at Port Royal, South Carolina;

To Mr. SHALLENBERGER, in reference to public buildings; and

To Mr. STRAIT, to print the report accompanying House bill No. 835. [See Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman from Indiana having withdrawn his objection now, and as I was the only one caught in that uprise, I hope I will have an opportunity of securing the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House take a recess for thirty minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I have already made a motion that the House adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that, as we ought to know the action of the Senate upon the conference report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. When will that information be obtained?

Mr. HISCOCK. It may not be in an hour.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Very well, I will withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ROBESON. Then I move that the House take a recess for thirty minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to amend the motion by making the recess extend until ten o'clock on Monday morning.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, let me make a suggestion in connection with my motion, and I think it will meet the approval of the House. I ask unanimous consent that we take a recess for thirty minutes, and that upon convening no business shall be transacted except to receive messages from the Senate or from the President, and, if there shall be necessity, the appointment of conferees upon disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Several MEMBERS. There is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to add, with power to take a recess until some hour on Monday morning if desired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will couple that suggestion with my request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from New York that he further include the reception of reports from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to know what business will be in order after the subsequent recess on Monday morning?

Mr. HISCOCK. Anything.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is all right, then; I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess for thirty minutes.

The recess having expired, the House (at eleven o'clock p. m.) resumed its session.

Mr. HISCOCK. Would it be in order to move another recess?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House take a recess for thirty minutes.

The motion was agreed to, and accordingly (at eleven o'clock and one minute p. m.) the House took a further recess for thirty minutes.

The recess having expired, the House (at eleven o'clock and thirty-one minutes p. m.) resumed its session.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I ask unanimous consent that the House take a further recess for fifteen minutes.

Mr. WILSON. I object.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I would like to inquire, Mr. Speaker, if the last few minutes have developed any probability that there will be an agreement upon the pending appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to answer the question.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand there is little progress being made; and as the object is to get the sundry civil bill enrolled, I do not see any necessity for remaining in session longer to-night unless there is some assurance that a report will be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. If there was any assurance that within a reasonable time, even two or three hours, that purpose could be accomplished, I should certainly not object to continuing in session. But there is no indication, as far as I am aware, of any report coming to the House to-night.

Mr. RYAN. I think there will be a report soon, probably within half an hour.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There is a limit to human endurance.

Mr. HOLMAN. We had better take a recess for half an hour if there is a probability of the bill coming over from the Senate.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again submit the question to the House. Is there objection to a further recess for thirty minutes?

There was no objection; and accordingly (at eleven o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House took a further recess for thirty minutes.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at twelve o'clock and ten minutes a. m., (Sunday, August 6.)

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House take a recess for fifteen minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and the House took a recess accordingly.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 12.25 a. m.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House take a recess until ten o'clock on Monday morning.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will there be anything gained by that over an adjournment to eleven o'clock?

Mr. HISCOCK. There would be this gained, that we would be in session to receive the sundry civil bill, have it enrolled and sent to the President.

Mr. HOLMAN. Only an hour would be gained by that.

Mr. HISCOCK. There would be this further gain, that if by any chance there should be a disagreement of the Senate to the conference report we would have an hour's more time.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would ask the gentleman from New York whether it would not be better to take a recess until half past nine o'clock?

Mr. HISCOCK. I think not.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at twelve o'clock and twenty-seven minutes a. m., Sunday, August 6) the House took a recess till ten o'clock a. m. on Monday.

MORNING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at ten a. m., (Monday, August 7.)

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS.

Mr. SPRINGER. On Saturday I asked unanimous consent to have passed the bill (H. R. No. 6841) to authorize the purchase of additional grounds for the United States court-house and post-office building at Springfield, Illinois. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] then objected. He now withdraws his objection, and I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that some bills are ready to be presented for enrollment in a few moments.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I do not insist upon the motion.

THOMAS G. CORBIN.

Mr. CURTIN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 14) for the relief of Thomas G. Corbin.

Mr. HISCOCK. I must object.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman allow the bill to be read?

Mr. HISCOCK. Let the bill be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to restore Thomas G. Corbin, now a captain on the retired list of the Navy, provided that he successfully pass the required examination, to the active list of the Navy, to take rank next after Rear-Admiral J. W. A. Nicholson, with restitution from December 12, 1873, to November 15, 1881, of the difference of pay between that of a captain retired on half pay and that of a commodore on the active list on waiting-orders pay, and with restitution from November 15, 1881, of the difference of pay between that of a captain retired on half pay and that of a rear admiral on the active list on waiting-orders pay, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Let the report be read.

Mr. CURTIN. I send to the desk the report of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, recommending the passage of a similar bill, and ask that it be read.

Mr. KNOTT. Does this bill authorize the restoration of this officer to the active list of the Navy as a rear-admiral?

Mr. CURTIN. No, sir; it does not. The report is very full; let it be read.

The report was read in part.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania one question. The object of this bill is, as I understand, to override the decision of the examining board, and by an act of Congress to give a construction to the act of 1864.

Mr. CURTIN. It is really as I understand to restore the construction heretofore given to that act.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Under those circumstances I must object.

Mr. CURTIN. I may state that I am calling this up on behalf of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] who is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and who requested me before he went away to call it up. If the gentleman would listen to the report of Secretary Hunt, I think he would not insist on his objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 5812) to establish post-routes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH EUROPE.

Mr. WILLITS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 2164) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe.

Mr. MILLS. I move to take up the post-route bill just received from the Senate. It will only take a moment.

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope the bill called up by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WILLITS] will be put upon its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is a measure of public concern, and if it be agreed that after passing that bill the House will adjourn till eleven o'clock, I will not interpose an objection.

Mr. COX, of New York. I wish to say that that bill reduces the rates of ocean telegraphy to twenty cents a word. It is against the combination.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That Samuel L. M. Barlow and Orazio Lugo, of New York, and Albert G. Buzby, W. Mitchell McAllister, and John H. Colton, of Pennsylvania, their associates, successors, and assigns, shall have the right to construct, lay, land, and maintain a line or lines of telegraph or submarine cables on the Atlantic coast of the United States of America, to connect the American and European coasts by telegraphic lines, wires, or submarine cables: Provided, That said company shall begin to lay said cable or cables within two years from the passage of this act: And provided further, That no amalgamation, combination to establish rates, union, or sale of cable interests established under this act, shall be made to any European or other cable companies, nor shall there be any fictitious increase or watering of stock; and any violation of the provision of this section shall work a forfeiture of all rights thereunder.

SEC. 2. That any telegraphic line or cable laid shall be subject to the following conditions, stipulations, and reservation, to wit:

First. The Government of the United States shall be entitled to exercise and enjoy the same or similar privileges with regard to the control and use of such line or lines, or cable or cables, as there may, by law, agreement, or otherwise, be exercised and enjoyed by any foreign government whatever; and, in addition, the United States Government shall have the right to the exclusive use of a wire at such time or times as they may require, not to exceed four hours out of every twenty-four, and at such rates as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, but not to exceed twenty cents per word nor less than ten cents per word; and the rates charged upon said line for messages for individuals shall not exceed twenty cents for each word.

Secondly. Citizens of the United States shall enjoy the same privileges as to the payment of rates for the transmission of messages as are enjoyed by the citizens of any other nation.

Thirdly. The transmission of dispatches shall be made in the following order: First, dispatches of state, under such regulations as may be agreed upon by the governments interested, the rates not to exceed those charged to individuals; secondly, dispatches on telegraphic service; and, thirdly, private dispatches.

Fourthly. The lines of any such cables shall be kept open to the public for the daily transmission of market and commercial reports and intelligence, and all messages, dispatches, and communications shall be forwarded in the order in which they are received, except as hereinbefore provided.

Fifthly. Before extending and establishing any such line or lines, or cable or cables, in or over any waters, reefs, islands, shores, and lands within the jurisdiction of the United States, a written acceptance of the terms and conditions imposed by this act shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State by the parties above named, or a majority of them, their associates, successors, or assigns, or by the company or corporation which may be organized to construct and operate cables under this act.

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be construed to limit the United States in granting to other persons or companies similar privileges to those herein contained.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time is hereby reserved to Congress, including the right to fix rates by a general law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has just been read?

Mr. O'NEILL. I want to ask a question. I notice that by this bill the reduction of the rates per word is a very great reduction from the present rates. I believe the rates now are fifty-eight cents per word?

Mr. COX, of New York. Fifty cents per word.

Mr. O'NEILL. And sixty-two cents per word to Italy, for instance. Now it strikes me as very singular that a body of men can desire to be incorporated into a cable company and guarantee that they will not charge more than twenty cents per word. It does not look to me that these men design to build this cable line, but intend merely to give notice to these other companies in some way. I will not oppose the bill, and I shall rejoice in the reduction of rates, if it is to be genuine.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. WILLITS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will permit the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] to be recognized for the purpose of moving concurrence in the amendments of the Senate to the post-route bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to call up from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 5812) to establish post-routes, returned from the Senate with amendments. The bill has been examined, and there is no legislation in it. I move that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

There was no objection, and the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. LATHAM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 28) for the relief of John G. Abercrombie;

A bill (H. R. No. 2299) relinquishing the title which still remains in the United States to all lots or portions of ground which lie within the limits of the present city of Burlington, State of Iowa, to the said city of Burlington;

A bill (H. R. No. 3414) granting a pension to Sarah J. Cameron;

A bill (H. R. No. 4684) to amend section 4400 of title 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulation of steam-vessels;

A bill (H. R. No. 4594) authorizing full pay to Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, United States Army, while on leave to serve in command of the Franklin search expedition in the Arctic;

A bill (H. R. No. 4888) increasing the pension of John F. Ellis;

A bill (H. R. No. 6249) granting an increase of pension to Joseph F. Wilson;

A bill (H. R. No. 6265) donating cannon and cannon-balls to Post No. 14 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Logansport, Indiana, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6517) authorizing compensation to members of Company B, Fourteenth Infantry, for private property destroyed by fire on the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad;

A bill (H. R. No. 6593) donating condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 205) granting the use of tents at a soldiers' reunion to be held by the Soldiers' Reunion Association of the State of Illinois in the year 1882;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 254) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer to "Tip" Best Post No. 75, Grand Army of the Republic, of Montrose, Iowa, one piece of condemned cast-iron cannon (and cannon-balls) for monumental purposes; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 263) granting the use of tents at soldiers' reunions to be held in the State of Iowa in the year 1882.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAINT CROIX RIVER, MAINE.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] would withhold that motion for a moment. There is a very important bill on the Speaker's table from the Senate relating to the building of a bridge over the Saint Croix River between Calais, Maine, and Saint Stephen's, New Brunswick. I ask the gentleman to permit my colleague [Mr. MURCH] to call up that bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will yield for a bridge bill.

Mr. MURCH. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time the bill (S. No. 1787) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Saint Croix River between the city of Calais, Maine, and Saint Stephen's, New Brunswick.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. MURCH. The provisions of this bill are so plain and guarded that I do not think any explanation is necessary.

Mr. DINGLEY. The bill is all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration at this time of the bill which has just been read?

Mr. SIMONTON. I object.

Mr. DINGLEY. This bill has all the ordinary provisions and guards contained in similar bills passed this session. It simply authorizes the construction of a bridge across the Saint Croix River between the State of Maine and the province of New Brunswick. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. SIMONTON. I do not withdraw it, and call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

STATE, WAR, AND NAVY DEPARTMENT BUILDING.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the appointment, as members on the part of the House of the joint select committee authorized by law to make examinations of the State, War, and Navy Department building and to set apart such portions thereof for the use and occupancy of the State, War, and Navy Departments, respectively, as authorized by law, of Mr. CANNON of Illinois, Mr. HISCOCK of New York, and Mr. ATKINS of Tennessee.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. DAWES asked and obtained consent to have printed in the RECORD as a portion of the debates of this House some remarks prepared by him on the bill to establish diplomatic relations with Persia. [See Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now insist on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. O'NEILL. It would be a great waste of time to adjourn now.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think it would be a great saving of time and money.

Mr. O'NEILL. We might as well use the half hour in passing bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. Nothing can be done except by unanimous consent.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and upon a division there were—ayes 32, noes 21.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being 32 in the affirmative, more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 67, nays 42, not voting 180; as follows:

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Pending the announcement of the result,
 Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:
 A bill (S. No. 249) for the relief of Helen M. Scholefield;
 A bill (S. No. 1612) to provide for the closing of an alley in square 751 in the city of Washington, District of Columbia;
 A bill (S. No. 2002) to extend the act regulating the fees of certain officers over the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona;
 A bill (S. No. 2172) to amend section 4702, title 57, Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes;
 A bill (H. R. No. 3489) for the relief of certain laborers employed upon the Government works; and A bill (H. R. No. 5812) to establish post-routes.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire leave to print in the RECORD some remarks (which I have not yet been able to prepare, because I have been awaiting the receipt of certain data) on the finances of the Government and internal taxation.

There being no objection, leave was granted. [See Appendix.]

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and fifty-seven minutes a. m., Monday, August 7) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of Seth Driggs, relating to the Venezuela award claims—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, the petition of E. C. Cheek, relative to the official conduct of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. AINSLIE: The petition of John T. Morgan and others, of Idaho Territory, for the repeal of the law imposing taxes on banks, bankers, and banking institutions and the two-cent stamp on bank checks—to the same committee.

By Mr. BROWNE: The petition of 20 citizens of the seventh Congressional district of Indiana, for the confirmation of the call for a peace congress to be held in Washington, District of Columbia, in November, 1882—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. S. S. FARWELL: The petition of over 1,500 citizens of Davenport, Iowa, protesting against the passage of any bill requiring tolls to be levied for the use of the Government bridges and roadways between Davenport, Iowa, and Rock Island, Illinois—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HOUK: The petition of Thomas Anderson, of Knox County, Tennessee, for compensation for property taken by the United States Army during the late rebellion—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. G. W. JONES: The petition of M. J. Maltby, for a pension—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE: The petition of George Rader, relative to Swift's Silver Mine, in the State of Kentucky—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

SENATE.

MONDAY, August 7, 1882.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

On motion of Mr. HALE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was dispensed with.

ELIZA H. RAMSAY.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. No. 2132) granting a pension to Eliza H. Ramsay.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It places on the pension-roll the name of Eliza H. Ramsay, widow of Brigadier-General George D. Ramsay, United States Army, at the rate of $50 a month.

Mr. BECK. Is that a unanimous report?

Mr. HALE. There is a divided report simply on the technical ground that General Ramsay did not die in the service, but the matter has been considered fully, and there is no objection to the bill now, as I understand.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPORT TAX ON TOBACCO.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask for the consideration of the resolution which I introduced on Saturday.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator give way until I can pass the bill (H. R. No. 3854) to repeal so much of section 3385 of the Revised Statutes as imposes an export tax on tobacco?

Mr. BUTLER. With the understanding that I shall have the floor immediately on the passage of the bill indicated by the Senator from Vermont, I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from South Carolina when this matter is disposed of.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to take up House bill No. 3854.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3854) to repeal so much of section 3385 of the Revised Statutes as imposes an export tax on tobacco.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL. There was an amendment reported to the title of the bill. I do not desire to have that amendment agreed to, but let it be non-concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will stand as the bill came from the House, and the amendment to the title will be non-concurred in.

EXTRA PAY TO EMPLOYÉES.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the consideration of the joint resolution which I introduced on Saturday.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the Senator from South Carolina allow me to make a formal motion?

Mr. BUTLER. I have yielded once already. This will take but a moment, and it is important to pass it now if it is to be passed at all.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) providing one month's extra pay for certain employes of the Senate.

Mr. RANSOM. I hope that the Senator from South Carolina will consent to a substitute for that, allowing this compensation to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. Let the substitute be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

Mr. RANSOM. I will withdraw it. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] tells me it cannot be paid in that way.

Mr. PLUMB. When this resolution was offered on Sunday morning—

Mr. BAYARD. Were you here then?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Delaware asks me if I was here then. I was, to my discredit I have no doubt. I objected then to its consideration; but I propose now to withdraw any objection to its passage, for the reasons I shall state. I am opposed to it on principle. I do not believe it ought to pass. I believe that we are the subjects of solicitation in regard to salaries here, which is contrary to the proprieties of the situation, and which induces us to forget the obligations of the places we hold.

We would not give this extra pay to men who are a thousand miles away. We give it to men who pursue us, who urge us, who beg us, who threaten us in point of fact; because after I made that objection the other night I was substantially threatened here; at least I was spoken to in a very ungentlemanly way in regard to it by persons who were affected by the resolution.

I want to say now that I think myself any one who accepts employment here, which is well paid for, ought to be satisfied with the pay he gets and contracts to receive; and I will never under any circumstances vote to extend the pay of any employé in this body hereafter. I believe that the annual employes are more entitled to it than the per diem employes, because the per diem employes receive simply pay as they are employed, while the annual employes are to some extent of course governed in their anticipations by the ordinary length of the session, and might well say, as we have staid here inexcusably for two or three months beyond the usual time, that they ought to have more pay than was originally stipulated for.

But it is vicious from the beginning. We pay more salary, we pay more per diem than is paid anywhere else for similar employment under the Government; more than is paid anywhere else for similar employment in private callings. It is inexcusable and a shameful waste of the public money. We do it not because we think we ought to do it; but we do it because we are beset by the importunities of the men who surround us and because we have not the courage to look these men in the face and say we will not give it to them.

So far as I am concerned, premitting now my objection to this proceeding, I want to say that regarding it as wasteful, regarding it as practically criminal, I shall never consent to it hereafter, and I shall never vote that any employé of either House shall have any salary that is not named by law rather than be subject to the contingency of the whim or the immediate feeling of either House in regard to what the salary shall be. There is no reason in the world why the salaries of the Senate employes and of the House employes should not be fixed by law the same as those of the employes in all the Executive Departments are fixed.

It is simply dodging the responsibility we are under here to say that because the House has done this thing we will do it too. That is no justification whatever. If the House say that under the particular circumstances and particular reasons, leaving the point to them, their employes shall have a month's pay, that does not relieve us from the responsibility of saying whether or not under the particular circumstances attached to our employes they ought to have it. I say here and now that I am opposed to it and shall oppose it hereafter for all time.

I want to say one other thing. We have adopted the principle of increasing the compensation of all of our employes in every department of the Government upon every possible occasion and excuse. We have never cut down, so far as I know, the compensation of one single employé. No matter whether wages outside were high or whether wages were low, whether the Treasury was full or whether the Treasury was empty, we have used every occasion to increase the compensation of the men who serve the Government. The compensation of men in the service of the Government is from 25 to 50 per cent. higher than the compensation paid for similar employment elsewhere. To that extent, it is a robbery of the Treasury. I never will vote for the increase of the pay of any Government employé beyond the scale of compensation paid employes outside, and I shall vote always and on all occasions for a reduction to the proper compensation of all employes in every branch of the Government.

It is time that we made an issue upon this thing. We are establishing an official class who regard themselves as privileged; who resent every proposition to reduce their salaries; who hang around these corridors and pursue us in every way with importunity, with impure and corrupt suggestions in regard to the increase of their compensation; and who bring to bear everything in regard to influence, everything in regard to favors in the different departments for the purpose of increasing their compensation. It is vicious in legislation; it is vicious in practice; it is corrupting to the last degree; and so far as I am concerned now and once for all, I have done with it.

Mr. BUTLER. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Kansas for withdrawing his objection to the resolution, and I ask that there may be a vote on it.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to ascertain what this specific resolution is. I want to say with reference to the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina—

Mr. RANSOM. I beg to inform the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that I have withdrawn my amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg pardon. Then it is a joint resolution of the two Houses.

Mr. BUTLER. It is in the form of a joint resolution. I ask a vote on the resolution.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to say that I concur entirely and fully with the remarks made by the Senator from Kansas. If the salaries of the employes are not high enough, let us raise them. I believe the practice of giving extra compensation is vicious, as stated by him. It is a pure gift out of the Treasury. I do not believe that we have the power to give the people's money away for nothing, and I shall vote against the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER. All I ask is that we may have a vote upon it.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say that after what occurred on Saturday night, and the information given us of the House having paid their employes, common decency requires that we should pay ours the same as they have paid theirs. Therefore I think the resolution ought to pass.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think because the House of Representatives have done a wrong that we ought to follow their evil example.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to restate what I said Saturday night. In 1881 there were two extra sessions of the Senate called, one in March and one in October, and these employes were brought here at their own expense, for which they received no extra compensation at all. Notwithstanding the severe arraignment of the Senator from Kansas and its weighty indorsement by my friend from Mississippi, I shall vote for this resolution.

Mr. BUTLER. I think I shall too, Mr. President.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. PLUMB. I call for a division on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the vote is taken I wish to notify the Senate that after it is through I shall call for the regular order of business, which is reports of committees. I hope we shall have the regular call.

The joint resolution was passed; there being on a division—ayes 25, noes 15.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President—

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senate to take up and pass the bill (H. R. No. 676) to refer the claim of the captors of the ram Albemarle to the Court of Claims. It is a House bill that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] was authorized by the Committee on the Judiciary to report favorably and recommend the passage of. I ask that it be now considered. I hope the Senator from Ohio will let it go through.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the regular call of committees, and then I shall have no objection to having the bill taken up, but the regular call of committees ought to be made first.

Mr. BAYARD. I beg the Senator's pardon, but really we could have passed this bill while the objection was being made. We all know that it is near the close of the session, I do not know how near, and it is very important that the bill should be passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have called for the regular order; I cannot waive it. I understand the proposition of the Senator from Delaware stands as soon as we get through morning business.

Mr. PLATT. If I can have the attention of the Senate and of the Senator from Ohio for a moment, I wish to make a statement. It is very necessary that we should pass a bill which has been passed by the House relating to some matters of administration in the Pension Office. I wish the Senator from Ohio would withhold his call for the regular order, so that that bill might be passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator can report it under the call.

Mr. PLATT. I have reported it, and it is on the Calendar. We ought to pass the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. But I have a bill in my hand that I am directed to report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] will be recognized after the call for morning business is through.

Mr. ROLLINS. I wish to make a report.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 5812) to establish post-roads.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 2164) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 249) for the relief of Helen M. Scholefield;
A bill (S. No. 2002) to extend the fees of certain officers over the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona;

A bill (S. No. 2172) to amend section 4702, title 57, Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 28) for the relief of John G. Abercrombie;

A bill (H. R. No. 2299) relinquishing the title which still remains in the United States to all lots or portions of ground which lie within the limits of the present city of Burlington, State of Iowa, to the said city of Burlington;

A bill (H. R. No. 3489) for the relief of certain laborers employed upon Government works;

A bill (H. R. No. 4594) authorizing full pay to Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, United States Army, while on leave to serve in command of the Franklin search expedition in the Arctic;

A bill (H. R. No. 3414) granting a pension to Sarah J. Cameron;

A bill (H. R. No. 4684) to amend section 4400 of title 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulation of steam-vessels;

A bill (H. R. No. 4888) increasing the pension of John F. Ellis;

A bill (H. R. No. 5812) to establish post-roads;

A bill (H. R. No. 6249) granting an increase of pension to Joseph F. Wilson;

A bill (H. R. No. 6265) donating cannon and cannon-balls to Post No. 14 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Logansport, Indiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 6517) authorizing compensation to members of Company B, Fourteenth Infantry, for private property destroyed by fire on the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad;

A bill (H. R. [No. 6593]) donating condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 205) granting the use of articles, tents, and so forth, at a soldiers' reunion to be held by the Soldiers' Reunion Association of the State of Illinois in the year 1882;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 254) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer to "Tip" Best Post No. 75, Grand Army of the Republic, of Montrose, Iowa, one piece of condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 263) granting the use of cannon, tents, and muskets at soldiers' reunions to be held in the State of Iowa in the year 1882.

GEORGE F. ELLIOTT.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1023) for the relief of the sureties of George F. Elliott, to report it with amendments. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. Voorhees] is anxious to have the bill passed, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The amendments of the Committee on Finance were, in line 5, to change the name "Sohngru" to "Sohngrm"; in line 6, after the word "dollars," to insert "of date of November 1, 1871;" and at the end of the bill to add:

Upon condition that the expenses incurred by the Government in prosecuting said claims shall first be paid by the defendants or their legal representatives.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow to the legal representatives of William A. Elliott, deceased, and to Louis Sohngrm, a credit of $6,000 of date of November 1, 1871, on a judgment taken and now pending against them as sureties for George F. Elliott in the United States circuit court for the southern district of Ohio, upon condition that the expenses incurred by the Government in prosecuting said claim shall first be paid by the defendants or their legal representatives.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There ought to be some explanation of that bill. It is a bill to relieve sureties. It may be all right and proper, but some of us do not know anything about it. I ask the Senator having it in charge to explain it.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let the report be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. The report is too long to be read at this time, and I can state the case in a moment. There was a judgment recovered against Sohngrm and his sureties for about $15,000 or $16,000. There was $6,000 of it for a meter which was never put in the distillery. It was suspended by the Treasury Department from 1872, I think, until recently. In the mean time the principal died and the sureties paid all that was demanded, some nine thousand and odd hundred dollars. He died leaving a small estate, a widow, and some small children. The Committee on Finance after careful examination of the question thought it was inequitable, after the lapse of ten years, to revive the claim of $6,000 against the sureties, who are in poor condition. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. Voorhees] knows more about the details, but those are the general facts.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I did not object to the bill. I only wanted an explanation before I voted.

Mr. SHERMAN. Those are the general facts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Committee on Finance.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT ATTORNEYS' FEES.

Mr. ALLISON. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations the joint resolution (H. R. No. 282) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for fees of district attorneys of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for fees of district attorneys of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, appropriating the sum of $60,000.

Mr. BECK. Is there not a communication on the subject from the Attorney-General?

Mr. ALLISON. I present two communications, one from the Attorney-General and one from the Comptroller of the Treasury:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, July 31, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor of inclosing a copy of a letter from the First Comptroller of the Treasury, dated the 29th instant, respecting the funds needed to pay the district attorneys of the United States and their assistants for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1882. You will notice that the Comptroller estimates the sum of $60,000 as necessary, in addition to the $25,000 now provided in the deficiency bill for this purpose, and states that some of these officers have not been paid for their services for six months last past.

The larger part of this deficiency was inadvertently overlooked when the original estimate was made, and is the cause of the present request. There is hardly a judicial district of the United States in which some portion of this money is not due, and for the most part the claimants are needy men, who can ill bear the necessity of a delay till the action of another session of Congress.

I earnestly appeal to your sense of justice to remedy this state of things for the relief of men who have given their labor and should have their just payment without any undue delay, and though the application comes to you late in your session it is highly desirable that you should listen to its urgency and respond to its merits by the needed appropriation.

Very respectfully,

BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
July 29, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to direct your attention to the fact that the sum of $325,000 appropriated last March for fees of United States attorneys in the year ending June 30, 1882, is all expended, and that the sum of $25,000 which is provided by the general deficiency bill now before Congress will be far short of the amount required to pay the fees now due. Some of the district attorneys have received no fees for six months, and to most of them three months' pay is due.

Accounts to the amount of $42,000 are awaiting payment, others are coming in daily, and it is estimated that in addition to the appropriations above mentioned $60,000 will be required to pay the usual ordinary accounts for services to the 30th ultimo. To this must be added the special fees due for the services of counsel in the star-route cases.

Very respectfully,

J. TARBELL,
Acting Comptroller.

Hon. BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. BECK. I consented to the reporting of that resolution very reluctantly. I do not believe the Attorney-General had any right to hold back until this time the sending in of a deficiency for his district-attorneys, his star-route attorneys, and other things, I do not know what. I shall not object to its passage, although it is bad legislation in my judgment to take up a resolution of this sort at the heel of the session, when the Attorney-General has had the year to make an estimate of the deficiency, and we were willing to provide for anything that came before us regularly. Let it go. I do not know enough about it to vote against it.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to ask leave for that committee to sit during the recess.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and leave is granted.

HEAVY ORDNANCE INVESTIGATION.

Mr. ANTHONY, on his own motion, was excused from further service upon the select committee on heavy ordnance.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to fill the vacancy, and Mr. ROLLINS was appointed.

INQUIRY AS TO LOSS OF THE JEANNETTE.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senate to pass a little House bill.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is in order. Reports of committees are being received.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must give preference to reports of committees.

Mr. ROLLINS. I have a report to make. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 278) instructing the Secretary of the Navy to convene a court of inquiry to investigate as to the circumstances of the loss of the exploring steamer Jeannette, have instructed me to report it back without amendment. I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. BECK. I cannot by any possibility hear a word. I am doing the best I can to hear.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If Senators will take their seats we shall get along better and get more business transacted. The Senator from New Hampshire asks for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution reported by him.

Mr. PLATT. I want to say something on that resolution.
Mr. ROLLINS. Is there objection made to this resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There has been no objection.
Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to hear the gentleman having charge of the resolution explain the necessity for the inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire reported the resolution.

Mr. BLAIR. Let it be read.
Mr. ROLLINS. It comes from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will it cost any money?
Mr. ROLLINS. Not at all.

Mr. BLAIR. I shall object to the resolution if it leads to debate. I do not wish it to consume the whole morning hour, as there is much other business to be attended to.

Mr. BECK. I object to everything till we are enabled to hear what is going on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. BECK. I do not object to the joint resolution. I object to the noise.

Mr. FERRY. I ask for order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will do no business until Senators are seated and conversation is suspended. [A pause.] The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] has reported a joint resolution, which has been read. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. PLATT. Now, Mr. President, I do not want to object to this resolution, but I do object to one thing, and that is that when important bills are on the Calendar already reported which the Senate should take up and pass, they should be postponed here by reports coming from committees this morning and having present consideration. For instance, I have asked the Senate to consider a pension bill which has been passed by the House and is on the Calendar. I have given notice that I would call it up. It is essential to the administration of the Pension Office. It would be a burning shame not to pass it to-day. But when I ask to take it up, morning business comes in; and when morning business comes it turns out to be reports from committees made this morning that are asking for consideration in preference to me and to this bill. I do not think that is right, and unless I can have the assurance that this bill can be taken up I propose to object to the consideration of any report made this morning.

Mr. FERRY. How can the Senator object in the morning hour?

Mr. PLATT. I can object to the consideration of any bill reported.

Mr. FERRY. Certainly the Senator can object to the consideration of a bill just reported, but not to the report being made.

Mr. PLATT. I do not object to reports being made, but I object to considering bills just reported. I do not wish to object to this particular thing.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I object to this resolution, because there is no possible necessity and can be no possible good resulting from it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware objects.

Mr. SAULSBURY subsequently withdrew his objection, and the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON SHIPPING.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back House joint resolution No. 266, and to ask for its passage now.

Mr. ROLLINS. I shall feel compelled to object to the consideration of all resolutions unless the one I have reported is considered and we have a fair understanding about these matters.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. This is not a unanimous report, but a majority report.

Mr. ROLLINS. I am disposed to insist on my rights on this floor.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will hear the resolution read. It is very important, and I hope no one will object to it.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) providing for a joint select committee to inquire into—

Mr. ROLLINS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title must be read.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I demand the reading of the resolution.

Mr. HALE. Let us have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York has a right to have the resolution reported by him read. Then the question will be submitted to the Senate whether the Senate will consider it now, and any one can object.

Mr. HALE. Let us have it read.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) providing for a joint select committee to inquire into the condition and wants of American ship-building and ship-owning interests.

Mr. HALE. I hope nobody will object to that.

Mr. ROLLINS. I withdraw objection to that, knowing what it is.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not desire to interpose an objection to the consideration of this resolution, but I wish to state that as a member of the Committee on Commerce I do not assent to its report. It provides for a committee to sit during vacation, to travel about, and have their expenses paid and a clerk employed. I do not know any necessity for it.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator think the subject is of importance enough to justify a committee sitting and having its expenses paid?

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read in full.

The resolution was read at length; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides for the appointment of a joint select committee of three Senators and six Representatives to inquire into the condition and wants of American ship-building and ship-owning interests, and to investigate the causes of the decline of the American foreign carrying trade, and to suggest any remedies which may be applied by legislation. The committee shall have authority to sit during the recess, and shall submit their report at the opening of the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress. The actual expenses of the committee, including compensation of a clerk at the rate of $6 per diem while actually employed and traveling expenses, shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. BECK. Does that come from any committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. It passed the House on Saturday, and is reported from our Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BECK. Is it a unanimous report of the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. JONAS. Mr. President—

Mr. McMILLAN. The question was asked whether this was a unanimous report. I have already stated that as a member of the Committee on Commerce I did not consent to report this joint resolution favorably.

Mr. BECK. We have had two or three committees of that sort, and they have all meant subsidy and nothing more.

Mr. McMILLAN. The subject of the resolution is perhaps an important one—

Mr. JONAS. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. McMILLAN. But the Committee on Commerce have not had any time to give it any consideration, and therefore I withhold my assent at this time. If the matter were fully considered perhaps I might assent to it.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. President, I desire, in connection with the resolution which has just been reported, to submit a petition signed by a large number of citizens of New Orleans interested in shipping in favor of the passage of this joint resolution. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The petition is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, who are interested in the shipping of the United States, believe such shipping to be of itself an important factor in the welfare of the nation, and entertain the full conviction that the foreign trade of the country is closely related to the industries of agriculture and manufacture, and that the present decline of United States tonnage has a depressing influence upon all interests of the country, beside the depriving of employment a large class of citizens who would seek the sea for a livelihood. They also believe that a revival of this interest can be facilitated by wise changes in the existing laws. They therefore respectfully ask that a committee of Congress may be appointed to consider the subject, with authority to sit during the recess and report at the next session.

Mr. HALE. This is the first time that the Senate has had any opportunity of fairly giving a chance to consider this great subject. Everybody admits that something ought to be done to help our merchant marine, and here is a provision for a joint committee that may sit and may formulate conclusions and report them to the next session of Congress, and it is of so great importance that I trust no Senator will block its passage by objecting, but that it may have free way.

Mr. BECK. I have only a word to say. We had a long and exhaustive report from a committee headed by one of the Senator's colleagues, in the House at that time, Mr. Lynch, some years ago, covering a large volume. It came to naught, except a few men hunting subsidies insisted that nothing but subsidies would do any good. I presume there is the same purpose now. The Committee on Finance have had the subject-matter before them, and the Committee on Ways and Means; resolution after resolution has been offered looking to it, and it seems as if nothing can be done. I am not going to object to this, though I can see precisely what it will come to. I think it had better be referred to the tariff commission, and let them take it in.

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. President, this resolution was not considered in the Committee on Commerce by the whole committee. Gentlemen went around and saw several members of the committee and asked leave to report it. I said that while I would not object to the reporting of the resolution I doubted the policy of it. I think this is an unnecessary committee. As a member of the Committee on Commerce I consented to the report, not binding myself to sustain the resolution when it came into the Senate. The Commerce Committee did not consider it in committee; it has not been submitted to the Commerce Committee, except by going around to members on the floor.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Of course not. The committee had no meeting on Saturday, and it could not be submitted in a formal meeting of committee, but it has been submitted to individual members of the committee and a majority of them have agreed to report it.

Mr. HALE. I understand that nobody objects.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Let us have a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CALL. I wish to say in regard to this resolution that I have introduced and had upon the Calendar of the Senate for some time a resolution asking for the appointment of a Senate committee to consider the question of the best means for the revival of American shipping. I have applied to Senators on both sides of the House time and again to give consideration to that resolution as an important subject for inquiry on the part of the Senate. The resolution was brought here at the request of prominent ship-owners in New York and in the Southern cities; but I have found a profound lethargy here on the subject.

Notwithstanding all the appeals I could make personally to Senators, I could find none who were willing to come forward and advocate the adoption of that resolution, so that a committee of the Senate competent to deal with the subject in every respect as much as a joint committee might be appointed; and no member of the Senate could be found to take interest enough in this great question, more important perhaps than any other except the tariff question, until now this joint resolution is brought in at the last hours of the session.

Mr. HALE. Is it not in the same direction that the Senator has been seeking to go, and will he not sustain it because it is in that direction?

Mr. CALL. Undoubtedly. I am simply calling attention to the fact that in the legitimate discharge of our duties as a Senate we could take no interest in this subject until a joint resolution comes from the House.

Now, I shall vote for this joint resolution, but I think it would have been more becoming to the dignity of the Senate and the proper discharge of our duty that we should have adopted the resolution which was brought here for the special action of the Senate as an organic body. I do not care for the criticisms of my honorable friend from Kentucky. A special committee of the Senate is the proper source through which the discharge of these important duties should be performed, and if the Senators upon that committee failed to discharge the duties it would be because of personal defects or want of attention in the members of that committee.

It is due to this great question of the revival of American shipping that any and every thing should be brought to bear upon its present state of decadence. I shall support the resolution, while regretting that we are to have a joint committee.

Mr. CONGER. I do not like to have the Senate adjourn with this charge against the Senators upon the Committee on Commerce, that the Senator from Florida alone of all the Senators on this floor has been urging the consideration of propositions to revive American commerce and the carrying trade. Sir, the Committee on Commerce have had a great many propositions before them looking in that direction. They have recommended measures here and they have been passed here which, in the judgment of the committee, will very largely benefit American shipping, the navigation interest, the carrying trade, the commerce of the United States. Several of those bills have been passed, notably one which has removed an obstacle in the way of the improvement of the American carrying trade in regard to the tonnage regulations, which passed here within a few days, recommended by the Committee on Commerce.

I do not know, sir, that the Senator from Florida has stood up, like Saul, a head and shoulders above every other man in favor of improving American commerce and American shipping and navigation and the carrying trade; and I have no apologies to make for the Committee on Commerce. All measures that have been presented to them have received very careful and attentive consideration.

I have no objection to this resolution; I have no objection to the appointment of six members of the House and three members of the Senate to spend in whatever way they see fit a few months or a few weeks between now and the next session of Congress; but as to whether that will result in any particular benefit to the carrying trade a good many have doubts. I am perfectly willing that it shall be tried. It will improve the carrying trade of the committee from point to point unquestionably.

Mr. HALE. If the friends of this measure will let it alone it will go through, and I hope we may have a vote upon it.

Mr. BECK. I rise to say that there are a great many of us on both sides of this Chamber who are very anxious to have a report made that will do some good toward reviving American commerce, and I claim to be one of them, and quite as earnest as is the Senator from Florida, notwithstanding he seems to think he is the only gentleman in the Senate interested in the subject. I may as well speak plainly as to the objection I have to this procedure. If this had been a regular report carefully considered by the Committee on Commerce, and brought in by the chairman of that committee after consideration, that committee concluding that this was the best mode of doing it, I should have been glad to vote for it, though I believe the regular committees of this body and of the House are able to attend to the subject. But when I see that gentlemen merely go around this floor and ask members to assent to it, and when the Senator from New York brings it in, the chairman of the protective tariff convention that met in New York last November and declared that protection was the policy and revenue the incident, and that we had to look only to building up what were called American industries by killing off everything, then I think it means subsidy and the chairmanship of the joint committee is to go to the president of that convention to carry out its will.

That is my objection to it. I want a fair committee that will look at the subject carefully; and while the Senator from New York has as much right to his views as I have to mine, yet when I remember that he was the chairman of that great protective tariff convention that met in New York and declared against what I think is the true interest of the American people in liberalizing commerce, for shutting out everything and building, as it were, a sea of fire around the United States which throws an embargo on all our commerce, and when he is to take charge of this inquiry, I do not feel so kindly to it as I would if it had come regularly from the committee and the chairman of that committee had been the man on the part of the Senate to take charge of it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. When it was suggested many months ago that Congress should appoint a joint commission to consider the question of the tariff, it was then objected that it would be utterly impossible to find a committee of either branch that could devote any time to the consideration of the tariff question, and I ask any Senator now if he believes that now in midsummer, with only two, three, or four months before the next session of Congress, it is possible to gather a committee of both branches of these two bodies who can possibly devote any time during the summer months and before the next meeting of Congress to consider this or any other question?

Mr. HALE. I do. I consider it amply feasible. I do not want to take up any time in answering questions. This subject-matter did not go to the tariff commission. The resolution creating it does not embrace this. We shall get a committee and they will report something here and we shall act upon it, and I hope it will be the dawn of a brighter day for American commerce. We have got to take some steps.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not want to object; but I desire to know what the result is to be. This proposed commission may go to Long Branch, and another cottage may be obtained for it there in addition to that occupied by the tariff commission, and so on through the watering places by the seaside and on the mountain-tops through the summer season. That is all it will amount to, I fear.

Mr. HALE. Why not let it go through, and see what it will amount to?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It will involve some expense to the Government.

Mr. HALE. Very well. Consider the magnitude of the great question involved.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator dare to make a prophecy in advance as to how much it will cost?

Mr. HALE. I will agree not to say another word if you will only allow us to have a vote.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Many of these commissions sit on the Treasury; that is about all.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has not objected. He has a right to object.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not want to stand here and antagonize the proposition by my solitary objection; but I want to call attention to it so that if the committee is appointed and makes a report of the information gathered together at the next session we may know just how much we have obtained.

Mr. HALE. We shall try to inform the gentleman.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LAPHAM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HALE. My colleague [Mr. FRYE] is absent. He is paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] If here, my colleague would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—39.

So the joint resolution was passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 6715) to correct an error in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 5224) to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion;

A bill (H. R. No. 6845) to amend the first subdivision of section 2568 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, title 34, collection of duties on imports; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) for the printing of additional copies of House Executive Document No. 47 and subsequent land laws.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 6683) to authorize the construction of bridges over Ogeechee, Oconee, Ocmulgee, Flint, and Chattahoochee Rivers, in the State of Georgia, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is now twelve o'clock. Is it the pleasure of the Senate that the morning hour be extended for the reception of morning business?

Mr. BLAIR. I object.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to bring up the tax bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] whenever morning business is through, is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CONGER. I have a report from a committee which I wish to present before the morning business closes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asked the Senate if there was objection to the morning hour being extended until the morning business is through. The Chair hearing no objection—

Mr. BLAIR. I object.

Mr. PLATT. Let me appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire. I do not object to what is strictly morning business, and I do not think the Senator from New Hampshire does, but I do object to the presentation of reports, and then having the bills reported considered.

Mr. PLUMB. That the Senator can prevent by objecting to the consideration.

Mr. PLATT. Yes. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire not to object to receiving the ordinary routine morning business.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I wish to make a report from a committee.

Mr. BAYARD. What is before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. McMILLAN] wishes to submit a report.

Mr. McMILLAN. From the Committee on Commerce—

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. McMILLAN. What do you object to?

Mr. BLAIR. I object to the extension of the morning hour.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then I move to extend the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be put, will the Senate extend the morning hour until the morning business is through?

Mr. PLATT. Strictly morning business.

Mr. McMILLAN. What is meant by "strictly morning business?"

Mr. PLATT. Reporting of bills and resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to extend the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

DEPUTY COLLECTOR AT SAN JUAN.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6103) authorizing the deputy collector of customs stationed at San Juan Island, in the Puget Sound district, to enter and clear vessels and collect duties, have instructed me to report it favorably and without amendment. I ask for its present consideration, as it will lead to no discussion and will avoid, as the committee are informed, the creation of another district.

Mr. BLAIR. I object to its present consideration.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then I withdraw the report if the objection is insisted upon. I am instructed so by the committee. I withdraw the report.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, it is utterly impossible to get any of these cases considered.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BLAIR. It is impossible to get the Calendar considered unless somebody undertakes to see that the rules are enforced. Now I propose to withdraw all objection to the reception of morning business; but I shall offer objection to the consideration of morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the Senator has a right to do.

Mr. BLAIR. So I presume.

BRIDGE ON MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. CONGER. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3825) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a ponton railway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the mouth of the Upper Iowa River, in the State of Iowa, to report it without amendment, and I request its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ALLISON. It will take but a moment. I trust my friend from New Hampshire will restrain himself for a moment.

Mr. BLAIR. I withdraw all objection I have made or can make to anything that anybody wants to do.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say to the Senate that this bill has all the restrictions and guards that any of our bridge bills have and brings it under the provision of the Revised Statutes on the subject.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPUTY COLLECTOR AT SAN JUAN.

Mr. McMILLAN. Now I present the report which I withdrew, and ask that it be considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6103) authorizing the deputy collector of customs stationed at San Juan Island, in the Puget Sound district, to enter and clear vessels and collect duties.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at five o'clock p. m., Monday, August 7, 1882.

Before any objection is made on that I desire to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to some facts that I think are pertinent to be considered now in connection with the question of adjournment.

This is the first Monday of August, the 7th day of the month. This Congress has been in session since the first Monday in December, now over eight months. It is an unusual extension of a session of Congress in a time of profound peace. There is responsibility somewhere unless the legislation which has been completed can be said to have made that extension necessary and be of sufficient importance to have warranted it. We have been here for over eight months exercising our privileges of speech upon various measures, but practically waiting for the appropriation bills to be sent down from the House of Representatives, which has on various occasions distinctly refused to recognize the right of the Senate to originate bills of that kind. Every single item necessary to going to those bills was before the House on the day on which it assembled. Every estimate which could enter in any reasonable or proper way into their construction was embraced in the communications of the executive department which were laid before the House on the first day of this session.

There was no reason physically or mentally why every appropriation bill should not have been properly constructed and laid before the House during the first thirty days of its session. There was every reason consistent with the proper discharge of public business why that should have been done. Take the deficiency bill for example. Every deficiency was created before the first day of this calendar year that entered into the bill as passed. Every deficiency practically was created before the first day of the fiscal year which ended on the 30th day of June, 1882. And yet that deficiency bill did not get to the Senate until the 8th day of June last. No important appropriation bill was received by the Senate until near the close of the fiscal year. The Navy bill passed the House on the 12th day of July, twelve days after by its terms it was to take effect and become operative. The legislative, executive, and judicial bill passed the House on the 19th day of June, leaving the Senate only ten days in point of fact to consider and report and pass that bill in order to make its provisions effective when they should have taken effect. The Senate has had no practical opportunity in regard to the larger appropriation bills to consider them with a due regard for its own responsibility as a branch of the legislative power of this Government.

The sundry civil bill, which touches every department of the Government, not only in Washington but out of Washington, on every mile of our sea-coast, in every harbor of this country, in every custom-house, everywhere, embracing more legislation than any other bill that has passed this Congress, came to the Senate on the 12th day of July; that is, it passed the House on that day and probably came here the next day. In other words, thirteen days after it should have taken effect it came to the Senate for consideration. I appeal to the older members of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and to all the members of this body who have been here for a long time and know the processes that ought to be observed in regard to legislation, when I say that that bill ought to have been considered in the Appropriations Committee for one solid month at least in order that the Senate committee and the Senate itself in its turn might have been properly informed in regard to its provisions, and have offered and considered the proper amendments thereto as well as its original provisions.

The river and harbor bill came here on the 17th day of June. It was passed by the Senate on the 5th day of July, five days after its provisions should have taken effect. The deficiency bill, as I said, came here on the 8th day of June, and it was passed by the Senate on the 30th day of June. The Army appropriation bill came here on the 29th day of March, and on account of the necessary absence of one of the members of the Appropriations Committee who had it in charge was not passed by the Senate until the 31st day of May. The Indian appropriation bill came here the 1st day of March, and was passed on the 23d of March by the Senate. The naval appropriation bill passed the House on the 6th day of July and came to the Senate on the 7th, and was reported by the Senate committee on the 12th, or after only five days' consideration, a bill embracing a reorganization of the Navy, one of the most important branches of the public service, and it was passed by the Senate on the 31st day of July.

Every single step in the legislation of this Congress which has been retarded has been due to the dilatory action of the House in regard to the great appropriation bills. Whether that action is due to the tardiness of the committee of the House or to the House itself is a matter that I do not care to enter into, but I want to say here and now on my responsibility as a member of the Senate and as a member of the Appropriations Committee that this long, this unwise, injurious extension of the session of Congress has not been due to the action or non-action of the Senate, but it has been wholly due to the gross and unusual tardiness of the other branch of Congress in sending us the important bills on which we are required to act before we could adjourn; and yet in the face of all this for weeks the Senate has been held up as tardy in its action, as retarding the public business, as obstructing its consideration, as in every way responsible for this extension which has become so long and so chronic that, as a gentleman said to me this morning, who had recently returned from the West, everywhere it was a subject of unfavorable comment, and people were becoming apprehensive that in some way Congress proposed to continue in session indefinitely, and by continuing in session threaten the various interests of the country that were to be affected by legislation.

Take, for instance, the bill to correct the error in the duty on knit goods. That came to the Senate on the 3d day of July. The bill in regard to internal-revenue taxation came here on the 28th of June, and along with it, to hide the tardiness of the House, came a resolution to adjourn on the 10th of July, giving the Senate no time whatever under the terms of that resolution to consider either of these very important measures.

The House has trifled deliberately and intentionally, as I believe, with every interest of this country for purposes which, not being apparent, I will not speak of, but which are not to be laid at the door of the Senate in any way whatever. We have taken up not only all the public measures but all the private measures that have come to us from the House of Representatives, and with all the swiftness consistent with due consideration, and with more in point of fact, and have considered them, and reported them, and acted upon them. If the Senate has discussed any measure of proposed legislation at any great length it has been because the regular and most important business of legislation has been meanwhile withheld from our consideration by the House. The Appropriations Committee of the House, and through that committee the House, has deliberately withheld from the Senate at the proper time the important business of the session. The purpose seems to have been to compel the Senate to accept whatever was sent to it without consideration and without any regard for its own responsibility.

I want the responsibility for this long session going into the dog-days, the extension of which has stopped manufacturing to a large extent, and has stopped purchases in a very great degree, and has prevented business enterprises, to rest exactly where it belongs. Let each member of the other branch of Congress apportion to himself that which belongs to him according to his judgment, and not put any portion of it upon the Senate collectively or individually.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. President—

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I desire to object to the present consideration of the resolution. Of course it must lie over one day. Now—

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator to wait a moment. I want to pass a joint resolution to correct an error.

Mr. MORRILL. I want to say a word.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Pennsylvania as entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I think we have ample time now, the main business of the session having been gone through with, to consider the tax bill, and I therefore appeal to the other side again whether they will not consent to have the tax bill come up and vote upon it without further debate. Of course we expect to consider amendments; but I ask that the bill be taken up and be considered without further debate, and I should like to know whether there is assent to the proposition made to pass the bill as it came from the House or with the addition of the tobacco clause reducing the duty and the rebate, and if there is assent to considering the bill without further debate or to naming the time when we may have a vote on it without further debate.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I indorse all that was said by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] as to the holding back of appropriation bills. I am glad that he had the courage to say what he did, and I hope it will induce the Senate of the United States under its clear constitutional right to originate appropriation bills to take charge of at least a portion of these bills hereafter; originate them, pass them, and send them to the House of Representatives, and let the conference committees act on their amendments, instead of ours. Until that is done there will be the same condition of things existing year by year that exists now. The Judiciary Committee of the House, as I understand, almost unanimously, on the question being submitted to them, decided that the Senate had the right to originate these bills. The question has been up in various States, notably in the State of Massachusetts, where in a very elaborate opinion delivered by Judge Gray, now on the United States Supreme Bench, he made it so clear that there can be no doubt about it. It has been exercised here more than once, notably after a long struggle which resulted in the election of Mr. Pennington as Speaker, and at other times. That something has to be done is beyond question, or we will have the troubles of this session annually repeated.

Look at the sundry civil bill the facts as to which were stated by the Senator from Kansas. The Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] and myself sat I do not know how many nights till after midnight endeavoring to hurry it through so as to give the Senate a chance to consider it carefully. We did hurry it beyond what was due to a proper understanding of it, we had to surrender many things that we ought not perhaps to have surrendered, in order to obtain action upon it while a quorum of both Houses were still here, because the House of Representatives after holding back this and other bills until the last minute abandoned their places and were without a quorum on Saturday as shown by the roll-call of the yeas and nays; and within the last half hour they have developed the fact that only 109 members of that House are there now. There are not 120 in the city of Washington as I am advised; and to ask us to sit here and deliberate upon bills when there is no quorum of the House in Washington, after they have held appropriation and tax bills back for seven or eight months, is unreasonable.

Mr. BLAIR. I rise to a question of order. What is the question before the Senate?

Mr. BECK. I desire to say a word or two more in answer to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BLAIR. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont got up to object to the resolution.

Mr. BLAIR. And did object. That carried it over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then he asked a question of the other side as to the tax bill, and the Chair is hearing the Senator from Kentucky answer the question.

Mr. BLAIR. Is there any question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania had the floor and yielded it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. No, sir, I did not yield; it was simply taken from me.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not think there ought to be an effort of Senators to make a cheap reputation by abusing the House of Representatives. If there is any question before the Senate, all right.

Mr. BECK. If the Senator from New Hampshire is so sensitive about the House of Representatives I will now say a word about the Senate, and I will say that the fact that there was no quorum of the House on Saturday was admitted by the Senate of the United States when they passed the knit-goods bill, and a necessary amendment to make it a law, indeed to make it decent legislation, was withdrawn by the Senator from Vermont because he did not want it to go back to the House, there being no quorum there to act upon it. That was known to every Senator then, because while we were sitting here on Saturday and passing that bill it was a well-known fact that only one hundred and twenty-eight members of the House were in the city of Washington. I state that, because I learn that a careful count had been made. Now, we are to sit here and pass upon amendments to an important tax bill and to act upon all other bills that we know cannot be considered in the House, while the House have been holding back the appropriation bills and holding back the tax bill until July, and have deliberately left their places and left the city of Washington, and left us here with virtually only one House in session. I will stay here and vote on amendments to the tax bill until we perfect it; but I protest against being compelled to remain unless there be a House in session to act upon those amendments.

I will not agree to send the bill there and part with the power of the Senate over a great bill to a House that does not exist, simply to deprive ourselves of the right to consider it in December. As the report of the tariff commission must come to us in December I will not send this bill now back to the House, because it will never give us any tax or tariff bill even to look at after the report of the tariff commission comes. If the Senator from Vermont will hold the House of Representatives here to act on the amendments we may place upon his tax bill, that will be legitimate legislation; but when he does not it does not mean to do anything in that direction; it simply means an effort to take from the Senate the power during this and the next session to consider any tax or tariff legislation whatever, no matter what the tariff commission may report, and to place the whole subject in the hands of the House that sent it to us on the 25th day of June, and now abandon their duties at the other end of the Capitol, as they have done, with the chairman of Ways and Means now in Denver—

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to reply to these remarks if they are allowed to be made.

Mr. BECK. I protest against being called to order from that side of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to reply. I do not object to anything, but I hope the Senate will extend to me the same courtesy extended to the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All this debate is out of order. It commenced with the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BECK. When the tax bill comes up, I will continue my remarks.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the same courtesy which was extended to the Senator from Kentucky, only that I will talk about five minutes instead of ten.

Mr. BECK. I shall have an opportunity to be heard. There will be plenty of time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not proceed unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. With the understanding that my motion comes in order—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can make his motion now.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Ohio being heard? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate of the United States—

Mr. BECK. I should like to know by what authority the Senator from Ohio takes me from the floor and takes it himself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has no authority to do so.

Mr. BECK. Then I object to his scolding me down.

Mr. SHERMAN. I said simply as the Senator went on that I desired to reply to him, but I will not speak against a single objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thought the Senator from Kentucky had concluded.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Kentucky has spent a great deal of time in talking about this matter, and I wanted about the one-hundredth part of his time.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Kentucky has kept within the rules, and has never been told by the Chair that he was out of order that he knows of.

Mr. SHERMAN. He was called to order three or four times, and refused to yield.

Mr. BECK. When?

Mr. SHERMAN. I was called to order by him and I yielded once.

Mr. BECK. Objection was made to a resolution for adjournment.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator has spent one hundred times as much time on the tax bill as I have. I was called to order because I endeavored to correct one or two of his manifest errors. I call him to order now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole debate is out of order, but it commenced with the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. ALLISON. Pending the motion—

Mr. MORRILL. I merely asked a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator, after he objected to the resolution, then asked what these gentlemen would do about the tax bill, which was not before the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Am I in order in rising to present morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I will give way for that.

HEAVY ORDNANCE INVESTIGATION.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Heavy Ordnance provided for by the resolution of August 2, instant, be authorized to employ a clerk and a stenographer if necessary; and that the necessary expenses of the investigation be paid out of the item of the contingent fund appropriated for expenses of special and select committees.

ERROR IN ENROLLMENT.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield to me in order that I may present a joint resolution to correct an error in the enrollment of the legislative appropriation bill with reference to the salary of the chief clerk of the War Department.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 108) to correct an error in the enrollment of the "act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes." It proposes to correct an error in the enrollment of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1883, so as to change the amount appropriated for the salary of the chief clerk of the War Department from $2,000 to $2,500.

The joint resolution was read three times, and passed.

ALABAMA MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Let us get through with morning business first.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield to me to make a motion to recommit the bill (H. R. No. 4757) to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands. A man who pretends to be an officer of the United States Government makes complaint against the Interior Department that they are trying to defraud the country in some recommendation they have made in reference to this bill. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS SAMPSON.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1363) for the relief of Thomas Sampson, reported it without amendment.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BROWN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 109) presenting the thanks of Congress to John F. Slater; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

CANNON FOR MONUMENTAL PURPOSES.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6525) donating condemned cast-iron cannon, mortars, and cannon-balls for monumental purposes, to report it without amendment.

Mr. McDILL. I ask for the present consideration of that bill. It will take only a moment.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPTORS OF THE ALBEMARLE.

Mr. BAYARD. House bill No. 676 I think will require less time to pass it than it will to object to it. I ask that it be taken up.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 676) to refer the claim of the captors of the ram Albemarle to the Court of Claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

THE PENSION LAWS.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Pennsylvania gives way for a bill which there was an understanding early this morning should be considered. I ask for its consideration now.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3920) to amend section 4766, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States. It proposes to amend the section named so as to read as follows:

SEC. 4766. Hereafter no pension shall be paid to any person other than the pensioner entitled thereto, nor otherwise than according to the provisions of this title; and no warrant, power of attorney, or other paper executed or purporting to be executed by any pensioner to any attorney, claim agent, broker, or other person shall be recognized by any agent for the payment of pensions, nor shall any pension be paid thereon; but the payment to persons laboring under legal disabilities may be made to the guardians of such persons in the manner herein prescribed, and pensions payable to persons in foreign countries may be made according to the provisions of existing laws: Provided, That in case of an insane invalid pensioner having no guardian, but having a wife or children dependent upon him, (the wife being a woman of good character,) the Commissioner of Pensions is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to cause the pension to be paid to the wife, upon her properly-executed voucher, or, in case there is no wife, to the guardian of the children, upon the properly-executed voucher of such guardian, and in like manner to cause the pension of invalid pensioners who are or may hereafter be imprisoned as punishment for offenses against the laws to be paid while so imprisoned to their wives or the guardians of their children. And pensions to Indian pensioners residing in the Indian Territory may be paid in person by the pension agent, upon a suitable voucher, at some convenient point in said Territory, which, together with the form and manner of identification of the pensioners, may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, such payments to be made in standard silver, at least once in each current year. And payments in person shall be made to the pensioner, in cash, by the pension agent whenever in the discretion of the Commissioner of Pensions such personal payment shall be by him deemed necessary or proper to secure to the pensioner his rights; and the necessary and actual expenses of such pension agent in making such payments shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior upon properly-executed vouchers, out of the contingent fund appropriated for the use of the Pension Office. The Commissioner of Pensions may, when in his judgment it shall be deemed necessary or proper, visit in person, for the purpose of examination and inspection, or may send any one or more of the officers of his bureau for that purpose, any of the pension agencies or medical examining boards or surgeons; and the necessary and actual expenses of such visits shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior, upon properly-executed vouchers, out of the contingent fund of said bureau.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAINT AUGUSTINE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President—

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I give way to the Senator from Florida to consider a bill if it does not lead to debate.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1174) to grant the right of way over the public lands and a military reservation to the Jacksonville, Saint Augustine and Halifax River Railway Company.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 6, after the word "river," to strike out "with all the rights and privileges granted in the act entitled 'An act ———,' approved ———," and insert:

And the said company is hereby authorized to survey and mark through the said public lands a strip to be held by it for the said right of way two hundred feet in width.

So so as to make the section read:

That the Jacksonville, Saint Augustine and Halifax River Railway Company shall have the right of way over the public lands of the United States from Jacksonville to Halifax River, and the said company is hereby authorized to survey and mark through the said public lands a strip to be held by it for the said right of way two hundred feet in width.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 4, after the word "points," to strike out:

As shall not interfere with the military uses of the same, and shall be allowed the use of so much thereof as shall be necessary for this purpose and for a depot and station, the same to be designated by the Secretary of War.

And insert:

And on such line as the Secretary of War may direct and approve as not impairing the uses of said reservation for military and other governmental purposes, and shall be allowed the use of so much thereof as shall be necessary for this purpose, not exceeding one hundred feet in width, and for a depot and station, the same to be designated by the Secretary of War, under the limitations aforesaid.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the said railroad company shall have the right to lay their track across Old Reserve or the military reservation at Saint Augustine, in entering and leaving the town, at such points and on such line as the Secretary of War may direct and approve as not impairing the uses of said reservation for military and other governmental purposes, and shall be allowed the use of so much thereof as shall be necessary for this purpose, not exceeding one hundred feet in width, and for a depot and station, the same to be designated by the Secretary of War, under the limitations aforesaid: Provided, That no vested right shall inure to said company under this section of this act, and the same shall be held subject to the right of the Government at any time to terminate the occupancy of the said military reserve, or any part thereof, by the said company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LUCRETIA V. WEBSTER.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the following resolution, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Acting Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mrs. Lucretia G. Webster, widow of William E. Webster, deceased, late an assistant engineer of the Senate, the sum of $720, being an amount equal to six months' salary as assistant engineer aforesaid; the above sum to be considered as including the funeral expenses and all other allowances.

By unanimous consent, the resolution was read three times, and passed.

ELASTIC SETTEES IN THE HOUSE.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the following resolution, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House and of the Senate purchase for use in the Rotunda of the Capitol the thirty-two elastic settees now in said Rotunda, at a sum not exceeding $7 each, one-half of the amount to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives and one-half out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, and that the necessary expenses thereof be paid out of "miscellaneous items" of the contingent fund of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 290) providing for printing the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1881.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 670) to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of Fort Wayne, in the State of Indiana;

A bill (S. No. 2164) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 282) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for fees of district attorneys of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882.

LABOR STRIKES.

Mr. BLAIR. I appeal to the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield to me, that I may have considered a resolution reported from the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I yield, provided it does not lead to debate.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like the attention of the Senate for a moment, that I may be understood. I desire to call up the resolution to inquire into the cause of the labor strikes, reported June 28, and I ask that it be put on its passage.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the resolution be read for information.

Mr. BLAIR. The report of the committee is a substitute for the resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and referred to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor is hereby authorized and directed to take into consideration the subject of the relations between labor and capital, the wages and hours of labor, the condition of the laboring classes in the United States, and their relative condition and wages as compared with similar classes abroad; also the subject of labor strikes and to inquire into the causes thereof and the agencies producing the same, and to report what legislation should be adopted to modify or remove such causes and to provide against their continuance or recurrence, as well as any other legislation calculated to promote harmonious relations between capitalists and laborers and the interests of both by the improvement of the condition of the industrial classes of the United States.

Second. Said committee shall have leave to sit in vacation, and by sub-committees to visit such places in the United States as they may deem proper to obtain necessary information under these resolutions; and said committee or sub-committees shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and examine persons under oath or otherwise, and to cause depositions to be taken and certified under such regulations as they may adopt.

Third. Said committee shall have power to appoint a clerk at a salary of $6 a day, and to employ such stenographic aid as may be necessary, and to appoint a sergeant-at-arms from the officers or employés of the Senate; and the actual and necessary expenses of said committee properly incurred in the execution of these resolutions shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. GEORGE. After the word "abroad," in line 5, I move to insert:

And to inquire into the division between labor and capital of their joint productions in the United States.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. BECK. What committee is to make the inquiry?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. FARLEY. It is to make a roving commission.

Mr. BECK. As I understand, the amendment is not germane to the resolution. Let the amendment be read.

The amendment of Mr. GEORGE was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MARY E. THOMSON.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2810) for the relief of Mary E. Thomson.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes Mary E. Thomson, mother of Passed Assistant Paymaster Curtis H. Thomson, United States Navy, deceased, to accept, first, a portrait, in frame, of her royal highness the Princess of Siam; second, a silver enameled cigar-case; third, a match-box and a tray of Siamese work, the same having been presented to Curtis H. Thomson, in his lifetime, by the King of Siam, and now on deposit in the Smithsonian Institution.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 108) to correct an error in the enrollment of the "act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the joint resolution (H. R. No. 278) instructing the Secretary of the Navy to convene a court of inquiry to investigate as to the circumstances of the loss of the exploring steamer Jeannette; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ELIZA H. RAMSAY.

Mr. ALLISON. A little while ago a pension bill was passed for the relief of Mrs. Eliza H. Ramsay, a Senate bill. The House some time ago passed identically the same bill. I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill and passed. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield for that purpose?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Yes; that is all right.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the Committee on Pensions may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the committee is discharged.

Mr. MAXEY. This is a very meritorious bill, and I hope nobody will object to it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It places on the pension-roll the name of Eliza H. Ramsay, widow of Brigadier-General George D. Ramsay, brevet major-general United States Army, at the rate of $50 a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. No. 2132) granting a pension to Eliza H. Ramsay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. It will go to the House, unless we reconsider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has gone there.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; let it go.

THOMAS C. MANNING.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask to take up the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections providing for paying the expenses of Hon. Thomas C. Manning.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate to Hon. Thomas C. Manning, who was appointed United States Senator from Louisiana by the governor thereof to fill the vacancy caused by the death of H. M. Spoford, the sum of $1,000 in full compensation of all expenses incurred in endeavoring to obtain the seat to which his credentials accredited him.

Mr. COCKRELL. Where did the resolution come from?

Mr. KELLOGG. From the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was reported by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. VANCE.]

Mr. COCKRELL. When?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. July 19.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. KELLOGG subsequently said: I understand that the Senator from Missouri withdraws his objection to the Manning resolution, and I ask that it be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection the resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It has been read the second time.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISA BODDY.

Mr. GROVER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1923) for the relief of Louisa Boddy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor to make a motion to go into executive session, and these bills are taken up with his consent.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Louisa Boddy, of Lake County, Oregon, $5,400, in full settlement of her claim against the Government for depredations committed and property taken and destroyed by the Modoc Indians on or about November 29, 1872.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. SLATER May 24, and read as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Louisa Boddy, of Oregon, praying compensation for losses and injuries inflicted by the Modoc Indians in the year 1872, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

It appears by the petition of Mrs. Louisa Boddy that her husband, together with a son-in-law and one grown son, became settlers upon the public lands of the United States, in the valley of Lost River, in Lake County, Oregon, some four months prior to the commencement of the late Modoc Indian war, which said war began November 29, 1872, and terminated in June, 1873. Long prior to said settlement the Indian title to said lands had been extinguished by a treaty with the Klamath, Modoc, and other Indians, which said treaty was signed October 14, 1864, and ratified by the United States Senate July 2, 1866. Said lands were afterward surveyed by the United States and opened to settlement in 1869.

On the 6th of August, 1872, the Boddy family, consisting of the husband of the petitioner, her son-in-law, Nicholas Schira, and wife, who was the daughter of the petitioner, and her two sons, one a minor, made settlement on said lands.

On the 29th of November, 1872, the Government undertook, with an inadequate military force, consisting of James Jackson, First United States Cavalry, and thirty-five men, to remove by force the Modoc Indians from said public lands, where they had been roaming contrary to the injunctions of the Indian agent having charge of them, to the Klamath reservation. Such an insignificant force could not and did not have any effect to intimidate the Indians. The result was that Indian hostilities were at once precipitated, and a most cruel slaughter was immediately commenced by those Indians upon the unoffending and unsuspecting settlers of Lost River Valley, which slaughter began immediately after the attack upon Captain Jack's camp by Lieutenant Jackson on the morning of November 29, 1872, at early light. Among those who were massacred were the husband of the petitioner, her two sons, and her son-in-law, who were peaceably pursuing their usual vocations.

The petitioner further states in a graphic manner her discovery of the lifeless forms of her husband and sons, stripped and mutilated, and how, struck with fear, she and her daughter fled at once to the neighboring mountains, where, without food or shelter, and thinly clad, with snow on the ground, they remained for two days before daring to make their way to any friendly shelter.

After the massacre the Indians destroyed and carried off all the personal property of the families, embracing horses, sheep, hogs, cattle, poultry, clothing, provisions, &c., and also including $829 in gold and silver coin, and burned the houses. The mutilated bodies of those who were killed were afterward recovered and buried at Linkville by the Oregon volunteers.

By this disaster the petitioner was reduced at once from a condition of comparative affluence to one of poverty and wretchedness.

The petitioner duly presented her claim for property thus stolen and destroyed, amounting to $6,180, in due form to the Indian Bureau, and placed a duplicate copy thereof in the hands of the local Indian agent. No relief, however, of any kind has ever been received by her. She therefore appeals to Congress.

Mr. HOAR. Cannot the result of that be stated in a few words? It is a report of several pages.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER] reported the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Senate would prefer a statement in six words by the Senator who reported the bill; but it is a long report to which nobody is listening.

Mr. COKE. The bill was reported by the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. SLATER.] I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts, however, that it has been carefully examined by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate. It is for the relief of a woman who traveled all the way from Roseburgh, Oregon, to Lost River, where her husband and two sons were butchered before her eyes and her property was destroyed by the Indians under circumstances which really appealed to the humanity as well as the justice of the case.

Mr. SHERMAN. Would a single objection carry the bill over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; it has been regularly taken up.

Mr. HOAR. I am entirely satisfied with the report of that careful committee, and after this statement I do not want the report read any further.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri object?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am satisfied to dispense with the further reading of the report, but I desire to enter my objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1787) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Saint Croix River, between the city of Calais, Maine, and St. Stephen's, New Brunswick.

PETITION.

Mr. VAN WYCK presented the petition of E. L. Barker, praying to be restored to his former position in the Army, from which he claims that he was illegally dismissed; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ALEXANDER J. TWINING.

On motion of Mr. PLATT, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Patents be, and they hereby are, discharged from the further consideration of the application of Alexander J. Twining for an extension of his letters patent, and that he be permitted to withdraw all papers in said case in the keeping of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask to take up a resolution similar to the one called up by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania object?

Mr. LAPHAM. It is a question of privilege. The resolution was reported by me from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. What is the resolution?

Mr. LAPHAM. It is a resolution to provide for payment to the administratrix of John C. Underwood.

Mr. MORRILL. I object.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I now insist on my motion.

Mr. LAPHAM. Does an objection carry the resolution over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Half a dozen objections have been made to it.

Mr. LAPHAM. Does that prevent the consideration of the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does.

Mr. MORRILL. Is it in order to move to take up the tax bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I insist on my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. We shall have time for executive business next week.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 31, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—31.

So the motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. While the doors are being closed the Chair will lay before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 290) providing for printing the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture was read twice by its title.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask the concurrence of the Senate in that joint resolution. It is to correct an error which some clerks of the House or the Department found, a mare's nest, about the joint resolution for printing the Agricultural Report. That it has not been numbered, I believe is the trouble.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is the identical joint resolution which passed the Senate and was concurred in by the House in this form.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NICARAGUA MARITIME CANAL.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the bill (S. No. 550) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua be made the special order for the second Monday in December.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds of the Senators present voting therefor.

BEN HOLLADAY.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask that the bill (S. No. 1683) for the relief of Ben Holladay be made the special order for the second Tuesday in December next, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. MORRILL. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection—

Mr. MORRILL. I object to making the bill a special order.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no inclination to object, but it is a waste of time to make special orders. If there happens to be unfinished business that comes over, the special order loses its place, and it amounts to nothing.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If it does not amount to anything it does not hurt anything.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not object.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Then let it be made the special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senator from Vermont objects.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Then I move that the bill be made a special order for the second Tuesday in December, at two o'clock.

Mr. SHERMAN. How can we in executive session transact such business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SHERMAN. How can that be done in executive session? This is all very irregular.

Mr. VOORHEES. Has the bill been made a special order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the Senator from Ohio makes the objection that we are in executive session. It will have to be done in legislative session.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 4th instant approved and signed the following bills:

An act (S. No. 2002) to extend the fees of certain officers over the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) providing one month's extra pay for certain employees of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 676) to refer the claims of the captors of the ram Albatraz to the Court of Claims;

A bill (H. R. No. 3825) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a ponton railway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the mouth of the Upper Iowa River, in the State of Iowa;

A bill (H. R. No. 3854) to repeal so much of section 3385 of the Revised Statutes as imposes an export tax on tobacco;

A bill (H. R. No. 3920) to amend section 4766, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 6103) authorizing the deputy collector of customs stationed at San Juan Island, in the Puget Sound district, to enter and clear vessels and collect duties;

A bill (H. R. No. 6525) donating condemned cast-iron cannon, mortars, and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6681) granting a pension to Eliza H. Ramsay;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) providing for a joint select committee to inquire into the condition and wants of American ship-building and ship-owning interests;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 290) providing for printing the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1881; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) providing one month's extra pay for certain employés of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five hours and ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolution from the House of Representatives relating to final adjournment.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at twelve m. Saturday, August 5, 1882.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move to amend the resolution by striking out "twelve m. Saturday, August 5," and inserting in lieu thereof "ten p. m. Monday, August 7."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It is suggested that I make it eleven o'clock instead of ten. I so modify my amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Before I vote upon this question I should like to know from the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] whether he proposes to bring up the tax bill again, for if that is his intention I propose to help him get it up.

Mr. MORRILL. I do.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say that I shall never vote for any resolution for final adjournment until a vote is had on the tax bill. I shall vote against this resolution until the tax bill is voted upon. A large majority of the Senate is in favor of the tax bill, in my judgment, as the vote will show if we ever reach it. I never shall vote for a resolution for adjournment until that vote is reached, whether it shall be next December or next March.

Mr. BECK. When the House of Representatives have not had a quorum for two days, it is merely a mean effort to take the bill from us, so that we shall have nothing before us in December to enable us to touch the tariff.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the resolution of the House of Representatives.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. SLATER.] Not knowing how he would vote, I shall not vote.

Mr. VAN WYCK, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.]

Mr. VEST, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. WINDOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] on political questions. As this seems to have assumed that form, I cannot vote. I should vote "nay" otherwise.

Mr. HOAR. My colleague [Mr. DAWES] is paired, but at this moment I do not remember the name of the Senator.

Mr. VEST. I announced the pair.

Mr. HOAR. I beg pardon. My colleague is paired on all political questions.

Mr. PLUMB. I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JACKSON.]

Mr. SAUNDERS, (after having voted in the negative.) I understand that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] is paired with me. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SAWYER. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. CAMDEN.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BECK, (after having voted in the affirmative.) If this is a political question, though it is a motion to adjourn, I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] on any question of that sort, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME.] I do not see him here. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. FARLEY. He would vote "yea."

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Then I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PENDLETON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.] I should vote "nay" if he were here.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—19.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No quorum has voted, but the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to amend the resolution is lost by a tie vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that we adjourn. ["No!" "No!"] No quorum has voted, and a motion to adjourn is in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. To what time?

Mr. COCKRELL. To meet at eleven o'clock to-morrow, our usual time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall vote with the Senator on that motion with pleasure.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There is no occasion to have a night session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri, that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY.] However, I reserve the right to vote if necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. VAN WYCK, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.]

Mr. VEST, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. HOAR. My colleague [Mr. DAWES] would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. VEST. Then I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PLUMB, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I withdraw my vote, being paired with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JACKSON.]

Mr. HARRIS. My colleague [Mr. JACKSON] would have voted the same way the Senator has voted.

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. SLATER.]

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 21; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and (at six o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, August 7, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate authorizing the printing and binding of 2,500 copies of the annual report of the Chief Signal Officer for the year 1881, for the use of the Signal Office.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 3854) to repeal so much of section 3385 of the Revised Statutes as imposes an export tax on tobacco.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 2132) granting a pension to Eliza H. Ramsay; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the proceeding upon the unfinished bill coming over from Saturday, under the operation of the Pound rule.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is not the order of business the call of States for the introduction of bills?

The SPEAKER. The special rule takes precedence of that. Under the operation of the present rule the call of committees for bills to be offered by consent takes place directly after the reading of the Journal. The pending question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] to the bill (H. R. No. 5965) to provide for the quieting of the title of the United States in certain lands therein described, and for the reclamation of the marshes in the Potomac River. The bill will be again read.

The bill was read at length.

The amendment was read. It is as follows:

Provided, That none of the money appropriated for the improvement or reclamation of the Potomac flats or river front shall be expended till these suits are determined.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 23.

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand tellers.

Mr. McMILLIN and Mr. NEAL were appointed tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 44.

Mr. NEAL and Mr. URNER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will resume their places, the point of order being made that no quorum has voted.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 49.

Mr. GODSHALK. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will resume the count.

Mr. NEAL. Neither teller makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. WILLIS. I understood the point of order as to the presence of a quorum had been withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen are requested to vote.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 55.

So (no further count being demanded) the House refused to pass the bill.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. PEIRCE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 5224) to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion;

A bill (H. R. No. 6845) to amend the first subdivision of section 2568 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, title 34, collection of duties on imports; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6715) to correct an error in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) for the printing of additional copies of House Executive Document No. 47 and subsequent land laws.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. R. No. 282) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for fees of district attorneys of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882. Also, that the Senate had passed a joint resolution and bill of the following titles; in which concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) providing one month's extra pay for certain employes of the Senate; and

A bill (S. No. 1023) for the relief of the sureties of George F. Elliott.

CANADIAN GRAIN GROUND IN THE UNITED STATES.

The Committee on Ways and Means was called.

Mr. KASSON. On behalf of the Committee on Ways and Means I desire to call up Senate bill No. 1026, to permit grain brought by Canadian farmers to be ground at mills in the United States adjacent to Canadian territory, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Treasury Department, and put it upon its passage. The bill reported by the House Committee on Ways and Means is identical with this.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That grain brought into the United States in wagons or other ordinary road vehicles, by farmers residing in the Dominion of Canada, to be ground by mills owned by citizens of the United States, shall not be deemed to be imported or liable to import duties: Provided, That such grain shall be brought into the United States under such regulations as the Treasury Department may prescribe to prevent fraud and evasion, and shall be returned as in like manner provided by such regulations: And provided further, That entries shall be made of and duties paid upon all such grain as shall be taken or received by mill-owners as tolls for such grinding, under like regulations provided by the Treasury Department.

Mr. KASSON. I ask that the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury which is embodied in the House report be read.

The letter was read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 10, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant transmitting a bill (S. No. 1026) to permit grain brought by Canadian farmers to be ground at mills in the United States, &c., and requesting my views as to the propriety of its passage and its effect.

The bill is calculated to revive and legalize a practice which until lately existed in several districts along our Canadian frontier, not to treat as importations, within the meaning of the tariff laws, reasonable quantities of grain brought by Canadian farmers to American mills to be ground and returned. In the absence of any legal sanction for such practice its suppression was necessarily ordered by the Department, although during a long period of toleration by local customs officers no case of fraudulent introduction of such grain for consumption in the United States appeared to have occurred, while, on the other hand, apparently well-founded representations have been made from time to time by both the local officers and the owners of mills that the cessation of the established usage will result in the ruin of the American milling industry in those localities, and will lead to the building of steam-mills in that region of the British possessions the inhabitants of which have preferred heretofore to patronize our mills, driven by the water-power available only on our side of the frontier.

In view of the facts, the opinion of this Department is favorable to the passage of the bill in question.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Chairman Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

Mr. KASSON. That is all, I suppose, that need be said. This is an old practice. It has continued for sixty years. And the object of the bill is simply to enable the mills operated by water-power on our side to grind the Canadian wheat and let the flour be taken back, duties being collected on what remains as toll. The bill passed the Senate without objection.

Mr. MILLS. Is this the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. KASSON. I know of no objections on the part of any members of the committee.

Mr. MILLS. Are any members of the committee of the minority side of the House present?

Mr. KASSON. When the bill was up before, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] objected. But on my showing him the papers he told me he withdrew his objection.

Mr. MILLS. Does the bill propose to admit wheat free of duty?

Mr. KASSON. Yes, sir; simply that which is brought over by Canadian farmers to be ground and taken back across the border. It is an advantage to our millers and no harm to anybody. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HAMMOND] who represents the district in which those mills are situated is very anxious the bill should pass.

Objections being called for.

Mr. BERRY, Mr. MILLS, Mr. CONVERSE, and others objected.

The SPEAKER. Six gentlemen objecting, the bill is not before the House.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask for its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of nine members of this House be appointed by the Speaker to examine into the works now in progress for the improvement of the Mississippi River below Cairo and the methods employed in making such improvements, and the contracts touching the same, and the application of the appropriations made by Congress for that purpose.

Also, all matters pertaining to and the feasibility of the outlet system for the improvement of said river.

Also, in the improvement made at the mouth of said river, the system of jetties, and the extent to which the same have facilitated the navigation of the river to the Gulf, their permanency, and the method now employed in the improvement thereof, and into all matters touching said improvement, the methods and effects thereof, and contracts touching the same.

The said committee may hold its sessions, during the recess of Congress, at such places on said river or elsewhere as may be necessary for full inquiry into the matters above referred to, may send for persons and papers, examine on oath any of the persons employed on the Mississippi River improvement commission, or by the same, and others if deemed necessary, including all river men and river residents.

The said committee shall report to this House the result of such inquiries at the earliest day practicable of the next session of Congress.

A sum not exceeding $5,000, out of the contingent fund of the House, may be applied by the Clerk to the payment of the actual expenses of said committee, including secretary and witness fees. But the Clerk of the House is only authorized to pay such expenses on vouchers therefor duly certified as correct by the chairman of the committee, and specifying in detail the items thereof. But the entire expenses of said committee shall not exceed the sum above mentioned, and no other expenses shall be incurred.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. It needs but the reading of the resolution I have submitted to commend it to the good judgment and favorable consideration of every member of this House. The improvement of the Mississippi River is an undertaking of no ordinary magnitude. The prosecution of such a work will test the patience and possibly the resources of this nation. Its successful accomplishment concerns not only the people of the Mississippi Valley and the States adjacent to the Mississippi but it concerns all the people of the country and all the States. We are now upon the threshold of this great undertaking, involving in its completion the expenditure of untold millions. The public mind is at unrest in regard to the manner of the expenditure already made and the feasibility of the various plans proposed. These questions should be set at rest, and it is with this view that I have introduced the resolution just reported.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. Does the resolution embrace any plan of improvement, or an investigation into any plan of improvement?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. In a general way the resolution confers upon the proposed committee authority to inquire into the various plans for improving the Mississippi.

Mr. ATKINS. Does it look to an inquiry into any plan whatever for the improvement of the river?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. It does. It looks to an inquiry into the wisdom of expenditure already made and the different plans of proposed improvement.

Mr. ELLIS. By express provision the resolution directs an inquiry into the outlet system.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. If there be any objection to that part of the resolution it can be stricken out. I yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox.]

Mr. COX, of New York. The Committee on Appropriations at this last hour of the session have brought in this resolution to pay $5,000 for an investigation by ourselves, not delegating it to a commission or to any one, but an investigation by a committee of this House, made up, I trust, of business men, to inquire into the methods of expenditure of the millions to be invested in this grand Mississippi work.

I believe, sir, that the improvement of the Mississippi River if it were brought in here by itself, unencumbered by other measures, would be fifty votes stronger than when combined, as it was in the river and harbor bill, with other matters. I believe in the long run you will have to come down to the main question whether this great inland sea, the Mississippi, shall not have its plans, its methods of improvement, well matured by Congress, judging by the very best sense of the men who live on its banks and the best engineering capacity that can be obtained. And while I would not vote for any measure, however good, when conglomerated with other measures which I did not approve, I believe I represent the sentiment of the city of New York, and certainly that of my own constituents, when I freely give my voice and my vote for an appropriation to improve the Mississippi River in the most eligible way. This resolution proposes to find out that way, and therefore I favor it; and I think it is on that ground the Committee on Appropriations have favored the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAGE. I desire to say a word. Mr. Speaker, though this matter has not been considered by the Committee on Commerce, yet I feel called upon to say that in my judgment there can be no possible objection to a committee of this House making such an examination as this resolution contemplates. I believe such an examination will vindicate what this House has already done, and will show that the appropriation made this year was not only in accordance with the judgment of the people who are directly interested in the improvement of the Mississippi River but was in accord with the judgment of the people of the entire country; that the appropriation was not only just but was demanded by every public consideration with reference to the building up of the water transportation of the country in competition with railroad transportation. I believe that this committee should be appointed. While not speaking by authority of the Committee on Commerce, I heartily indorse this resolution and trust that we shall have a committee composed of men able and willing to examine into this subject, who will make to this House at its next session a report which may serve for the guidance of Congress in the future.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) providing for a joint select committee to inquire into the condition and wants of American ship-building and ship-owning interests; and

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 278) instructing the Secretary of the Navy to convene a court of inquiry to investigate as to the circumstances of the loss of the exploring steamer Jeannette.

HEIRS OF THOMAS TOBY.

The Committee on the Judiciary being called, Mr. CULBERSON said: I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to call up the bill (S. No. 543) for the relief of the heirs of Thomas Toby, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs of Thomas Toby, deceased, of the city of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, the sum of $45,000, in compliance with the joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Texas, approved March 30, 1881, making provision for the settlement of Thomas Toby's claim: Provided, That the said heirs shall file with the Secretary of the Treasury a duly certified copy of the said joint resolution and a full and complete release unto the State of Texas and to the United States of and for all claims whatever of their ancestor against Texas and the United States.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which I ask may be read.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, under the rule regulating the proceedings in this hour, at what time may objection be made? I would be glad to hear an explanation of the bill, reserving the right to object.

The SPEAKER. Five minutes are allowed for explanation of the measure, which, if so desired, may be occupied before the submission of the question whether there is objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
August 7, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you, in reply to your inquiry of the 6th instant, that the payments made from the Treasury to such creditors of Texas as are comprehended in acts of Congress approved September 9, 1850, and February 28, 1855, (9 Stat., p. 446, and 10 Stat., p. 617,) amount to $7,648,886.73, leaving a balance of $101,113.27, which was carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury June 30, 1877.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN H. REAGAN,
House of Representatives.

Mr. HISCOCK. While the right of objection is reserved, I desire to know whether any committee of this House has ever passed upon the question whether this sum of money is due to this alleged creditor.

Mr. REAGAN. In answer to the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hiscock] I will state that the Judiciary Committee of this House in the Forty-fourth Congress unanimously recommended the passage of a joint resolution to pay over this $101,000 to the State of Texas, from the fund reserved here to meet the liabilities of the late republic of Texas. The Judiciary Committee of the House in the Forty-fifth Congress made unanimously a similar report, as did the Judiciary Committee in the Forty-sixth Congress; and at the present session this bill has been reported unanimously by the Senate committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. That does not answer my question. I might be in favor of paying this money over to the State of Texas and yet be unwilling to pay it to an alleged creditor of the State.

Mr. MILLS. The State of Texas has asked that the money be paid to this creditor and charged to the account of the State.

Mr. WILLITS. I will say in reply to the gentleman from New York that the State of Texas has passed an act requesting that the heirs of Mr. Toby shall be paid $101,000, to be charged to the account of Texas upon the indemnity fund placed in the hands of the Government, which under the act of 1877 was covered in the Treasury. The State of Texas has decided the question whether Toby was her creditor; and of course we do not need to investigate that question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, when this question was up the other day, I stated that if it could be shown by a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury that a sufficient amount of the original fund withheld by the Government remained in the Treasury for the payment of this claim, I would not feel justifiable in making objection to the bill. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury on that point has been read; but I wish to put an inquiry to the gentleman from Texas. I assume that whatever remains of the seven or eight million dollars retained by the United States for the payment of the debts of the State of Texas should be placed to the credit of that State; and if that State requests the payment to a particular creditor of money remaining in the Treasury, and ultimately due to the State, it is a question for the State itself.

But the question now is, whether or not the agreement between the Government of the United States and the State of Texas, which was an independent government at that time, was that the Government of the United States would retain so much of the money for the purpose of extinguishing the claims of creditors of the State of Texas, and that there was a limit as to the amount of such claims which the Government of the United States should pay, but the balance remaining of that sum, if there was any, was not to go to the State of Texas, because the liability of the United States was simply to pay valid debts against the State of Texas up to a certain amount.

Now, this is the point: whether or not the question as to the validity of this claim as against the State of Texas, or since 1850 as against the United States, was ever inquired into? Or has it been taken for granted, inasmuch as this money had belonged to the State of Texas, that that State might dispose of it as she should think proper?

I think my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] will find that the balance remaining of this fund does not go to the State of Texas, but that under that arrangement the liability on the part of the United States was simply to pay valid debts against the State of Texas up to a certain amount, and if the debts so paid did not amount to that sum, the balance was not to be paid to the State of Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] I desire to say that three Committees on the Judiciary of this House, at three different sessions of Congress, have held that the balance of this fund would go the State of Texas. But that question is not involved in this bill, this claimant being a creditor of the republic of Texas, whose claim has been allowed by the State as a claim against this fund, without reference to the question whether the surplus fund would go to the State or not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time? [After a pause.] There is objection.

Mr. MILLS. Only one member objects.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will request members objecting to rise and remain standing until counted. [After a pause.] Six members object, and the bill is not before the House. The Chair will state that the hour for business under this rule has expired.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to have passed at this time a joint resolution in reference to printing the Agricultural Report for the year 1881, in order to correct an error.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBESON. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The regular order, this being Monday, is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT FOR 1881.

Mr. SPRINGER. By direction of the Committee on Printing I report a joint resolution providing for printing the annual Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1881.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That there be printed 300,000 copies of the annual Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1881; 241,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, 56,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture; and $219,161.54, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out this joint resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state that this joint resolution is for the purpose of correcting a mistake made in the Senate by changing a concurrent resolution to a joint resolution, which the rules of the Senate do not permit to be done. That joint resolution could not be enrolled, and therefore nothing has been done on the subject. This is simply a copy of the joint resolution as agreed to by both Houses in conference, and is for the purpose of correcting that error.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 290) was received, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House now take a recess for two hours.

Mr. BROWNE. I wish the gentleman would wait a moment. On the 8th day of July last the House unanimously passed a bill granting a pension to Mrs. Eliza H. Ramsay. That bill was sent to the Senate, but was lost. It therefore became necessary for the Senate to pass a new bill, which they have done, one identical with the bill which the House passed. That bill has been sent over here this morning, and I ask that it now be taken up and passed by the House.

Mr. MILLS. Does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether a bill for a soldier who lost his legs in the service—

Mr. MILLS. I object.

Mr. BROWNE. If the gentleman objects—

Mr. MILLS. I object because your colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] objects to everything that comes from my State, and I am hitting him over your shoulders.

Mr. BROWNE. I did not make any objection.

Mr. MILLS. You did to the last proposition from the State of Texas.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, that the House now take a recess for two hours.

Mr. MILLS. For what?

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 22, noes 42.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no quorum voting, I believe. If the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HISCOCK] expects any public business connected with the appropriation bills—

Mr. MILLS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has asked me a question which perhaps should call from me an expression as to whether I am in favor of his motion for a recess. Now, so far as I am concerned, I will say that there is not a quorum here, and upon any question presented which I believe should not be passed I propose to raise the point of a quorum. I am entirely willing, for one, to concede if there are meritorious bills they should be passed.

Mr. McLANE. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. HISCOCK. If there is any request that a bill be discussed I certainly will not raise the question of a quorum to prevent its consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend from New York think it is a proper thing to legislate without the presence of a quorum?

Mr. ROBESON. Let us have the call of States for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no quorum here.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana there are certain bills which may come from the Senate upon which action of the House should be had. I am disposed to meet the question on every bill as it is presented. The question of no quorum can be made on each bill as it comes up.

Mr. TALBOTT. Let us have two hours under the Pound rule.

Mr. HISCOCK. We do not consent to that.

Mr. MILLS. The Calendars of the House are loaded down with bills reported from committees, which ought to receive the consideration of the House.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, a joint resolution was unanimously recommended by the Committee on Commerce, and which I ask to take up and put on its passage. That committee overlooked a clause in the last year's river and harbor bill whereby a portion of any sum appropriated for the improvement of a river for lock and dam might be used in reference to the land given for the site of lock and dam. Objection was made on Saturday last to the joint resolution offered by the gentleman from Michigan, and in his absence this morning I ask for unanimous consent to call it up, as it is the wish of every member of the committee who is present and whom I have been able to see since we made this discovery that the resolution should be passed. The letter was read last Saturday, but I will ask that it be again read.

Mr. MILLER. Does this refer to the river and harbor bill?

Mr. WHITE. Yes; it relates to an oversight in the river and harbor bill.

Mr. MILLER. Very well; then I object.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum was made on the motion that the House take a recess, and the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.]

Mr. BINGHAM. Let us have the call of the States.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well; I withdraw my motion that the House take a recess. But I do not think business should be transacted without a quorum.

Mr. ROBESON. I demand the regular order of business.

CALL OF STATES.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions for printing and reference. Under this call also joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures may be presented for reference, and also resolutions of inquiry addressed to the heads of Executive Departments, for reference to appropriate committees.

MAX LUCHS.

Mr. BUCK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6894) to authorize the Court of Claims of the United States to ascertain the amount of special damages sustained by Max Luchs by the change of grade of a certain square in the city of Washington; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ANNA E. CARROLL.

Mr. TALBOTT (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6895) for the relief of Anna E. Carroll; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF TAXATION.

Mr. ROBESON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6896) to reduce taxation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS.

Mr. COX, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6897) to relieve commercial travelers from license taxes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN FREDERICK A. MAHAN.

Mr. BINGHAM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6898) for the relief of Captain Frederick A. Mahan, United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

OLIVER EVANS WOODS.

Mr. O'NEILL introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 291) for the relief of Oliver Evans Woods; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

MARY ANN KING.

Mr. GUENTHER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6899) for the relief of Mary Ann King; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution and bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 282) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for fees of district attorneys of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882;

A bill (S. No. 670) to provide for the construction of a public building at Fort Wayne, Indiana; and

A bill (S. No. 2164) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate has passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 108) to correct an error in the enrollment of a bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; in which concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 6525) to donate condemned cast-iron cannon, mortars, and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 676) to refer the claim of the captors of the ram Albemarle to the Court of Claims;

A bill (H. R. No. 3825) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a ponton railway bridge across the Mississippi at or near the mouth of the Upper Iowa River, in the State of Iowa;

A bill (H. R. No. 3920) to amend section 4766, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6103) authorizing the deputy collector of customs stationed at San Juan Island in the Puget Sound district to enter and clear vessels and collect duties.

REDUCTION OF TAXATION.

Mr. ROBESON. What is the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business would be individual motions to suspend the rules.

Mr. ROBESON. Then I move to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6896) to reduce taxation, and put the same upon its passage, being the bill which I introduced this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey moves to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from the further consideration of the bill the title of which he has indicated, and put the same upon its passage. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the taxes herein specified imposed by the laws now in force be, and the same are hereby, repealed as hereinafter provided, namely, taxes now imposed by law on snuff and manufactured tobacco on and after January 1, 1883, and from and after that date the tax on snuff and manufactured tobacco shall be twelve cents per pound; and taxes on capital and deposits of banks and bankers, except such taxes as are now due and payable; and on and after the 1st day of October, 1882, the stamp tax on bank checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers, and the tax on matches, perfumery, medicinal preparations, and other articles imposed by Schedule A following section 3437 of the Revised Statutes: Provided, That no drawback shall be allowed upon articles embraced in said schedule that shall be exported on and after the 1st day of October, 1882: Provided further, That on and after August 15, 1882, matches may be removed by manufacturers thereof from the place of manufacture to warehouses within the United States without attaching thereto the stamps required by law, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

SEC. 2. That from and after the 1st day of May, 1883, dealers in leaf tobacco shall annually pay $12; dealers in manufactured tobacco shall pay $2.40; all manufacturers of tobacco shall pay $6; manufacturers of cigars shall pay $6; peddlers of tobacco, snuff, and cigars shall pay special taxes, as follows: peddlers of the first class, as now defined by law, shall pay $30; peddlers of the second class shall pay $15; peddlers of the third class shall pay $7.20; and peddlers of the fourth class shall pay $3.60. Retail dealers in leaf tobacco shall pay $250, and thirty cents for each dollar on the amount of their monthly sales in excess of the rate of $500 per annum.

SEC. 3. That on cigars which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or sale on and after the 1st day of October, 1882, there shall be assessed and collected the following taxes, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof: on cigars of all descriptions, made of tobacco or any substitute thereof, $4 per thousand; on cigarettes weighing not more than three pounds per thousand, 75 cents per thousand; on cigarettes weighing more than three pounds per thousand, $4 per thousand: Provided, That on all original and unbroken factory packages of smoking and manufactured tobacco, and snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes held by manufacturers or dealers at the time such reduction shall go into effect, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a drawback or rebate of the full amount of the reduction: Provided, The same shall not apply in any case where a claim has not been ascertained or presented within thirty days following the date of the reduction, and such rebate to manufacturers may be paid in stamps at the reduced rates.

It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this act into effect.

SEC. 4. That on and after the 1st day of October, 1882, so much of section 3 of an act approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act to further protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government," as imposes an additional duty of 25 per cent. on all molasses, tank-bottoms, sirup of sugar-cane juice, melada, and on sugars, according to the Dutch standard in color, imported from foreign countries, is hereby repealed; and the duties on such articles shall be and remain the same as before the passage of said act.

SEC. 5. That section 2504, title 33 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, be amended by adding to Schedule E of said title the following:

"That on and after the 1st day of October, 1882, the duty on steel railway bars, and railway bars made in part of steel, shall be $20 per ton; and that on all manufactures, articles, vessels, and wares made from hoop, band, or scroll iron, or of which hoop, band, or scroll iron shall be the component material of chief value, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the same duty, or rate of duty, as that imposed on the hoop, band, or scroll iron from which they are made, or which shall be the component material of chief value."

SEC. 6. That the reduction of duties provided for by this act shall also apply to all goods, wares, and merchandise on deposit in warehouses or public stores on the 1st day of October, 1882.

Mr. MILLS. I demand a second upon that motion.

Mr. ROBESON. Let a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. MILLS. No; I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. MILLS and Mr. ROBESON were appointed tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 8.

Mr. MILLS, Mr. COX of New York, and Mr. ELLIS made the point that no quorum had voted.

Mr. ROBESON. Who makes the point of no quorum?

The SPEAKER. Several gentlemen.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is there anything before the House?

Mr. ROBESON. The bill for the reduction of taxation is before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to introduce a formal resolution—

The SPEAKER. The House is now dividing; it would not be in order.

Mr. ROBESON. I trust we will have unanimous consent to go on with this bill; it reduces taxation $43,000,000, and I hope gentlemen on the other side will not object to taking it up now for consideration.

Mr. COX, of New York. This is simply a big joke. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLS. It reduces taxes on wealth and leaves it on poverty.

Mr. ROBESON. It takes off half a cent a pound on every pound of sugar consumed by the poor man; it reduces—

Mr. MILLS. It takes the tax off the banks and puts it upon the cotton-growers.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. Gentlemen are requested to vote on one side or the other.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the bill, with the consent of the gentleman from New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House for consideration.

Mr. ROBESON. I am trying to get it before the House, and gentlemen are objecting. They are unwilling to reduce the taxes.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a pretense to reduce taxes, as the gentleman claims, $43,000,000; but when the Committee on Ways and Means tried to reduce taxes on the laboring people of this country $70,000,000 your caucuses prevented it.

Mr. ROBESON. You have the opportunity to do so now.

Mr. COX, of New York. Why did you not start in earlier with this business if you are so anxious to reduce the taxes?

Mr. ROBESON. Because gentlemen on the other side insisted upon obstructing the business of the House.

Mr. COX, of New York. It was your own caucus that obstructed the business of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. You did not want to reduce the taxes when you had the opportunity.

The SPEAKER. Debate is entirely out of order. The tellers will resume their places, and members are requested to vote.

Mr. COX, of New York. A hundred of the Republican members have gone home, and those who remain cannot pass this bill.

Mr. ROBESON. There are enough here to pass it unless objection is made.

Mr. MILLS. It is a bill taking off taxation from the wealthy and increasing it on the poor.

Mr. ROBESON. I would like to ask gentlemen if they intend to persist in making the point of no quorum?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do.

Mr. RANDALL. We would have passed a bill reducing taxes by $70,000,000 but for the action of a Republican caucus.

Mr. MILLS. This is a bill relieving the banks and leaving the burden of taxation on poor people.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand this whole subject has been referred to the tariff commission.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am not debating.

The SPEAKER. Members are requested to vote on one side or the other.

Mr. TALBOTT. The same question is being considered at Long Branch now.

Mr. SPRINGER. The commission at Long Branch have the whole matter in hand with a quorum present, and are invigorating themselves for the work by taking a bath every day in the cooling waters of the Atlantic Ocean.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 6681) granting a pension to Eliza H. Ramsay.

REDUCTION OF TAXATION.

Mr. ROBESON. If gentlemen desire to ask unanimous consent to call up other bills while we are waiting for a quorum I have no objection.

Mr. TUCKER. I have a few which I would like to put in.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If in order, I should like to call up a Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. That would not be in order at this time.

Mr. ROBESON. I am willing to give way if unanimous consent be given for the passage of this bill, and then the call can go on.

Mr. RANDALL. This is mere buncombe and there is no sincerity in it.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I withdraw my demand for further count, and ask unanimous consent to take up a Senate bill to which I am sure there will be no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent cannot be asked while the House is dividing.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I object to taking up any other bill or anything else till this question is disposed of.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to make an inquiry. Did I understand the gentleman from New Jersey to say that Congress would be kept in session till this bill was passed?

Mr. ROBESON. I did not say that. I said if this bill, which reduces taxation $43,000,000, which takes 25 per cent. off sugar and 20 per cent. off steel, was passed by the House now it can be passed by the Senate before we adjourn. The bill reduces taxation $43,000,000. Let gentlemen object to that if they want to.

Mr. TUCKER. And it has the hoop-iron clause in it, and the gentleman did not know it.

Mr. McKINLEY. That is the most deserving clause in it—the clause as to hoop-iron.

Mr. ATHERTON. I wish to inquire whether any other member of this House has the right to make a speech except the tellers when the House is dividing.

The SPEAKER. Tellers are not privileged in that way either.

Mr. MILLS. Will the Speaker order chairs for the tellers?

The SPEAKER. Tellers are not permitted to be seated.

Mr. ATHERTON. I would inquire of the gentleman from New Jersey—

Mr. ROBESON. Nobody has a right to talk except the tellers.

Mr. ATHERTON. I wish to ask the gentleman whether it would not be as easy to get a quorum now as it was to get a quorum to turn out one man and seat another who was not elected?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I apprehend that what is now proceeding is simply to test our endurance. There is a joint resolution here from the Senate which they are anxious to have adopted, providing an additional month's pay to Senate employes. The indications are that the Senate will agree to a speedy final adjournment. I think it is due to the Senate that this joint resolution should be passed, and I would like to call it up.

Mr. McKENZIE. I object to everything until the present order of the House is executed.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent to put upon its passage a joint resolution to correct an error in the enrollment of the legislative bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I object.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. McKINLEY.) Will the gentleman from Texas permit the title of the joint resolution to be read?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 106) to correct an error in the enrollment of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas insist on his objection?

Mr. REAGAN. I do.

Mr. ROBESON. Let the vote on seconding the pending motion to suspend the rules be announced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers have reported—ayes 63, noes 14.

Several MEMBERS. No quorum!

Mr. ROBESON. I have made an honest endeavor to reduce taxes. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TUCKER. I move that both the tellers be allowed to speak.

Mr. ROBESON. Will gentlemen permit me to withdraw the bill? That is what I propose to do.

Mr. ATHERTON. I move that there be a call of the House.*

Mr. ROBESON. Since the point of no quorum is made by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS,] the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] and all the gentlemen on that side of the House, I withdraw the proposition.

Mr. MILLS. I have objected to this bill because it seeks to reduce taxation on the banks and bankers of this country, and to keep taxes on clothing, food, and the implements of labor.

Mr. RANDALL. If every member of Congress who is now in the city, of both parties represented in this House, were present, there would not be a quorum; and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] knows very well that it is an impossibility to pass such a bill as this.

CORRECTION OF ERROR IN LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time Senate joint resolution No. 108, to correct an error in the enrollment of the "act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, be so amended that the salary of the chief clerk of the War Department shall read "$2,500" in lieu of "$2,000," as therein provided; this amendment being to correct an error in the enrollment of said act.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LYNCH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 278) instructing the Secretary of the Navy to convene a court of inquiry to investigate as to the circumstances of the loss of the exploring steamer Jeannette.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to call up Senate joint resolution No. 107, providing one month's extra pay for certain employes of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Acting Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the committee clerks, pages, laborers, and other employes of the Senate, who do not now receive annual salaries, a sum equal to one month's pay at the adjournment of the present session of Congress; and the amount necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be immediately available.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. McKINLEY.) Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution which has just been read?

Mr. HISCOCK. There is; I object.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I hope my friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] will not object. I think the Senate ought to be allowed to determine this matter for themselves.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House take a recess for two hours.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move to suspend the rules and put the joint resolution just read on its passage.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is the gentleman recognized for that purpose?

Mr. URNER. I have a question of privilege which I desire to bring before the House.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution which I called up.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have made a motion for a recess for two hours.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion for a recess.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 43, noes 17.

Mr. MILLS. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HISCOCK. What is the object of raising a question of no quorum?

Mr. MILLS. For the purpose of transacting business. Our Calendars are full of bills; let us pass some of them.

Mr. HISCOCK. There will be no business done if we continue in session.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. There will be no business done; we might as well take a recess.

The SPEAKER. The point is made that no quorum has voted. Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. MILLS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 41, noes 10.

Mr. MILLS. No quorum has voted. There are gentlemen here who have a bill which they desire to have acted on.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being insisted upon that no quorum has voted, the tellers will resume their places and continue the count, and members who have not voted are requested to vote on one side or the other.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] be permitted to call up for consideration a bill to provide a territorial government for the Territory of Alaska, which is a very important matter. The bill, I believe, proposes to extend the laws of Washington Territory over the Territory of Alaska. There is no form of government there, and it is important that some bill of the kind should be passed this session. I now ask unanimous consent of the House that the gentleman be permitted to call up that bill and have it acted upon.

Mr. MILLS. I object; there is another question pending.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] will not object. It is a matter which should be considered. There are many people in Alaska, and there is no form of government there to protect either life or property. I respectfully ask the gentleman from Texas to allow this bill to be considered now and passed.

Mr. McLANE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PAGE. Do I understand that the gentleman from Texas objects to the consideration of the bill I have indicated?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I think there is a bill to which there will be no objection whatever. While there is a lull in the business I ask unanimous consent to take up a bill for the admission of South Dakota into the Union as a State.

Mr. McCOOK. I object.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Is there objection?

Mr. RANDALL. There is.

Mr. McCOOK. Is there objection to my calling up a bill donating condemned cannon?

The SPEAKER. The House is now dividing. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] insist upon his motion for a recess for two hours?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will continue the count.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion for a recess be withdrawn for the purpose of admitting an application for unanimous consent can it be renewed immediately?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will withdraw the motion for a recess if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] be recognized with the understanding that he shall renew the motion or will yield to me to renew it.

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged motion; and there is no doubt about the right to renew it.

PRINTING OF HOUSE DIGEST.

Mr. SPRINGER. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed and bound for the use of the House 2,000 copies of the Digest for the second session of the present Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the necessity of printing so large a number?

Mr. SPRINGER. The usual number is 1,950.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not speaking as to the usual number. The ordinary practice is to print a vast body of matter which nobody wants and nobody reads. At least one-half of all the publications made by Congress are absolutely worthless for the general purposes of the country. I ask my friend why it is proposed to print so large a number?

Mr. SPRINGER. The number printed of this Digest has never been sufficient to supply the demands of members of the current Congress, of new members coming in, and the requests we are constantly receiving from the State Legislatures for copies of this work. This resolution proposes the printing of substantially the usual number.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not talking at all about the usual number. The excessive growth of this printing business has become a subject of grave and just complaint.

Mr. SPRINGER. This whole document is stereotyped, and the usual number printed without any order would be 1,950 copies. This resolution will limit the number to 2,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I see no reason why there should be a larger number of these books printed than will suffice for the wants of members of the House and the Senate.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that next winter there will be a large number of the State Legislatures in session; and we frequently receive requests for this document from the rising statesmen of the country who desire to understand the intricacies of parliamentary law as practiced in this body. Many of these gentlemen are or expect to be candidates for Congress, and they wish to be informed beforehand in regard to our rules.

This resolution will furnish a very small number of these books to supply the needs of gentlemen throughout the country who wish to study our rules in advance. As the resolution proposes simply the printing of the usual number, I think it ought to be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do I understand that this document is much called for?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is greatly demanded.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is very pleasant reading, no doubt.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir. I am very glad that there is nobody in the gentleman's district who desires to contest with him the honor of coming to this body, because we could not get along very well without him. But in other parts of the country there are gentlemen ambitious to become members of this House, and who wish to study the rules in advance. Some gentleman suggests to me that if there is anything calculated to terrify a person who aspires to become a member of this body it would be to require him to read our rules and understand them.

Mr. HOLMAN. This resolution proposes to print 2,000 copies for the coming session of Congress?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; the second session.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not my friend know that in the ordinary course of things three hundred and fifty copies would be the outside number required? I must object to the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. Without any order of this kind 1,950 copies will be printed. This resolution simply fixes the number at 2,000. Every volume thus ordered will be required.

Mr. HOLMAN. This resolution proposes an increase even upon the present enormous number.

Mr. SPRINGER. An increase of fifty copies.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. The book is already stereotyped, and the law provides for the printing; and the number is to be fixed for each session by resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust my friend will reduce the number proposed in the resolution. It is absolutely certain that not one-half of this number can or will be used. Two or three copies for each member are all that we shall have occasion for, even to meet the requests of our constituents.

Mr. SPRINGER. I insist that the usual number of this document should be printed. I have always had more demands for it than I could supply. The book is already stereotyped; and the difference in cost between the number which the resolution proposes and the usual number will be trifling. Fifty copies must at any rate go to the Congressional Library for distribution to libraries throughout the country. New members of the next Congress (and their name will be legion) must have copies of this work.

The question being on the adoption of the resolution,

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 6.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced the passage of joint resolution (H. R. No. 290) providing for the printing of the annual Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1881.

It further announced the passage of the following bills; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. No. 1923) for the relief of Louisa Boddy;

A bill (S. No. 1174) to grant the right of way over the public lands and a military reservation to the Jacksonville, Saint Augustine and Halifax Railway Company; and

A bill (S. No. 2132) granting a pension to Eliza H. Ramsey.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House authorizing the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House and of the Senate to purchase the thirty-two elastic settees now in the Rotunda of the Capitol.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. The only difference between the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and myself in reference to the printing of the Digest of the Rules is about $37, and in order that there may be no time consumed in contention over that sum, I withdraw the resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the proper course for the gentleman to take.

FOLDING DOCUMENTS.

Mr. URNER. I am directed by the Committee on Accounts to report, as a substitute for other resolutions on the same subject before that committee, the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be, and is hereby, authorized to retain upon his rolls and in the employ of the House the twelve additional laborers in the folding-room whose employment was authorized by the resolution of the House of March 30, 1882, until their services in folding speeches is no longer required, when they shall be discharged: Provided, That such service shall not continue longer than thirty days from the time they are now authorized to be employed. And the Postmaster of the House is also hereby authorized to continue the employment of the two persons whose employment was authorized by the resolution of the House of February 16, 1882, for the same time the said additional laborers in the folding-room shall be employed as hereinbefore authorized, and the expense of such additional employment shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. How does that come before the House?
 The SPEAKER. As a privileged matter.
 Mr. McMILLIN. Is not this the same report which was beaten on a yea-and-nay vote the other day?
 Mr. URNER. It has been materially modified.
 Mr. McMILLIN. How has it been modified?
 The SPEAKER. It was not beaten.
 Mr. URNER. The resolution has been materially modified.
 Mr. McMILLIN. What is the difference between the modified resolution and the other one?
 Mr. URNER. The original resolution provided for the employment for sixty days, while this provides for their employment only thirty days. The original report provided for six men in the post-office and this provides for only two.
 Mr. McMILLIN. The committee has examined this question and found this force to be necessary.
 Mr. URNER. The committee did examine the matter thoroughly and this force is necessary.
 The resolution was adopted.
 Mr. URNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNLAWFUL OCCUPATION OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. RICE, of Missouri, from the Committee on the Public Lands, by unanimous consent, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 3560) to prevent the unlawful occupation of the public lands; which was referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE OVER THE SAINT CROIX RIVER.

Mr. MURCH. I ask, by unanimous consent, to call up and put on its passage at this time the bill (S. No. 1787) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Saint Croix River between the city of Calais, Maine, and Saint Stephen's, New Brunswick.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Maine Shore-Line Railway, a corporation organized and created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Maine, be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to construct, own, maintain, and operate a railway bridge over the Saint Croix River between the city of Calais, in the State of Maine, and the town of Saint Stephen's, in the Province of New Brunswick, Dominion of Canada, at such point as may be most convenient to said corporation to unite and connect their railroad to be constructed by them in the said city of Calais with any railroad that may be constructed by any person or company in the said Dominion of Canada, and to build and lay on and across said bridge ways or tracks for the passage of railway trains and foot-passengers, for the transit of which said corporation may charge a reasonable toll; and that said bridge when completed shall be deemed and taken to be a legal structure: Provided, That the consent of the proper authorities of the Dominion of Canada shall have been obtained before said bridge shall be built or commenced.

SEC. 2. That the plan and location of any bridge the construction of which is hereby authorized shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and the bridge, if built at any distance greater than one hundred feet below the present toll-bridge between Calais, Maine, and Saint Stephen's, New Brunswick, or the head of navigation, shall be so located as not to obstruct, impair, or injuriously modify the free navigation of the river, and shall be built with the piers parallel to the current, leaving the water-way unobstructed by riprap or piling, or other obstructions, and shall have at the crossing of the main channel of the river a draw of not less than sixty feet of clear opening, which shall be located at a point best calculated to accommodate commerce, which draw shall at all times be opened promptly for passing vessels upon reasonable signal, except when railway trains are passing over the same; and at all times during the season of navigation proper signal-lights shall be used and maintained at the expense of the aforesaid company to guide vessels approaching said draw: Provided, That the construction of said bridge shall not be commenced until the plan and location thereof have been approved by the Secretary of War and the said company has been notified of the same in writing: And provided further, That the consent of the proper authorities of the Dominion of Canada shall have been obtained before said bridge shall be built or commenced.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved. And the right to require any changes in said structure or its entire removal at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think perhaps that is all right.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. MURCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DIGEST OF POINTS OF ORDER.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move the adoption of the following resolution, which has for its object the publication of what the House has already ordered to be compiled.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That all questions of order decided in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on general appropriation and revenue bills, compiled by the Journal Clerk under the resolution of May 5, be printed, under the direction of the Journal Clerk, for the use of the House.

The resolution was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now move that the House take a recess until four o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at one o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until four o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House, at four o'clock p. m., resumed its session.

EXTRA PAY, SENATE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I made objection to the Senate resolution for the pay of certain of its employés. At the time I supposed it was a joint resolution providing for the payment of all employés of the Senate, and I now withdraw the objection which I then made.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) providing one month's extra pay for certain employés of the Senate.

Resolved, etc. That the Acting Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to all committee clerks, pages, laborers, and other employés of the Senate who do not now receive annual salaries, a sum equal to one month's pay at the adjournment of the present session of Congress, and the amount necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be immediately available.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say a word, Mr. Speaker, before that resolution is acted upon by the House. The resolution which was passed by the House, or the provision incorporated in the sundry civil appropriation bill, for the payment of one month's extra compensation to the permanent employés of the House as well as to its temporary employés, and involving an expenditure of some $35,000, I thought was thoroughly inadmissible as a legislative measure; for, as to the permanent employés, their salaries, as is well known, not only in the House but in the Senate as well, although unequal in amount, are perhaps the best that are paid to-day in any corresponding service of the Government; and if that provision had been confined to the temporary employés of the House there would have been at least a fair excuse for the measure. But as the provision extended both to the permanent and to the temporary employés, whose salaries are of course comparatively unimportant in amount as well as in duration of time, I did not think it was a proper measure to pass.

The only question which now confronts us, however, is whether the present resolution providing for this extra pay simply to the temporary employés of the Senate, which would have been deemed fair and reasonable with reference to the House employés, shall pass, in view of the fact that the House made provision not only for its temporary but for its permanent employés. The question arises whether the House does not owe it to the Senate to pass the measure—and that is the present question—in order that these employés may be put upon the same footing with what has been customary in reference to the temporary employés of the House.

For myself, Mr. Speaker, I must be permitted to say that in my judgment both the permanent and temporary employés of the House have ample compensation already. But certainly this measure proposed by the Senate is decidedly more moderate and reasonable than that which was passed by the House in behalf of our own employés; and inasmuch as this concerns the Senate alone, and is less objectionable than that which passed the House, I do not deem it proper to raise an objection myself to the passage of this resolution.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. May I ask the gentleman from Indiana a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish to ask if the resolution which the gentleman has spoken of in regard to the extra compensation of the House employés did not pass the House with the intention of equalizing their salaries with the Senate employés, who receive greater compensation than our employés?

Mr. HOLMAN. That was the excuse given, and yet my friend from Illinois knows very well that the inequality among the employés of the House is just as great and in some instances more striking than the inequalities between the employés of the House and the Senate; and when you talk about equalizing these salaries the proper mode of beginning would seem to be in the House itself, and not as between the two Houses.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I am informed that there are one or two employés of the House who receive more than the corresponding employés of the Senate, but that the large mass of employés of the House receive at least 20 per cent. less than the Senate employés. The resolution or action of the House with reference to the month's extra pay for its employés was with a view simply to equalizing the salaries. Now, if we pass this Senate resolution we make the inequality between the salaries just the same as it was before.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard for a moment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me answer the suggestions of the gentleman from Illinois. I wish to say to him that this Senate resolution applies only to the temporary employés. While it is true that some of the employés of the House receive less compensation than corresponding employés of the Senate, yet even the employés of the House receiving the lowest compensation are better paid, as we all know, than other employés of this Government in the various departments and performing similar services and assuming the same degree of responsibility. But this is a question that does not concern the subject of the equalization of salaries as between the two Houses. The question now is whether or not it is proper to pay the temporary employés of the Senate, as this resolution provides, the one month's extra pay.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, my judgment is that we can hardly refuse to pass this resolution with any sort of propriety. I understand that the session employés of the Senate get the same salary, at least the same per diem pay, that our session employés receive, and as we have given to our session employés, along with our annual employés, a month's extra pay, I do not think that we can with propriety refuse to give these employés of the Senate the same pay we have given to our own.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does this apply only to the sessional employés of the Senate?

Mr. ATKINS. It applies alone to sessional employés.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will my colleague from Tennessee state what has been the custom hitherto as to sessional employés of the Senate?

Mr. ATKINS. This custom of giving an extra month's salary originated in giving it to the sessional employés; but it has been extended so as to give it to the annual employés. The fact is, as I understand, when the similar resolution passed a year ago it included only the annual employés and excluded the sessional employés, which was a wrong discrimination.

I agree with the gentleman from Indiana that this is not the proper thing to do. I think we ought to make these salaries and this compensation what they ought to be, and not give a month's extra pay at the end of the session to any class of employés. I would give them enough and then stop. But as we have done this thing for the House employés I do not think we could with any sort of propriety refuse to pass this resolution.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I was not listening attentively when the resolution was read. Will my friend from Tennessee state whether I am correctly informed that this applies only to the temporary employés?

Mr. ATKINS. It applies only to the sessional employés.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And only to those who receive no greater compensation than the corresponding employés of the House?

Mr. ATKINS. That is my understanding.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If that be so I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. McMILLIN. I concur heartily with what my friend from Tennessee has said, and also the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] with reference to the perniciousness of this method of legislation. It is high time if the salaries of the employés of Congress are not sufficient that we should make them sufficient by general statute. I cannot conceive of anything which speaks more loudly of the want of that resolution which ought to characterize us than to fix a salary, saying it is enough, and then giving more in the way of a month's extra pay.

If the salaries of these employés are not large enough let us stand up like men and make them large enough; and if they are let us not give the extra month. Let us not come here day after day, month after month, session after session, and year after year, and have a half-begging resolution presented, objections made, and discussions as to whether it be in order or not; but let us fix the salaries and compensation at what they ought to be. For myself, expressing my own opinion, I think they are large enough. Let the regular salaries or the regular compensation be fixed by general law and adhered to.

Mr. SIMONTON. I offer as an amendment to the Senate bill what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the laborers in the cloak-room their present compensation for and including the month of August.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order that that is not germane to the pending joint resolution.

Mr. SIMONTON. It is a resolution that ought to pass any way. Those employés have not received any extra compensation.

The SPEAKER. The amendment proposed is a simple resolution offered as an amendment to a joint resolution of the Senate.

Mr. SIMONTON. I withdraw the amendment, proposing to offer it immediately after the joint resolution is disposed of.

The joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move now that the House take a recess for one hour.

Mr. SIMONTON. I hope the gentleman will let me offer the resolution just read.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the gentleman from New York whether it would not be better to take a recess till eight o'clock.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will amend the motion by making the hour six o'clock.

W. H. BAILEY.

On motion of Mr. POUND, by unanimous consent, leave was given to W. H. Bailey to withdraw his papers from the committee to audit expenses attending the illness and death of the late President James A. Garfield.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEIRCE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 3825) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a ponton railway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the mouth of the Upper Iowa River, in the State of Iowa;

A bill (H. R. No. 3920) to amend section 4766, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 3854) to repeal so much of section 3385 of the Revised Statutes as imposes an export tax on tobacco;

A bill (H. R. No. 6525) donating condemned cast-iron cannon, mortars, and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6103) authorizing the deputy collector of customs stationed at San Juan Island, in the Puget Sound district, to enter and clear vessels and collect duties;

A bill (H. R. No. 676) to refer the claim of the captors of the ram Albatraz to the Court of Claims;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) providing for a joint select committee to inquire into the condition and wants of American ship-building and ship-owning interests.

Mr. PEIRCE also, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution and bill of the Senate of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 108) to correct an error in the enrollment of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. No. 1787) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Saint Croix River, between the city of Calais, Maine, and Saint Stephen's, New Brunswick.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury, in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 263) granting the use of tents at soldiers' reunion to be held in the State of Iowa in the year 1882.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. SIMONTON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] withdraws for a moment his motion for a recess that I may submit some adverse reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection the reports will be received.

Mr. SIMONTON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back adversely the following bills; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2690) granting arrears of pension to Ellen W. P. Carter; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3104) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret J. Bird.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

The SPEAKER announced, as authorized and required by resolution of the House adopted to-day, the appointment, as the select committee to investigate in relation to the work in progress, the contracts, application of appropriations, &c., for the improvement of the Mississippi River, of Mr. BURROWS of Michigan, Mr. BUTTERWORTH of Ohio, Mr. ROBINSON of Massachusetts, Mr. HAZELTON of Wisconsin, Mr. HISCOCK of New York, Mr. THOMAS of Illinois, Mr. CARLISLE of Kentucky, Mr. HOLMAN of Indiana, and Mr. ELLIS of Louisiana.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now move that the House take a recess until eight o'clock.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to amend that motion so as to take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning. We do not want to come here and swelter to-night for nothing.

Mr. TUCKER. I would inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] what is the purpose of taking a recess to eight o'clock?

Mr. HISCOCK. I think from what I have learned that there is certainly an even chance for final adjournment this evening.

Mr. TUCKER. Very well; if there is an even chance for adjournment then let us take a recess until eight o'clock.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think there is more than an even chance.

Mr. ATKINS. Does the gentleman from New York believe that we can adjourn to-night?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do.

Mr. ATKINS. Then we ought to take a recess until eight o'clock.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. I believe that it is more than likely that we can adjourn to-night.

Mr. BROWNE. It has not been long since I had a conversation with a distinguished gentleman who ought to know about it, and he thinks there is no probability of adjourning to-night.

Mr. PAGE. My information is the reverse of that of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BROWNE,] and it is that we will have an opportunity to adjourn before twelve o'clock.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn, submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MCKENZIE.]

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] moves that the House now take a recess until eight o'clock; to which motion the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] moves as an amendment that the House shall take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow.

The amendment of Mr. BROWNE was not agreed to.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. HISCOCK, and upon a cave voce vote the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I call for a vote by division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 12.

Mr. BROWNE. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, tellers will be ordered, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. HISCOCK, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. BROWNE, will act as tellers.

Mr. BROWNE. I withdraw the point that no quorum has voted. I made it because the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] said that I would not do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. UPSON. I renew the point of order that no quorum has voted. Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HORR and Mr. UPSON were appointed. The tellers began the count, but before concluding,

Mr. UPSON said: I withdraw the point of order that no quorum voted.

So (no further count being called for) the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at eight o'clock p. m.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move that when the House adjourns it be to meet to-morrow at three o'clock. There is no use of our coming here at eleven o'clock. We shall not have anything to do.

Mr. BLACKBURN. We might adjourn till Friday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House adjourn, and the gentleman from Kansas moves that when the House adjourns it be to meet to-morrow at three o'clock.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say that when we meet here to-morrow morning, if it is the disposition of the Senate to consider the internal-tax bill, and they mean it, I should certainly favor an adjournment, as suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] until Friday next.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HISCOCK, that the House adjourn, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at eight o'clock and two minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BLACKBURN: The petition of Frank Backof, praying that the Secretary of War be directed to grant him an honorable discharge—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOUK: The petition of Bowling Curtis and of Presley E. Johnson, for pensions—severally to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of R. M. Carden, for compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LYNCH: Papers relating to the claim of Rebecca A. Minor, of Adams County, Mississippi—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of W. B. Mitchell and others, for an appropriation for educational purposes—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. J. F. UPDEGRAFF: The petition of Isaac Price and 41 others, citizens of Jefferson County, Ohio, for an appropriation for education in Alaska—to the same committee.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 8, 1882.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I desire to correct the error that I find in the RECORD, which is repeated in the Journal as read to-day. I am recorded in the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings as being absent at the vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] to the resolution for final adjournment, whereas I was present in the Chamber and did vote distinctly in the affirmative.

Mr. BLAIR. I heard you.

Mr. BAYARD. The resolution I believed then was brought forward in good faith by the party in control of the business of the Senate, the majority, and signified to me what their will was in respect to the disposition of public affairs, and I voted for it distinctly and affirmatively. There was at that time, as is not unusual in this Chamber, a good deal of noise and confusion, which possibly and probably did prevent the Clerk from hearing my vote. I do not know that it is necessary at all times for one to shout his responses in the Chamber, but I endeavor to make my utterance distinct enough. I merely wish to correct that error. I did vote in the affirmative promptly as my name was called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal as corrected will be approved.

JAMES F. CULLEN.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that the Senate take up the bill (H. R. No. 5158) for the relief of James F. Cullen.

Mr. COCKRELL. I raise the question whether there is a quorum present.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill is on the Calendar, and I ask indulgence for a moment to state why I make this request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point is raised that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BLAIR. I think there must be a quorum here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will count and see.

Mr. BLAIR. I think the Senator will hardly raise that point against this case.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have raised it, most unquestionably.

Mr. BLAIR. However, the Senator may withdraw it.

Mr. COCKRELL. But I shall not.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the bill?

Mr. BLAIR. It is a pension case of a very pressing character.

Mr. PLATT. I hope there will be no objection to the Senator from New Hampshire calling up this matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it an unobjected pension case?

Mr. PLATT. It is not an unobjected case; there is a majority report and a minority report; but it is a very distressing case, and a case in which, if the Senate think there should be a pension granted at all, it ought to be granted at this session.

Mr. INGALLS. Are the majority in favor of it?

Mr. PLATT. The majority are in favor of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought it was one of those cases where the majority report was against the bill, and I do not propose to have such cases acted on without a quorum.

Mr. BLAIR. The majority were at first against it, but further investigation resulted in a change in the opinion of the majority. The applicant has been pressing his case all winter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate take up the bill for consideration?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be taken up by unanimous consent.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 5158) for the relief of James F. Cullen was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Commissioner of Pensions to adjudicate the pension claim of James F. Cullen, late a sergeant of Company A, Fifth Kentucky Volunteers, as though a formal application for pension had been filed by him in the Pension Office on the 7th of March, 1880.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON SHIPPING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. MILLER of New York, Mr. CONGER, and Mr. VEST the members on the part of the Senate of the joint select committee on the revival of shipping, authorized by the joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) providing for a joint select committee to inquire into the condition and wants of American ship-building and ship-owning interests.

STATE, WAR, AND NAVY BUILDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia, the members on the part of the Senate of the joint select committee to make an examination of and set apart such portions of the State, War, and Navy building for the use and occupancy of the State, War, and Navy Departments respectively as in their judgment the best interests of the public service and the needs of said Departments may require, as provided for by the sixth section of the act making appropriations for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask that the House adjournment resolution be laid before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator to yield one moment until I call up a joint resolution relating to the Capitol police.

Mr. VOORHEES. I shall ask a like favor. I want to pass a matter of relief before we take up the adjournment resolution.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the adjournment resolution is considered it will not interfere with any matter. We can go on after fixing the time for adjournment.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Wisconsin yields to me to have this matter disposed of, I understand.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution which the Senator from Iowa asks to have considered will be announced.

The ACTING SECRETARY. A joint resolution (H. R. No. 281) to pay the Capitol police one month's extra pay.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

GARFIELD MEMORIAL HOSPITAL.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the present consideration of the House bill No. 6702, reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia a few days ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. INGALLS. He will yield for this purpose. It is a charitable and humane purpose, which ought to be carried out.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 6702) to authorize the transfer of the property of the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home to the Garfield Memorial Hospital was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President—

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to give way to me, merely to have an order made.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Very well.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am perfectly willing for the Senator from Wisconsin to have the adjournment resolution passed, but I do not want everybody else yielded to except myself.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. It is simply an order for the withdrawal of papers that I desire.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files the papers pertaining to the bill for the relief of G. W. Thompson and others.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask to take up the House resolution for final adjournment.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at twelve m., Saturday, August 5, 1882.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move to amend the resolution by striking out "twelve m., Saturday, August 5," and inserting in lieu thereof "one o'clock p. m., Tuesday, August 8."

Mr. SEWELL. I understand that the House has already taken a recess until one o'clock. I suggest, therefore, the hour of two o'clock.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The House has taken a recess until twelve, I understand.

Mr. WINDOM. I suggest to make it three o'clock, as there are two or three treaties that ought to be acted upon.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Very well; I will modify my amendment so as to make it three o'clock p. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the resolution, fixing three o'clock to-day as the time for final adjournment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOAR, (when Mr. DAWES's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. DAWES] is paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST.] My colleague is extremely unwell, being exhausted by the labors of the session, and therefore is absent. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. BECK, (when Mr. HALE's name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] but as I am advised by a Senator that he would vote "yea" if present, I have voted "yea."

Mr. HARRISON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. LAPHAM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. PLATT, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. SLATER,] who was obliged to go to his home.

Mr. SAULSBURY, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY,] but I am informed that the Senator from Michigan would not object to my voting. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. VAN WYCK, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER,]

Mr. WALKER, (when his name was called.) My colleague [Mr. GARLAND] is paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] and I am paired with the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. McDILL,]

Mr. WINDOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS,] If he were present, I should vote "nay." If my vote is necessary to make a quorum, however, I am authorized to vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. VEST, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,]

Mr. BLAIR. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAMPTON,] unless my vote is needed for a quorum.

Mr. PLATT. If my vote is necessary to make a quorum I think I am at liberty to vote; therefore I vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote lacks four of a quorum.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is paired generally with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] but on this question I have paired him with the Senator from New York, [Mr. MILLER,]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] is paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME,]

Mr. ALDRICH. Not on this question. They would both vote the same way on this question, and I had special authority from the Senator from New York to pair him with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] on this question. The Senator from New York would vote "yea," and the Senator from Maine would vote "nay," if both were present.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say that the statement I made, as the Senate well know, was on the information of another Senator, and there is some confusion about it.

Mr. VEST. I am informed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that the pair of his colleague [Mr. DAWES] has been transferred. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR. I have transferred the pair of my colleague, so that he is paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAMPTON,]

Mr. WALKER. I am informed that the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. McDILL,] if present, would vote "yea." I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know how my colleague [Mr. McDILL] would vote.

Mr. BLAIR. I understand the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. WINDOM. I have reserved the right to vote if necessary to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIAMS,]

Mr. LAPHAM. I reserved the right to vote to make a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A quorum has now voted.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] is paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON,] The Senator from Maine, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT, (after having voted in the negative.) I understand a quorum has voted, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—26.

The resolution as amended was concurred in.

ADDITIONAL PENSIONS.

Mr. VOORHEES. We are now approaching the certain termination of this long and arduous session of Congress. During its existence many measures of relief, or alleged relief, have been brought forward for our consideration. Some have been full of merit; in some the merits have been disputed. I hold in my hand a bill passed by the House of Representatives with great unanimity on the 8th of June for the relief of a class of persons the most meritorious, in my judgment, in this Government; and I am about to ask the Senate, as a parting service toward this excellent class of people, to take up and pass the bill (H. R. No. 1410) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pension of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service.

Mr. PLATT. I must reserve the right to object to the consideration of the bill. I should like the attention of the Senate for a moment. The bill has received a good deal of attention by the Committee on Pensions. That committee has been unable to come to any conclusion upon it. I think if the Senate were prepared to hear my statement at length in regard to that bill the Senate would see that it ought not to pass in the shape in which it is. I cannot discuss the merits of a bill on a motion to consider it, but if the Senate desire to consider the bill I must ask after it is taken up a considerable time to state what are the inconsistencies of the bill and what its effect would be. I reserve my right to object.

Mr. VOORHEES. But the Senator will not object to my saying a single word. I have no purpose of reflecting upon the Committee on Pensions. I do not do that; I have no such feeling. I have waited until the last hour, knowing that this matter was being considered by the Committee on Pensions. I think if time is given that more can be shown why the bill should pass as it passed the House, after careful consideration there, than can be shown against it.

The passage of this bill will carry not to a great many, for this class of lame people are dying more rapidly according to the death rates than people are aware of, but it will carry to some thousands of homes more gladness, more sense of relief than half a dozen such tax bills as we have been considering in favor of a different class of people.

I sincerely hope that the Senator from Connecticut can see his duty clear to allow this bill to be taken up and passed, and if it takes an hour, or two hours, or until the hour-hand of yonder clock is on the figure III and the minute-hand is on the figure XII, it will not be time badly spent in the estimation of the country.

Mr. PLATT. I yield to no man, not even to the Senator from Indiana, in my sympathy for the soldier, but the bill in its present shape will add $7,000,000 to the pension-roll annually. It is only four months to December. These persons all enjoy pensions now. I do not say that there is not merit and justice in making some increase of their pension.

Mr. INGALLS. What rate have they now?

Mr. PLATT. Eighteen dollars and $24. But I do think that a bill of this sort should not be passed except when we can have the deliberate judgment of the Senate upon it. The motion is not in order; the bill is still in committee. The only motion which is in order is to discharge the committee, and to that I shall object.

Mr. HARRISON. I am in favor of this bill; and while it may be that the deliberations of the committee might suggest some amendments, or perhaps enlarge its scope so as to extend its benefits to other classes of pensioners equally deserving, yet I would be glad if we could have the present consideration of the measure.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I unite in the opinion expressed by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HARRISON,] and if I may be allowed, being a member of the Committee on Pensions, to which this matter has been referred, which is so ably presided over by the Senator from Connecticut, I feel it is due to that class of persons represented by the bill to say that there should have been some action taken on this matter. As a member of that committee I am frank to say that we are not entirely freed from the charge of not having fully discharged our own duty in regard to the matter. The bill was passed by the other House and it should have received some report from the committee to which it was referred. If the bill was loosely drawn it should have been corrected in that respect. If there were another class of soldiers who have suffered equally as much and are equally entitled to consideration in the way of increase of pension by reason of disease contracted in the service, which entitled them to relief as much as those who lost a limb, then that matter should have been considered and they should have been added.

No matter if it may add $7,000,000 to the pension list; no matter if $7,000,000 be taken from the Treasury; far better that $7,000,000 be expended in the way which is proposed by the bill than the additional seven million, and ten million to that seven million upon the river and harbor bill, which was passed by a two-thirds vote of both branches over the veto of the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut objects to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. Does the Senator from Connecticut insist on his objection?

Mr. PLATT. I do.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well.

Mr. PLATT. I must do it.

TAX ON DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. WINDOM. I submit a report from the select committee of the Senate to inquire whether any money has been raised to promote or defeat the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 5656) to amend the laws relating to the entry of distilled spirits in distillery and bonded warehouses, and the withdrawal of the same therefrom. I move that the report lie on the table and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

DIGEST OF ELECTION CASES.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to make a motion to go into executive session.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me for one moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had recognized the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. The chairman of the Committee on Elections in the House has repeatedly within the last few days desired the passage of a brief resolution for the convenience of that body, authorizing the clerk of that committee to prepare in vacation the digest of the contested-election cases. It involves the expenditure of a thousand dollars. I ask unanimous consent for its consideration now; I report it from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 279) to provide for preparing the reports of contested-election cases in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES H. TOMPKINS.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to call up Senate bill No. 729.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 729) for the relief of Charles H. Tompkins, of the United States Army. It proposes to direct the accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Charles H. Tompkins, a lieutenant-colonel and deputy quartermaster-general in the Army, for reimbursement of the moneys actually expended by him in providing himself with quarters and fuel while awaiting orders at San Francisco during a part of the year 1874.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZA E. HEBERT.

Mr. KELLOGG. I desire to appeal to the Senate in behalf of a petitioner who has been here a number of years from Louisiana, who has an especially meritorious case. The bill is the first one upon the Calendar in order, and has been passed over two or three times by misapprehension. It is the bill (S. No. 386) for the relief of Mrs. Eliza E. Hebert. I should like to have it taken up and passed.

The bill was read.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, to strike out "$23,150" and insert "$21,090."

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the reading of the report. The sum is a very large one.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Claims, March 30, 1882.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is that claim subject to a single objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is too large an amount to be passed at this time. The amount is large. I object, and let the Senate take the responsibility. I do not think at this hour, when we have agreed to adjourn, and there is scarcely a quorum, that we ought to pass a claim involving many thousands of dollars.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One objection carries the bill over, unless a majority, on motion, vote to take it up.

JOHN G. TAYLOR.

Mr. GROOME. I ask the Senate to proceed at this time to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3680) for the relief of John G. Taylor.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think I shall object to that.

Mr. GROOME. Will the Senator from Wisconsin before making the objection hear me?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I withdraw my objection to the bill of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. GROOME. Then let us take up the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3680) for the relief of John G. Taylor. It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, in adjusting the accounts of John G. Taylor, former collector of customs at the port of Annapolis, Maryland, to allow him a credit of $127.09, being the amount paid by Taylor, as collector of customs, to John R. Briscoe, as surveyor of customs at the port of Nottingham, Maryland, on account of salary of Briscoe, and disallowed to Taylor by the Treasury Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THERESA CROSBY WATSON.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 1911) granting a pension to Theresa Crosby Watson, was indefinitely postponed, and that it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider the indefinite postponement will be considered as agreed to, there being no objection, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. HAWLEY. I feel bound by instructions of the Committee on Printing to ask for the consideration of Senate bill No. 2150, to provide for extra work in the Government Printing Office in cases of emergency. I will state the object.

Last December a construction was made of the law by which the Public Printer was unable to pay any extra pay to men put at work in an emergency after midnight. The printers and the Public Printer desire to have the law corrected so as to be as it was before, and was always supposed to be till last December, that if he puts men in an emergency (not his regular night force) at work between twelve o'clock at night and morning he may give them, according to the usages of the trade, extra pay.

I ask for the present consideration of the bill. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] objected to it before, but he told me a few days ago that he would waive all objection to its consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is that the same discretion heretofore exercised by the Printer?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, sir. Mr. Defrees came to the conclusion on consultation with the authorities last December, and Mr. Rounds coincides, that the law as it stands under the new construction given does not allow it. The law is found to prevent the Public Printer giving the usual extra pay.

The universal custom of the trade is, as I know myself from experience, when day hands are put upon extra work after midnight they have a little extra allowance, varying in various places from 25 to 50 per cent. above day work. That was always the way in the Government Printing Office, till a while ago a law was passed establishing certain rates of pay and not making exceptions or giving any power to make exceptions. By and by the Public Printer discovered that he had no right to make the extra allowances. All the printers expected it, and the Public Printer desires to give it. He will seldom put on men in this way, but he is sometimes obliged by press of work to call his day hands to come in and work after midnight, and he cannot give them a cent more for it. It is quite right that he should, and the provisions of this bill allow him to give what the usages of the trade and the justice of the case may demand in the event of extra work. It does not touch the regular RECORD night hands.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senate to take up House bill No. 6405.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to inquire why bills are not taken up in order? They are not being taken up in regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Simply because unanimous consent is given. If there is any objection, of course the Calendar is in order regularly.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to make an inquiry in reference to the action of the committee of conference on the Japanese indemnity bill. I desire to know, if any Senator is present who belongs to that committee, whether we are to expect a report at the present session of the Senate on that subject?

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand that a majority of the House conferees are absent from the city; the papers so state, and we have not heard from them. That is the only answer I can give. The Senate conferees have been willing to meet at any time, but I understand a majority of those on the House side are out of the city.

Mr. MORGAN. I had no doubt when that case was recommitted to the same committee that it would meet this fate. This case has been smothered in the Senate of the United States by what I conceive to be the inaction of the body, and the matter has gone on until one of the very prominent features of interest I have had in it has ceased. Last night old Rear-Admiral McDougal was called to his long home, without having experienced the fact that he had a country that was grateful to him for the great services he had rendered, leaving his old widow, blind and poor, and a set of children who are now doubly orphans, his son's children, who depended upon the old man's income for their daily bread. His pay as a retired officer of the Navy is cut off, and I had hoped that the Senate of the United States would be prepared to turn over to his family a decent proportion of that $140,000 which was given to us in trust by the Governments of Great Britain, the Netherlands, and France for the support of the families of those gallant men, some of whom have perished and others of whom have survived, but many of whom have passed away since the great battle at the Straits of Nagasaki.

Mr. BAYARD. I have no measure to bring before the Senate, but as I understand that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has made reference to the Japanese indemnity bill, and as I was assigned by the Senate to the chairmanship of the conference committee, I have a word to say. The chairman of the House committee of conference had left the city before the second conferees of the Senate were appointed, and therefore it was impossible for us to have a meeting. There was no delay, but there was no possibility of bringing the two committees into conference in order to have action at this session after I became connected with the conference.

Mr. MORGAN. There was no delay on the part of the last committee of conference in urging this matter upon the consideration of the two bodies. The delay I complain of was before that time. It was a month's delay, when I persistently demanded interviews of these committees and could not get them, and what I have to complain of now is that the bill from the beginning has been committed to its enemies instead of its friends.

DANIEL CARROLL'S ESTATE.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 6405, and that the substitute reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia may be read.

The Acting Secretary read by its title the bill (H. R. No. 6405) to authorize the Court of Claims of the United States to ascertain the amount of damages sustained by Ann C. Carroll and Maria C. Fitzhugh, executrices of the estate of the late Daniel Carroll, deceased, by the regrading of the streets around square numbered 736 in the city of Washington.

Mr. ROLLINS. This is a matter of so much importance that inasmuch as the bill has to go back to the House, with no possibility of action there at this session, I think it ought to lie over. It involves a very important question.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. ROLLINS. I shall be obliged to object, under the circumstances.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An objection ends it.

MARY E. MURRAY.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. No. 2592) granting a pension to Mary E. Murray.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Mary E. Murray, daughter of the late Colonel William G. Murray, of the Eighty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $30 per month.

Mr. PLATT. Is there a majority report in favor of that individual bill?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I will state all about the bill if I have an opportunity. There is an adverse report on this bill from a majority of the Committee on Pensions, and it was placed on the Calendar with a favorable report from a minority of the Committee on Pensions. I am familiar with the case, perhaps more so than any member of the committee.

The father of this girl was a native of the town in which I live. He enlisted during the Mexican war, and while there rendered such gallant service that he was promoted in the regular Army. After the war was over he resigned, returned to his home, entered into business, and was a successful business man at the time of the breaking out of the rebellion. He then entered the service of his country as colonel of one of the Pennsylvania regiments; was killed, I think, in 1862, leaving a wife and two children. His wife died, and his business was all broken up and his property destroyed. The wife died about six months after his death, and a pension was granted to his two minor children of a few dollars a month until they became of the age of sixteen, one a boy and the other a girl. The boy has grown to manhood and is able to take care of himself; but this girl, owing to ill-health, is utterly unable to support herself. Her father was one of the most gallant and distinguished men from our State in the service. I think the case is in every way meritorious, and I shall be glad if the Senate will pass the bill as it came from the House without amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I must ask to have the report read and I must request the Senate to pay attention to the reading of the report. It will be, if the bill passes, the first instance in which, to my knowledge, Congress has pensioned the daughter of an officer less than a general, at any more than $8 per month.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. This man would have been a general in thirty days had he lived.

Mr. PLATT. It will be the first instance, if it passes, so far as I know, where the general law has been changed in that respect. The law with regard to dependent children is a pension till they are sixteen. This proposes to pension a dependent daughter of mature years at the rate of $30 per month, reduced by the recommendation of the minority of the committee to $15, and it opens a very wide door for the future. The ground upon which it is done is that the daughter is in ill-health; that she is, physically speaking, an infant; but I know that this case is to be followed by a host of cases, and it seems to me that it will result in Congress pensioning every son and daughter of a deceased soldier if he or she can show infirmity.

Having said this, and asking for the reading of the report, and the careful attention of the Senate to it, I have no more to say.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I know more about this case than any member of the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT. Have I not correctly stated it?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. The Senator has stated the case correctly so far as he is informed about it; but this I think is a special case.

This was one of the most distinguished men in the Army from the State of Pennsylvania, one of the brightest, best, and purest men that I knew of anywhere. He left these two children, and Congress knowing at the time that he had rendered remarkable service, very efficient service, passed an act giving them support until they should be sixteen years of age. It turns out that this girl is in the eyes of the law an infant, she is unable to take care of herself, unable to support herself, and the people of the community in which she lives, knowing the father and the services which he rendered to the Government, irrespective of party, irrespective of condition, have sent me letters time and again asking me to urge the passage of this bill.

I am somewhat responsible for this bill not having passed heretofore. There was another case on the Calendar of a Mary C. Murray. Some of my friends in the Senate to whom I talked about this case got the names mixed, and when that case was up took a special interest in its passage. My secretary, knowing the interest I had taken, wrote to this young girl that her bill had passed the Senate. Very many in the neighborhood in the town in which she lives and the county in which the town is located wrote to me kindly letters for the action I had taken. It turns out that it was a mistake. For that reason, in addition to the reasons which I have already given, I have a strong desire to see this bill pass the Senate.

I do not believe it will give rise to the passage of any other cases. There are exceptions to all rules, and this case I think ought to be made an exception. I feel earnestly about it. I feel more so than I have in any case that has been before Congress. I hope the Senate will be generous; I hope the Senate will not listen to this hard-hearted member of the Committee on Pensions, but will let themselves sympathize a little with this girl in her sore distress.

Mr. PLATT. I want to say that the House has already passed two other bills, taking this as a precedent, which are over here.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. We can stop them when they come up.

Mr. PLATT. That is what I object to. I am not hard hearted, and my course in the Senate as chairman of the Committee on Pensions and as a member of the Committee on Pensions authorizes me to deny with some degree of indignation the charge made against me by the Senator from Pennsylvania that I am hard hearted. I am not bad hearted enough to pass a bad pension case on account of impotency or from any other reason except because it is just and right and fair, and I think that is just what the rule of the Senate ought to be in all these cases.

Now, I ask for the reading of the reports, and then I have nothing further to say.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the following majority and minority reports, submitted by Mr. JACKSON and Mr. BLAIR, respectively, from the Committee on Pensions, May 9, 1882:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2592) granting a pension to Mary E. Murray, having examined the same, make the following report:

That Colonel William G. Murray, of the Eighty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, was killed at the head of his command at the battle of Winchester, Virginia, on the 23d of March, 1862. He left two children under sixteen years of age surviving him. In September, 1862, these minor children, by their guardian, made application for a pension under the act of Congress approved July 14, 1862. The claim was allowed, and they were granted a pension of $30 per month, commencing March 23, 1862, which was continued until the 24th of August, 1870, when the younger child, John B. Murray, reached the age of sixteen.

The right to a continuation of the pension under the general law having expired, the present bill proposes to again place the daughter of Colonel Murray upon the pension-roll and allow her a pension of $30 per month. The bill has passed the House at the present session of Congress.

Colonel Murray was an honorable citizen, a gallant officer, and the sole support of the daughter, who, it is stated, cannot fill a clerical position or serve in any capacity which will enable her to earn a livelihood, and is now dependent upon friends.

The case appeals strongly to our sympathies, but in the judgment of your committee it would be a bad precedent and productive of evil to pass this bill, inviting thereby thousands of similar applications for special relief beyond the present liberal provisions of the general law.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill be not passed, and that the same be indefinitely postponed by the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, submitted the following views of the minority, to accompany bill H. R. No. 2592:

The services of Colonel Murray were of unusual gallantry, and the example of his heroic death, at the head of his troops at the opening of the war, was of greater service to his country than if his life in the field had been prolonged for many years. The mother died within six months of the time when the father was killed, leaving the two infant children dependent and destitute, and this daughter suffering from physical incapacity, which has made her practically disabled ever since. The circumstances of the case are further set forth in the memorial of Colonel William G. Murray Post No. 39, Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic.

The minority believe that this girl is, and always must be, an infant less than sixteen years of age, in the eye and reason of the law, and urgently recommend that she receive the usual pension in such cases. There can be but few cases like hers in the country. It is only a question whether this country, some poor home, or the private charity of strangers shall furnish her future support.

The House bill gives her $30 per month. We recommend the passage of the bill, substituting $15 for $30. Thus amended, we recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I made this minority report. The law gives to the infant children support until sixteen years of age.

Mr. PLATT. How much?

Mr. BLAIR. It depends entirely upon the rank of the officer.

At sixteen years of age it is supposed that they will have arrived at such a degree of maturity and capacity as to take care of themselves. The reason is their dependence and incapacity to support themselves. This girl, as is stated in the minority report, is an infant still, and she must always remain an infant so far as her ability to gain a livelihood is concerned.

The importance of the services rendered by her father cannot be exaggerated. He died conspicuously at the opening of the war when an example of bravery and gallantry such as he furnished was of very great importance indeed. The children lost their mother within six months of the death of the father. They were supported by the Government until they were sixteen years of age. The girl can do no more toward her support now than she could when she was one year old, and it is as there stated only a question whether she shall become a beggar, whether she shall depend upon charity, or whether she shall be supported by these 50,000,000 people to whose prosperity her father contributed so much by his death.

There are very few cases like this. There is no danger of swamping the Treasury. There are only two cases that are analogous that have come to our knowledge during the entire session, and those cases are of very great hardship, and the country can hardly excuse itself, it seems to me, for turning these helpless persons adrift.

Mr. GROOME. Mr. President, I desire to say, before the vote is taken upon this case, that if Congress commences the business of pensioning the children of soldiers who have passed the pensionable age, no Senator can predict, even approximately, what amount of money will ultimately be required to pay the pensions of this class of persons. But I undertake to make this prediction, that if this bill passes, and the precedent thereby established leads to the adoption of the general rule that when children of soldiers who have passed the age of sixteen years continue to remain unable to support themselves, or later in life become so by reason of disease or the infirmities incident to old age, they are to be pensioned because their fathers did valuable service in some one of the wars in which our country has been involved, all the untold millions which have been and are yet to be disbursed from the Treasury in consequence of the arrears of pension act will dwindle into insignificance compared with the sums that will be ultimately required to pay the pensions of this vast class of pensioners. The list of other pensioners will after a few years steadily decrease until some fifty or sixty years hence it will disappear entirely or dwindle into insignificance; but fifty years hence this new class of pensioners will still be upon the increase, because then tens or hundreds of thousands of the children of the soldiers of the late war will be becoming infirm, decrepit, and necessitous, and utterly unable to support themselves, in consequence of extreme old age, and will claim that their condition and the valuable services rendered by their fathers in the days gone by to their country entitle them to be pensioned.

Sir, there is but one safe rule, and that is that no child of a soldier who has passed the pensionable age is to be pensioned because of any inability to earn a living for him or herself; and if that rule is once departed from, and if it comes to be understood that the adult descendants of soldiers, when no longer able to support themselves, can, notwithstanding they have passed the pensionable age, come in and receive pensions from this Government, no man can tell the extent of the aggregate ultimate drain upon the Treasury, or when that drain will end.

It has been well said that "hard cases make bad precedents," and I venture to say that no worse precedent could be established by this Congress than the passage of this bill to-day. I hope, therefore, while I sympathize not only with this young woman but with the needy everywhere, that this bill may not pass.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill stands as it came from the House. There is no amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The bill is in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from New Hampshire, who made the minority report, recommended an amendment making the pension $15 instead of $30 a month. Now it is proposed not to amend the bill. I ask to say just one word in relation to it.

These two children when they were under sixteen each received $15 a month. This daughter when she was under sixteen received $15 only. Now, having gone beyond the pensionable age, beyond the age when the law pensions her, it is proposed to give her twice as much as she received under the law when she was of pensionable age.

Mr. BLAIR. The children received $30 of pension which could be drawn on account of the father's death. I made the minority report recommending that she receive $15 a month, but I have not moved that amendment; I have not been in a situation to move it as an amendment. The bill is before the Senate with my views upon the matter. The bill was called up by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] and called up in my absence. I would be glad to see the bill passed. If it goes back to the House amended it is not possible for it to become a law at this session, but as we have voted not to consider pension cases at all which are controverted at this session, it is better that the country should give this girl a little more rather than a little less than she needs for her support.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the third reading of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAWLEY. I call attention to the fact that this is the first deliberate beginning of what may have another arrears-of-pensions account in it. Stop and think before you do these hasty supposed-to-be generous things that the country is not really asking for.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. It is not generous but merely just.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have my own opinion on that. While I want to give and give and give, I am not giving my own money. A million and a half of soldiers are taxed to pay these bills. I want to encourage generosity in this matter, but I say you must stop and think before you embark in this course. There are a million and a half, more or less, of our soldiers living now, and nobody knows how many children they have, and it is proposed to begin to pension every child of every deceased soldier. No country in the world ever came within 95 per cent. of giving as much money to the soldiers as ours has, and we are justly proud of it; but I tell you you are mistaken if you think the great body of honorably-discharged soldiers are perpetually besieging your doors to pour out your treasure. You are giving $100,000,000 a year for pensions. They pay the taxes as well as others. They are not anxious to bankrupt the country they offered their lives for. Do not trade any more than necessary in the name and the sacred name of patriotism.

I dare say these things because I was a soldier myself and served as well as I could in my own way. I dare say them because I speak in the name of as honest and patriotic men as ever lived, and I dare go before any assemblage of soldiers and take their vote on what is reasonable and just. Do all that generosity and necessity can reasonably call for, but I beg Senators not to be stampeded by pathos and pinchbeck eloquence in the name of patriotism.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the resolution of the House for the final adjournment of both Houses of Congress.

The message further announced that the House had appointed Mr. FRANK HISCOCK of New York, Mr. C. C. CARPENTER of Iowa, and Mr. J. D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee, a committee to join a similar committee to be appointed on the part of the Senate to wait on the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses of Congress are ready to adjourn if he has no further communication to make to them.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) providing one month's extra pay for certain employes of the Senate; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate concur in a resolution from the House appointing a committee to wait on the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that the usual practice is for the Senate to adopt its own resolution. This is not a concurrent resolution of the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Chair is right. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two members be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that, unless he may have some further communication to make, the two Houses of Congress, having finished the business before them, are ready to adjourn.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and Messrs. ANTHONY and BAYARD were appointed.

MARY E. MURRAY.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2592) granting a pension to Mary E. Murray.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I have never seen—

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow the bill to be read?

Mr. BLAIR. It has been read.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to hear it.

The bill was read.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I have never observed since I have been in this body any inclination on the part of the Senate to be stampeded by the pinchbeck eloquence of anybody. I have taken it to be a deliberative body and I imagine that its chief purpose in dealing with this as with every other claim is to do simple justice, justice tempered with mercy, whenever there is a serious question as to the proper line of action to pursue.

Now this is not a case which can possibly lead to anything like the complications of the arrears-of-pensions act. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] appeals to the apprehensions of this body. I ask him if he knows within his entire range of acquaintance, and that of course covers the whole country, ten cases of soldiers' children over sixteen years of age who under this precedent would be likely to call on the country for support.

I have heard of but two other cases for which this could possibly be made a precedent: one of these is a child of an Irish Catholic who gave his life for the country, and she has been an idiot from her birth. She is now twenty-eight years of age. Her case has passed the House and come to the Senate, and I do not believe he could be a man of a specially sympathetic nature who, after hearing the facts of that case and listening to the story as it comes from an old aunt who is taking care of that idiot girl by washing, by the hardest kind of personal labor, would refuse to extend the charity of the country, if you choose to call it that, to a case like that. There is one other case that has come to our knowledge during this session, and only one other, and I appeal to the knowledge of every Senator here covering this whole broad country if he knows half a dozen within his own personal knowledge?

Mr. PLATT. I know of half a dozen in my own city.

Mr. BLAIR. There are half a dozen in the Senator's own city. For God's sake let the country take care of that half dozen rather than the poor-house.

This girl is prostrate with disease of the spine; she is tending rapidly to death by consumption; she cannot be long a burden to the country under any circumstances, and she has not a dollar in the world or the capacity to earn one. Her father was the first colonel of Pennsylvania who gave his life to the country, and she has no resources.

The voice of the soldiers, which has been spoken of, has been heard in this specific case. The petitions of the Grand Army, of all the people in the vicinity where this girl lives, are on the files of the Pension Committee, entreating that this pension be granted. There is no question whatever of what the soldiers desire in this particular case. There is no special protest coming from the country, and if there were the country ought to assume the burden in the case of imbeciles, those who are helpless, those who have no other helper save God, and to whom we are called upon to pay something to eke out the existence of this class of dependents. It cannot add a thousand in the whole country to the pension-list, and the special advertisement which is given by this debate undoubtedly will pour upon us some applications which otherwise, however just, never would have reached us. But let them come.

Some allusion was made a while ago by Senators who opposed this bill in committee to the appropriation of millions in the river and harbor bill, and fault was found with members of the committee who like myself were in favor of the postponement of the act which was undertaken to be brought up this morning until next December. Is it for that class of men to deny this pittance to this specific case of distress? I take it not.

Without taking more time, for I realize how the session is passing away, I hope the Senate will not, by reason of its apprehensions, be prevented from doing this act of simple justice which no man as an individual in the Senate would fail to do if the appeal was made to him personally.

Mr. PLATT. I only want to say one word more. This matter is important enough to stop to discuss it. The law gave to these two children up to 1870, when they arrived at sixteen years of age, $30 a month. The pension stopped in 1870. Twelve years afterward this daughter, one of these children, demands $30 of this Government. My colleague has protested in the name of the soldiers against it. I want to protest in the name of the widows of deceased soldiers in this country against this as an act of injustice to them. All over this country are brave women who lost their husbands in the war, their sole support; property also went with them; they were left with young children upon their hands to support, and this country in its munificence gives them $8 a month. They struggle bravely and they do not besiege the Halls of Congress asking for any increase of that pension. I protest in their name against this act of injustice to them, however this single case may appeal to the sympathies of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS.) On the third reading of the bill the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HAWLEY. One single remark. I was not aware of the especially pitiful and lamentable circumstances of this particular case. I was speaking only upon the general principle, the beginning to pension the children of soldiers. In this case it is impossible for a man to avoid feeling the very deepest sympathy, and hoping and believing that that child will be taken care of as she ought to be. I spoke simply upon the cold proposition of giving pensions to children because their fathers were soldiers.

Mr. BLAIR. I agree entirely with the Senator upon the basis on which he placed his remarks. If I thought this dangerous in reference to the general pensioning of the children of soldiers, I would be as strongly opposed to this bill as any one.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if these circumstances change his views, whether he is now for or against the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I am against it.

Mr. LOGAN. I mean the other Senator from Connecticut. He says this appeals to him strongly. I ask him whether he is for or against the bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will answer when my name is called. I will take the mean time to consider and decide.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no right to ask the Senator, but I have sometimes seen bills opposed and then have seen them pass. If the sympathy is so strong that the bill is going to pass anyhow, I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate by talking about it. That was the reason I asked the question. I supposed from the speech the Senator made, and the vehemence of it, that he was opposed to the bill.

Mr. President, I am opposed to this bill, and I will give my reasons very briefly why I am opposed to it, and there is no amount of sympathy that can affect me so far as that question is concerned when it is a bad principle.

The children of Colonel Murray were pensioned in 1862 at $30 a month. That pension ran for eight years, until they drew from the Government $2,880.

Now after the children have arrived at the age of sixteen and over, they come in and ask for a repensioning. I do not know anything about this child and her condition should not affect the question, for when persons have been pensioned until they arrive at the age at which the law requires pensions to cease if the Government is going to continue the pensioning of them then the Government becomes a charitable institution for that class of people. We must have some definite time or period fixed in the law for the termination of pensions where they are given to the minor heirs of soldiers. This is fixed in the law. If you establish the precedent in one case you might as well open the book in every case of the kind. If you give a pension to one person who has passed the age of sixteen, you cannot refuse to give it to others.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know whether the Senator understands fully the facts in this case. This girl is as much an infant to-day as she was when two years old. The reason of the law I suppose to be that such persons need a pension for their support until sixteen. She needs it now quite as much as before. In the ordinary case of a healthy child that comes to maturity and is able to take care of himself, the pension may well cease, precisely as the law provides; but take the case of such a person being a lunatic or idiot at sixteen. That person must be taken care of. If it is charity to give this helpless girl a pension after she is sixteen years, it must have been charity to have given it to the children before; and does not the reason obtain just as much after the girl is sixteen as before she was sixteen?

Mr. LOGAN. That is a pretty long question.

Mr. BLAIR. Yes; but it raises the point for the Senator to consider.

Mr. LOGAN. I believe every State in this Union has some sort of charitable institutions for the deaf, the dumb, the blind, and the imbecile. If this girl has received a pension for eight years, amounting in all to herself and her brother to $2,880, and the time has expired during which she can receive any pension—

Mr. COCKRELL. It expired in 1870.

Mr. LOGAN. Twelve years have elapsed. How has she been taken care of for the last twelve years?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. By the charity of her neighbors.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well. Every State provides charitable institutions for such people. States like Pennsylvania or Illinois and all those large States that are wealthy have provided charitable institutions for this very class of people. For the Government now to commence making itself, after the pensions have expired, a charitable institution for the deaf, the dumb, the blind, the imbecile, I think is going a little too far. I will agree to pension any persons who are entitled to it, I do not care who they are or what their condition is, if they are entitled to it, but after the period expires for which they are entitled to the pension I do not believe it is right and proper for the Government to open the door any further for that purpose.

I am opposed to this on principle, not on account of the persons—I do not know anything about the persons, it is immaterial who the persons are—but if you pension this class of individuals, and we can find them in Illinois, in Ohio, in Indiana, and everywhere all over the country, you will flood us with claims of this very kind to be passing through Congress at every session for the purpose of putting them on the pension list to save—what? To save the States from exhibiting the charity they ought to those who belong to them, and that they themselves ought to take pride in extending to people of this kind after the Government has done its part in reference to them.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, but if this bill can be disposed of without any further discussion I will not make the motion.

THANKS TO THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask unanimous consent before the roll-call commences to offer a resolution, which I am sure will commend itself to the judgment of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of the Senator from Ohio will be read.

Mr. PENDLETON. I offer it now because the present occupant of the chair [Mr. HARRIS] is in the chair.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are due, and hereby are tendered, to Hon. DAVID DAVIS, President pro tempore of the Senate, for the uniformly able, courteous, and impartial manner in which he has presided over its deliberations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.
The resolution was agreed to unanimously.

RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. BLAIR. I offer a resolution from the head of one of the Departments in reference to an inquiry, which I ask to have passed now. It is a mere formal matter.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution adopted by the Senate June 8, 1882, relating to the adjustment of certain land grants be construed so as to allow the Secretary of the Interior to furnish the information therein asked for at his discretion, taking into account the other necessary work in the General Land Office.

MARY E. MURRAY.

Mr. HAWLEY. Before we pass away from the pension cases entirely I wish to put on record that I concur with the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.]

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to take up House bill No. 6692, a local matter to which there will be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Iowa that the yeas and nays have been ordered on the third reading of the bill called up by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.]

Mr. ALLISON. So I understood, but I saw other matters intervened and I thought I would intervene now.

Several SENATORS. Let us have a vote.

CANNON FOR MONUMENTAL PURPOSES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the matter suggested by the Senator from Iowa.

The Acting Secretary read the bill (H. R. No. 6692) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. MURRAY.

Mr. McMILLAN. I desire to ask leave for the consideration of a pension case in which an adverse report was made. I merely desire to have the reconsideration of it for the purpose of putting it upon the Calendar. It is the case of Laura C. P. Haskins.

Mr. BROWN. What has become of the calling of the yeas and nays in the case of Murray?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays were ordered, but by unanimous consent the Senate has taken up various other matters pending that question.

Mr. BROWN. I object to the consideration of anything else until that is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order being called for, the question is on the third reading of the Murray bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Before that motion is put I would like to withdraw this case and let it remain upon the Calendar until next session. Cannot that be done?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can only be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the Senator from Pennsylvania withdrawing the bill from consideration? The Chair hears none.

LAURA C. P. HASKINS.

Mr. McMILLAN. Now I submit my motion for a reconsideration of the vote by which the adverse report in the case of Laura C. P. Haskins for a pension was adopted, for the purpose of having it placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reconsideration? The Chair hears none. The vote is reconsidered, and the bill is placed upon the Calendar.

CANNON FOR MONUMENTAL PURPOSES.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are four or five bills donating cast-iron cannon, &c., for monumental purposes in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and other States. They have been reported by the committee favorably without amendment, and if they are now passed they will become laws. I suggest that they be taken up. ["No objection."]

Mr. WINDOM. When those bills are disposed of I shall insist on an executive session. The adjournment was postponed until three o'clock at my suggestion to allow time to act on certain treaties, and unless I insist on it we shall not reach them.

The bill (H. R. No. 6679) donating condemned cast-iron cannon to the town of Hatfield, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. No. 6149) donating condemned cast-iron cannon for monumental purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. No. 5978) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for the soldiers' cemetery at Knoxville, Tennessee, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. No. 6721) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to Edward Pye Post No. 179 of the Grand Army of the Republic, four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cannon-balls for decorating the proposed soldiers' monument at Haverstraw, New York, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. No. 6695) granting condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. No. 2154) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. No. 6718) to donate two condemned cast-iron cannon and twelve cannon-balls to the A. E. Burnside Post No. 109 of the Grand Army of the Republic, of South Chicago, Illinois, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GALLUS KIRCHNER.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask the Senator to allow me to call up and have passed a bill to refer a case to the Court of Claims.

Mr. WINDOM. I should be very glad to yield to the Senator, but I fear there is no time.

Mr. VOORHEES. It is a House bill reported unanimously by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WINDOM. I am appealed to on all sides, and I take the responsibility of insisting on my motion.

Mr. VOORHEES. This bill is simply giving permission to bring a suit in the Court of Claims. I shall esteem it a favor if the Senate will allow me to pass it.

Mr. WINDOM. Is there any adverse report upon it?

Mr. VOORHEES. No, sir.

Mr. WINDOM. If there is any discussion whatever I shall insist on my motion.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well. It is House bill No. 2013.

The bill (H. R. No. 2013) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Gallus Kirchner was read.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope there will be no objection to this bill. It is simply a bill to allow the claimant to go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. McMILLAN. That bill will have to be amended if it is referred to the Court of Claims.

Mr. VOORHEES. It has been reported without amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN. The claim itself was reported against by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VOORHEES. I cannot imagine what objection there can be to allowing a citizen to go into one of the courts of the country to have his rights inquired into.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not object.

Mr. WINDOM. I reserve my right to object if it gives rise to discussion.

Mr. VOORHEES. There is no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. There were two or three objections about me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair heard no objection, but the Chair will entertain an objection now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think we should consider such a bill at this period. The Senator from Indiana knows I have already made objection to cases called up on my side of the House, and I feel bound to do it in this case. I do not think we ought to waive the statute of limitations and waive all our defenses and then refer a case to the Court of Claims. Let this case come up at the beginning of the next session in regular order and I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio objects.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WINDOM. I renew my motion.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Minnesota to yield to a case of very great merit which stands upon the Calendar, a House bill granting a pension.

Mr. WINDOM. Is there an adverse report?

Mr. CALL. There is an adverse report.

Mr. WINDOM. Then it will give rise to discussion, and I shall insist on my motion.

Mr. CALL. If it gives rise to discussion I shall not insist on the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I understand there will be some discussion, therefore I must object and insist on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

An act (S. No. 670) to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of Fort Wayne, in the State of Indiana;

An act (S. No. 1787) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Saint Croix River, between the city of Calais, Maine, and Saint Stephen's, New Brunswick;

An act (S. No. 2164) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) providing one month's extra pay for certain employés of the Senate; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 108) to correct an error in the enrollment of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. RANSOM submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the usual number of copies of the evidence taken before the select committee on Potomac flats be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 2810) for the relief of Mary E. Thompson;

A bill (H. R. No. 3680) for the relief of John G. Taylor;

A bill (H. R. No. 5158) for the relief of James F. Cullen;

A bill (H. R. No. 5978) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for the soldiers' cemetery at Knoxville, Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 6149) donating condemned cast-iron cannon for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6679) donating condemned cast-iron cannon to the town of Hatfield, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6692) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6695) granting condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6702) to authorize the transfer of the property of the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home to the Garfield Memorial Hospital;

A bill (H. R. No. 6718) to donate two condemned cast-iron cannon and twelve cannon-balls to the A. E. Burnside Post No. 109 of the Grand Army of the Republic, of South Chicago, Illinois;

A bill (H. R. No. 6721) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to Edward Pye Post No. 179 of the Grand Army of the Republic, four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cannon-balls for decorating the proposed soldiers' monument at Haverstraw, New York; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 279) to provide for preparing the reports of contested-election cases in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and fifty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate to join the committee appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that unless he had some further communication to make to Congress the Senate and House were ready to adjourn have performed that duty, and have been informed by the President that he has no further communication to make.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent to pass the tax bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRIS. I did not hear the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He asks unanimous consent to pass the tax bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be reported.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The hour of three o'clock having arrived,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore said: Senators, after a long and a laborious session, in which the Senate has performed its part of the public duty faithfully, we are about to separate. My thanks are due to each and every member of the body for generous consideration and for friendly support in the chair. Wishing you all health and happiness, I now declare the Senate adjourned without day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 8, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK obtained the floor.

Mr. COX, of New York. At the request of my colleague, [Mr. HUTCHINS,] who is absent, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6754) for the relief of Elizabeth Fleming, Frances E. Robinson, and Mary and Margaret Johnston.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has been recognized.

Mr. MCCOOK. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and put on its passage the bill (S. No. 1821) prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. O'NEILL. Unless these recognitions by unanimous consent are to go around among a number of members I must object.

Mr. MCCOOK. This bill is for the benefit of some old crippled soldiers.

Mr. O'NEILL. I have a bill which is for the benefit of a crippled soldier.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move a recess for one hour. I will say that if there is unanimous consent to allow the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCOOK] to bring up his bill, because it pertains to a soldiers' home, I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. O'NEILL. Why should the gentleman yield for a bill of that kind, and not yield to allow me to bring up a bill for the benefit of a poor dying soldier, one who is dying on account of the neglect of Congress?

Mr. SCALES. I would like consent to bring up a bill to pay ante bellum contractors for mail service.

Mr. HISCOCK. I insist on my motion that the House take a recess for one hour.

Mr. ATKINS. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. HISCOCK,] before that motion is submitted, whether he can give this House any reliable intelligence as to the wishes and views of the Senate touching an adjournment sine die?

Mr. HISCOCK. Last evening I announced that I believed the resolution of the House, amended by the Senate, fixing an hour for final adjournment, would be here at eight o'clock. By the RECORD every member of the House will see that I had good reason for expressing that opinion. In my judgment now, we shall within an hour hear from the Senate in reference to the hour of final adjournment.

Mr. ATKINS. But the Senate adjourned last evening about six o'clock. Did it give the gentleman any notice of its design?

Mr. HISCOCK. It did not.

Mr. ATKINS. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations brought us back here at eight o'clock, to go home again.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Tennessee will recall the fact that the motion to fix a time for final adjournment was lost in the Senate by a tie vote; and it is announced that the vote of a distinguished Senator who was present and voted in the affirmative was not recorded.

Mr. ATKINS. As every one knows, there is no quorum here to do business. If we are to delay in this way from hour to hour, I for one prefer that we should adjourn for three days.

Mr. O'NEILL. If the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would devote a few minutes to criticising the remarks of Senator PLUMB upon the conduct of this House and its method of attending to the business of the Government, we might listen to him for ten or fifteen minutes with great satisfaction.

Mr. HISCOCK. So far as concerns those remarks of the distinguished Senator, I do not propose to make any reply to them whatever. The work of this House is certainly known to members of the House and to the country. On a previous occasion I reviewed it from my stand-point; and I have said all that I care to say upon that subject. I insist on my motion. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] that the House take a recess for one hour.

Mr. PEELE. I hope that the bill of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCOOK] may be read before objection is made to its consideration.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to say to the gentleman from Indiana that I have already announced if there was unanimous consent to taking up the Senate bill relating to the soldiers' home, I would not insist on my motion for a recess; but there has been a demand on both sides of the House for the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection. I now move, Mr. Speaker, that the House take a recess until twelve o'clock m.

Mr. MCCOOK. I ask by unanimous consent that the Senate bill which I ask may be considered and passed be read for the information of the House.

Mr. O'NEILL. I also ask that the bill for the relief of Mark Walker be read.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. If the bill which the gentleman from New York asks may be taken up and passed shall be read, I am sure all objection to it will be withdrawn.

Mr. McCOOK. It is a bill in reference to a soldiers' home, and so far as I know does not cost the Government a dollar.

Mr. McKENZIE. I object to any Senate bill.

Mr. O'NEILL. I appeal to the gentleman not to put his objection in that shape. We can pass Senate bills.

Mr. HAZELTON. I have a nice little House bill here to which I wish to call attention. [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK's motion was agreed to; and at eleven o'clock and fifteen minutes a. m. the House took a recess until twelve m.

The recess having expired, the House, at twelve o'clock m., resumed its session.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) providing one month's extra pay for certain employés of the Senate; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the passage of the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 6702) to authorize the transfer of the property of the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home to the Garfield Memorial Hospital;

A bill (H. R. No. 5153) for the relief of James F. Cullen; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2810) for the relief of Mary E. Thompson.

The message further announced concurrence in the resolution of the House for final adjournment, with an amendment striking out "twelve m. Saturday, August 5" and inserting "three p. m. Tuesday, August 8," in which concurrence was requested.

PUBLIC BUILDING, JEFFERSON CITY, MISSOURI.

Mr. RICE, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and put on its passage the bill (S. No. 889) for the erection of a public building at Jefferson City, in the State of Missouri.

Mr. O'NEILL. I should like to inquire whether unanimous consent will reach this side of the House?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary question.

Mr. O'NEILL. It may not be a parliamentary question, but it is information which I should like to have.

Mr. RICE, of Missouri. I ask for the reading of the bill which I ask be taken up.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. If this stood alone I would not feel justified in objecting; but as there is a large number of bills of the same class I am compelled to demand the regular order of business.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the resolution of the House relating to final adjournment which has been returned from the Senate with an amendment.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at twelve m. Saturday, August 5, 1882.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let the amendment of the Senate be read.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out "twelve m. Saturday, August 5," and insert "three p. m. Tuesday, August 8;" so it will read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at three p. m. Tuesday, August 8, 1882."

Mr. HISCOCK. I move concurrence in the Senate amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT ON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HISCOCK. I submit the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three members of the House, to join a similar committee of the Senate, be appointed to wait on the President of the United States to inform him that the two Houses of Congress are ready to adjourn if he has no further communication to make to them.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Speaker appointed under the resolution just adopted Mr. HISCOCK, Mr. CARPENTER, and Mr. ATKINS.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield now to the gentleman from Kansas to offer a resolution in reference to one of the employés of the House, as I understand it is necessary to his work.

Mr. RYAN. I did intend to offer a resolution.

Mr. EVINS. I ask to be recognized.

Mr. McKENZIE. So do I.

Mr. O'NEILL. And so do I.

Mr. RYAN. I do not desire recognition.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I move the House take a recess until fifteen minutes before three o'clock p. m.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from New York will yield to me to introduce a very important resolution with reference to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. EVINS. I would like to know what authority the gentleman from New York has for yielding the floor.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] is desirous of calling the attention of the House to an error in one of the bills that has been passed, and I yield to him for the purpose of presenting a resolution with the view of correcting it. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. EVINS. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EVINS. I desire to know how the gentleman from New York has the floor to yield to anybody?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York had the floor to make the motion for a recess or any other proper motion of that kind.

Mr. EVINS. But I do not see by what authority he can yield the floor in this manner. Now, I simply want the House to allow me to take up a bill under the authority given by the rules to move a suspension of the rules at this time in the session, and let it go over as unfinished business until the beginning of the next session.

Mr. McKENZIE. And I want the same privilege.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to that.

Mr. EVINS. I have the right to make the motion under the rules of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. And I have the right to object. I move that the House take a recess until fifteen minutes before three o'clock.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But the gentleman from South Carolina has made a motion to suspend the rules, which motion is in order at this time.

Mr. HISCOCK. Not pending the motion for a recess.

Mr. McKENZIE. And I make a similar motion.

Mr. EVINS. The gentleman from New York has yielded the floor to others, and I hope he will yield to allow me this privilege.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not yield.

COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from New York will permit me to introduce the resolution at this time to which I have referred. It is important that it should be acted upon now. It has reference simply to the duties of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois to introduce this resolution, as I understand it relates to a matter of privilege in reference to the business of the House, and I am therefore willing to yield for the consideration of such a resolution as that, but no other.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a resolution to authorize the Committee on Printing to sit during the recess.

Mr. McKENZIE. I have just as important a measure which I have been seeking consent to get before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me state that this Committee on Printing is a joint committee, and the House committee act in connection with the Senate committee. A great deal of the public printing is done under the direction of this joint committee, and it is usual to adopt a resolution similar to that which I now offer.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think the House should consent to this resolution, as this committee supervises the contracts for the purchase of a great deal of the material for the Printing Office, and it is important that they should have this power in order to make these contracts in time to be available.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing have leave to sit during the ensuing vacation; but no additional expense shall be incurred on account of any meeting held during such time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know but that this resolution is proper enough as far as it goes, but it seems to me it should go further and provide that the committee report some plan to dispense with much of the unnecessary printing that is now being done.

Mr. SPRINGER. We have a resolution of that sort prepared, and I will introduce it to-day if gentlemen will allow me that privilege.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am satisfied that this item of printing can be reduced at least one-half. We print an immense number of rubbish at great cost that is of no possible value to any person except the dealers in old paper.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am heartily in accord with the gentleman, and have a resolution which I will offer if opportunity presents itself.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution just read.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING AND DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now ask consent to offer the following resolution for present consideration.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I reserve the right to object. There is too much of this thing.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Librarian of Congress, the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and the superintendent of documents, Department of the Interior, be, and they are hereby, requested to compile the laws and regulations now in force governing the printing and distribution of public documents; to prepare a tabulated statement showing the number of documents printed by order of the Forty-sixth and the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, and, under general laws now in force, the distribution directed to be made of the same; to report what reduction should be made in the number of such documents and present such other information at their command relating to public documents as will tend to promote judicious legislation, and submit the draft of a bill to provide for the printing and distribution of documents; and they shall report to the House at the beginning of the next session.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that this resolution be passed, as it will cost nothing whatever. These gentlemen are already in the employ of the Government, and they will be able to furnish much valuable information upon a very important subject. This information if received, as I believe it will be from them, will enable us to know the exact number of documents published by authority of law, their distribution, and the cost of the same. I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX, of New York, and Mr. HOLMAN demanded the regular order.

Mr. HERR. I now ask the consideration of the House for a measure to which I believe there will be no objection. I move to suspend the rules and—

Mr. COX, of New York. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from New York, that the House take a recess until fifteen minutes before three o'clock this day.

Mr. SMALLS. Pending that I ask to take up a Senate bill for a poor soldier. It is on the Speaker's table now, and is for the relief of George Foster, a soldier who lost both legs.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I have a bill here for a soldier who lost both arms—

Mr. COX, of New York. I have three widows— [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] to call up a Senate bill for the benefit of a soldier who has lost both eyes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.]

The question being taken, there were—ayes 53, noes 14.

So the motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at twelve o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 2.45 p. m.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 2.45 p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that Mr. ANTHONY and Mr. BAYARD had been appointed a committee on the part of the Senate to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses of Congress are ready to adjourn.

The message further announced that Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia had been appointed members on the part of the Senate of the joint select committee under the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, providing for a joint select committee to make an examination of and set apart portions of the State, War, and Navy building for the use and occupancy of the State, War, and Navy Departments respectively.

The message further announced that Mr. MILLER of New York, Mr. CONGER, and Mr. VEST had been appointed members on the part of the Senate of the joint select committee under the joint resolution providing for a joint select committee to inquire into the condition and wants of American ship-building and ship-owning interests.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 729) for the relief of Charles H. Tompkins of the United States Navy;

A bill (S. No. 2150) to provide for extra work in the Government Printing Office in cases of emergency; and

A bill (S. No. 2154) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 6695) granting condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6721) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to Edward Pye Post No. 179 of the Grand Army of the Republic four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cannon-balls for decorating the proposed soldiers' monument at Haverstraw, New York;

A bill (H. R. No. 5978) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for the soldiers' cemetery at Knoxville, Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 6718) to donate two condemned cast-iron cannon and twelve cannon-balls to the A. E. Burnside Post No. 109 of the Grand Army of the Republic, of South Chicago, Illinois;

A bill (H. R. No. 6679) donating condemned cast-iron cannon to the town of Hatfield, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6692) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6149) donating condemned cannon for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 3680) for the relief of John G. Taylor; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 279) to provide for preparing the reports of contested-election cases in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 2810) for the relief of Mary E. Thomson;

A bill (H. R. No. 5158) for the relief of James F. Cullen;

A bill (H. R. No. 6702) to authorize the transfer of the property of the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home to the Garfield Memorial Hospital;

A bill (H. R. No. 6695) granting condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6721) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to Edward Pye Post No. 179 of the Grand Army of the Republic four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cannon-balls, for decorating the proposed soldiers' monument at Haverstraw, New York;

A bill (H. R. No. 5978) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for the soldiers' cemetery at Knoxville, Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 6718) to donate two condemned cast-iron cannon and twelve cannon-balls to the A. E. Burnside Post No. 109 of the Grand Army of the Republic, of South Chicago, Illinois;

A bill (H. R. No. 6679) donating condemned cast-iron cannon to the town of Hatfield, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6692) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6149) donating condemned cannon for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 3680) for the relief of John G. Taylor; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 279) to provide for preparing the reports of contested-election cases in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. PAGE of California, Mr. CANDLER of Massachusetts, Mr. ROBESON of New Jersey, Mr. DINGLEY of Maine, Mr. McLANE of Maryland, and Mr. COX of New York as members on the part of the House of the joint select committee to inquire into the condition and wants of American ship-building and ship-owning interests, as provided for in the joint resolution of Congress, approved August 7, 1882.

NOTIFICATION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HISCOCK. The committee appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to wait on the President and inform him that unless he had some further communication to make the two Houses of Congress had finished the business before them and were ready to adjourn have performed that duty, and now report that the President has no further communication to make to Congress.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HERR. I desire to move to suspend the rules and pass a bill to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883."

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it is too near the end of the session to legislate any further.

Mr. HERR. I explained this bill on a former occasion, so that gentlemen understand perfectly that it is simply for the correction of a mistake.

Mr. PAGE. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883," be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following section:

"Sec. 2. Such portions of the money appropriated by this act for any particular improvement requiring locks and dams as may be necessary in the prosecution of such improvement may be expended in the purchase, voluntary or by condemnation, as the case may be, of necessary sites: Provided, That such expenditure shall be under the direction of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That if the owners of such lands shall refuse to sell them at reasonable prices, then the prices to be paid shall, except in such case or cases as may have been otherwise specially provided for by this act, be determined and the title and jurisdiction procured in the manner prescribed by the laws of the State in which such lands or sites are situated.

Mr. MCCOOK. Does that come from any committee of this House?

Mr. HERR. Yes; from the Committee on Commerce. The bill is correct, and is precisely the language contained in bills for rivers and harbors heretofore passed, but this provision was left out of the last bill. It is simply to supply that omission.

Mr. MCCOOK. Do you move to suspend the rules and pass the bill?

Mr. HERR. I do.

Mr. MCCOOK. The yeas and nays will be ordered on that motion.

Mr. HERR. No, they will not.

Mr. HUBBELL. Is this bill reported from the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. HERR. It is.

Mr. PAGE. I was informed to-day by General Wright, of the Engineer Corps, that this bill was absolutely necessary, or some work provided for in the river and harbor bill cannot be done.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is this the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. PAGE. It is.

Mr. HOUSE. There is no quorum here.

Mr. PAGE. I hope unanimous consent will be given for the passage of the bill.

Mr. HERR. It does not take a dollar out of the Treasury.

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill; and upon a division, there were—ayes 52, noes 12.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to make it.

Mr. PAGE. He has the right to make it, but I hope he will not insist upon it.

The SPEAKER. He makes the point. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] insist upon his motion?

Mr. PAGE. I want to say that this bill applies to only one river in the United States, and that is a river in Kentucky. If the money that Congress has appropriated to carry on the improvement of that river is to be expended it is important that this bill shall pass. I was so informed this morning by the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have two objections to withdrawing my point of order. The first is that there is no quorum here, and I am opposed to legislating without a quorum. Second, I think we have had sufficient legislation on this subject for one session.

Mr. HERR. I withdraw my motion.

DESKS FOR COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. ERRETT. At the request of members of the Committee on Ways and Means I submit the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to purchase for the use of the Committee on Ways and Means thirteen table desks, to take the place of the long desk now in use in the room of that committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And some works on the tariff, to enlighten the members of that committee.

The question was taken on adopting the resolution; and on a division there were—ayes 30, noes 28.

Mr. HAZELTON. No quorum has voted.

Mr. ERRETT. If that point is insisted upon I withdraw the resolution.

CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION OF 1876.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is deposited with the Clerk of the House a large box containing reports of the boards on behalf of the Executive Departments of the United States at the centennial exhibition at Philadelphia in 1876. Among them are a large number of photographs illustrative of the articles exhibited there on behalf of the Government. In response to a petition sent to the Committee on Printing by one of those boards, that these documents should be sent to the Smithsonian Institution for safe-keeping, and also that Professor Baird be requested to report upon which of them are valuable for publication, I submit the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to transmit to the Director of the Smithsonian Institution the reports of the boards on behalf of the United States Executive Departments as represented at the international exhibition at Philadelphia in 1876, for preservation in the National Museum; and that Professor Spencer F. Baird be requested to report to the House of Representatives as to the propriety and cost of the publication of said reports and accompanying illustrations.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. At the request of many members, I ask unanimous consent to pass a bill.

Mr. HAZELTON. There is not time for that.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, there is. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would entertain the motion if there was time.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The hour of three o'clock p. m. having arrived,

The SPEAKER said: This House is about to terminate its first session. It has been an important one to the country. With thanks for generous and kind treatment on the part of the House, and with my best wishes for all its members, regardless of party, I now, as authorized and required by the concurrent resolution of the Senate and of the House, declare this House adjourned without day.
